Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, April 17, 1926, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, April 16, 1926

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord our Lord, Thou art still with us in love and mercy, giv'ing us life with its manifold blessings. Vouchsafe us this day wisdom, peace, and contentment. Use us to promote sunshine and gladness in human hearts and homes. Mercifully keep us from any act which would deprive our country of any advancement in prosperity or good will toward all men. In no way may we condemn ourselves, but encourage us to walk calmly in the path of duty. We thank Thee for the years with their olden golden memories, so good and sweet. May the twilight of our evening time still find us gentle, faithful, and true; still working, hoping, and praying—waiting for the burden to fall and the light to break on the stairway that leads through the darkness to the Father's house. Through Christ our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, it is apparent that for to-day the order made for the consideration of the Private Calendar is not going to net us much in the way of the consideration of private bills. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the order for to-day in regard to the Private Calendar be made the order for to-morrow, Saturday.

The SPEAKER. May the Chair call attention to the fact that under the order of the House the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. AYRES] has been given the privilege of addressing the House immediately after the reading of the Journal? Will the gentleman's request precede that?

Mr. TILSON. That request was contingent upon our being in session to-morrow, as I recall, and therefore if this order is made the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. AYRES] will have time immediately preceding the order for which I have asked.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that on to-morrow, at the end of the speech of the gentleman from Kansas, it shall be in order to consider, in the House as in Committee of the Whole, bills upon the Private Calendar unobjected to. Is there objection?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman why he does not think it will net us very much on the Private Calendar if we proceed to-day?

Mr. TILSON. Because the business to be considered seems to be of such a character that it will not be finished before the end of the day. The roads bill will require practically all day and then we shall have the bankruptcy bill. These two bills will surely take all of the day.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does not the gentleman think that bills on the Private Calendar are of some importance also?

Mr. TILSON. I do; and that is the reason I ask that we have all day to-morrow to consider them.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman from Connecticut yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Private Calendar seems to be quite long and quite crowded. Has the majority leader given any consideration to the idea of having a night session some time so that we may consider bills on that calendar?

Mr. TILSON. Yes; that may be necessary a little later on, but at the present time it seems to me it should not be done. I believe that the membership of the House would generally prefer to sit on Saturday rather than to sit here late Friday night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 10198. An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 3624. An act for the relief of Hannah Parker.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following order:

Ordered, That the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1226) to amend the trading with the enemy act be recommitted to the committee of conference.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 6730. An act to detach Fulton County from the Jonesboro division of the eastern judicial district of the State of Arkansas and attach the same to the Batesville division of the eastern judicial district of said State;

H. R. 9398. An act to amend an act regulating the height of buildings in the District of Columbia, approved June 1, 1910.

H. R. 7455. An act to legalize the submarine cable laid in the St. Louis River at the Spirit Lake Transfer Railway drawbridge, between New Duluth, Minn., and Oliver, Wis., and used for the lighting of the village of Oliver, Wis.

COMMISSIONER FREDERICK A. FENNING

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I have a letter from Mr. Fenning, one of the District Commissioners, asking me to ask the consent of the House to insert in the Record an answer which he wishes to make to the statements made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] a week or more ago. I know nothing at all about the merits of the statement which Mr. Fenning asked me to insert in the Record, except he says it is a reply to the various statements made by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. It occurs to me that the gentleman ought not to ask that at this time, in view of the fact that the gentleman says he does not know what is in the statement. It seems to me some one ought to go over it and find out what is in it.

Mr. MADDEN. I have gone over it. What I meant to imply was that I know nothing about the accuracy of the statements Mr. Fenning makes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I understand the gentleman will be responsible for the statement and that there is nothing in the statement which is in violation of the rules of the House?

Mr. MADDEN. There is nothing in the statement that is in violation of the rules of the House.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we are holding hearings now, or attempting to hold hearings, in the Veterans' Committee touching this alleged misconduct with reference to the guardianship of these disabled veterans. Now, why could not Mr. Fenning come before that committee and make his statement there, so that the members of the committee could cross-examine him as to these charges of mis-handling the funds of these disabled veterans?

Mr. MADDEN. I think it is quite likely that Mr. Fenning would be willing to appear before that committee if he is permitted to do so, but at the same time I think he ought to be allowed to make a reply to the statements made by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RANKIN. I will say to the gentleman that this is an unusual procedure?

Mr. MADDEN. No; it is very usual.

Mr. RANKIN. I would like to know whether the gentleman has submitted the statement to the minority leader or any others on the minority side?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I have not. But let me say to the gentleman that this is not an unusual procedure.

Mr. RANKIN. Owing to the fact that we have had a great deal of difficulty on this proposition, and it looks as though we were going to have more, because we were unable to get a quorum before the Veterans' Committee this morning to go into this matter—

Mr. MADDEN. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. RANKIN. I would like for the gentleman to withhold his request until he can submit it to some Members on the minority side who are interested in this investigation.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the gentleman ought not to ask that.

Mr. BLANTON and Mr. BROWNING rose.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman let me interrupt him?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. That statement of Fenning's contains how many pages?

Mr. MADDEN. I should say about 20 pages.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is permitting a man charged with high crimes and misdemeanors to sit down in his office and deliberately prepare his own defense without any cross-examination, when several Members of Congress may have facts that would show the absolute unreasonableness of every statement he makes.

Mr. MADDEN. There will not be any objection to the gentleman showing that.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall not object to Mr. Fenning's statement going in the RECORD. Will the gentleman permit me to have time next Monday to answer this statement?

Mr. SNELL. Has not the gentleman had time already to make out his case?

Mr. BLANTON. I have not been able, apparently, to convince the chairman of the Rules Committee, but I have convinced many Members and the country, and I can convince the gentleman if I am given the opportunity.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I shall object.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman reserve his objection a moment?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I hope the gentleman from Texas will not object.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I will reserve it.

Mr. MADDEN. I have no objection to the gentleman from Texas replying to the statement.

Mr. BLANTON. With that statement, I do not object to its going into the RECORD.

Mr. MADDEN. I am only asking this as a matter of fair treatment.

Mr. McSWAIN. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to make this statement. It is evident that this gentleman, Mr. Fenning, is going to be summoned before the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation or perhaps another committee of the House. My experience in cross-examining witnesses is that the more written statements I can get from them whereby they have already committed themselves, the greater advantage it is to me in my cross-examination, and I would like to have everything Mr. Fenning has written if I were going to undertake to cross-examine him.

Mr. MADDEN. That is one reason why I think the statement should go in the RECORD.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman is undoubtedly unfamiliar with the situation. Unless we make more progress than we have been able to make so far, we will not be able to get him before the Veterans' Committee.

Mr. McSWAIN. You do not think you can get a majority of your committee to have him appear before it?

Mr. RANKIN. No; we were unable to get a quorum to come to the meeting this morning.

Mr. McSWAIN. This will not keep him from coming. Let us see what he says, and maybe we can then dig under him better.

Mr. MADDEN. I think that is one reason the statement should go in the RECORD.

Mr. RANKIN. But do not let him dig under first.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. There seems to be an effort being made to condone this human vulture, and I am not in favor of it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I do not object—but I do wish to make this statement at this time. I think the charges that have been made here with regard to this commissioner and the evidence that has been submitted in the form of affidavits, sworn testimony, are sufficient not only to justify but to imperatively demand an investigation by some committee of this House, either a special committee or one of the standing committees, which shall be clothed with full authority to send for persons and for papers and to administer oaths and get the complete record of the commissioner, which will either condemn or vindicate him.

This is not a matter that can be settled by the mere insertion in the RECORD of the statement which the gentleman has, no matter what it may contain. I do not object. I am perfectly willing the gentleman from Illinois should put the statement in the RECORD, but I wanted to express that view now. It is a matter in which I have no interest on earth.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I want the gentleman from Tennessee to understand I am not trying to cover up anything Mr. Fenning has done.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understand that.

Mr. MADDEN. I am not defending him.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I know perfectly well the gentleman from Illinois is incapable of attempting any such thing.

Mr. MADDEN. I am in thorough accord with what the gentleman has said, and I think that everything in connection with this matter should be investigated and the evidence adduced here.

Mr. BULWINKLE, Mr. TINCHER, and Mr. LOZIER rose.

Mr. LOZIER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have a reservation pending.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Texas will withdraw his objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. The gentleman from Texas is not going to do it.

Mr. LOZIER. I have an open mind in this matter, but I think it is due the Members of this House that this request be granted. The House does not sacrifice or surrender any of its rights by granting this permission. It is a reasonable request, and I hope the gentleman from Texas will withdraw his objection.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish to say to the gentleman that I do not commit myself to any defense of anything Mr. Fenning may have done.

Mr. BULWINKLE. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit, I wish to state in answer to the gentleman from Tennessee that yesterday a resolution was passed by the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation instructing the chairman of the committee to prepare and urge for passage a resolution having for its object a full, complete, and sweeping investigation of all guardianship matters not only in the District of Columbia, but in the United States as well, with power in the committee to act.

Mr. MADDEN. I think that is a good thing to do, and I am in thorough accord with it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, in view of all the statements that have been made here and all that has been published in the newspapers, this man, instead of being contented with filing a statement to be printed in the RECORD of this House, should in honor and in justice to himself be knocking at the door of some committee of this House asking and demanding for admission to be cross-examined and to make a full sworn statement in his own behalf, and therefore I shall object to this mode of procedure. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR PENSION BILL

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 8132 and agree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 8132 and agree to the Senate amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Is that the Spanish-American War pension bill?

Mr. KNUTSON. It is.

The Clerk read the title to the bill, as follows:

H. R. 8132. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the war with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, or the China relief expedition, to certain maimed soldiers, to certain widows, minor children, and helpless children of such soldiers and sailors, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

THE MILLS BILL

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, if the program said to be authorized by the administration is to be followed, within a short time, a week or 10 days, you will be called upon to vote on the most important piece of legislation outside of the tax bill that will come before this Congress. It is the most stupendous steal that has ever been suggested in the history of America. I want to suggest to the membership that it examine the hearings in order that you may be informed in reference to the bill, H. R. 10820, the Mills bill. It has four major provisions. One is to return all of the alien property now in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian to the German nationals. The second is to pay the mixed claims, and the third is to pay the German nationals for damages that occurred by reason of our taking their property, and the fourth is for an issue of $250,000,000 in bonds to meet the indebtedness.

It will be nearly impossible in debate on the floor of the House to explain the details of the four propositions, and the hearings reflect that fairly well. I want to suggest that you get a copy of the hearings and at least give consideration to sections 3 and 4, which fully explain the $190,000,000 that the American people will have to pay and to whom they will have to pay it.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Texas is very premature in the statement that he is making to the House. I do not see in the room at the moment the acting chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, or I should not take the floor to answer the gentleman. So far as I know—I was not a member of the subcommittee—so far as I know, the Ways and Means Committee has not acted on the bill with the view to reporting it. To my knowledge the bill has not come before the Ways and Means Committee for a vote. Therefore the gentleman from Texas is very premature in saying that it will be on the floor of the House within a week.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for me to correct him; he does not want to make a misstatement. The gentleman left his vote in the committee with the chairman, did he not?

Mr. TREADWAY. When?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yesterday.

Mr. TREADWAY. I did.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. And the gentleman is recorded three times on that identical bill on yesterday morning. Also the first provision in the bill was completed.

Mr. TREADWAY. I left my vote with the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HADLEY], but no vote was taken on the bill. Simply one section was considered.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes; somebody had it and cast the vote.

Mr. TREADWAY. I was called to another committee meeting at the time, and I asked the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HADLEY] to vote for me. In conference with that gentleman since the gentleman from Texas took the floor just now, the gentleman from Washington agrees with me that the Ways and Means Committee has not voted to report out that bill.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I did not say they had voted to report it, but it has considered the bill and completed the first section of it.

Mr. TREADWAY. When the gentleman says the bill will come before the House within a week's time, he is a prophet, and a false one.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I know that President Coolidge is very much interested in it, according to the testimony before the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman knows a whole lot about Republican affairs, but I think we also are entitled to have something to say about it.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The record shows that the President is very much interested in it.

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; and the record will show that the Ways and Means Committee has not decided to report the bill.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HOWARD. I want to speak a minute myself. I want to ask unanimous consent that the business of the House may now proceed in an orderly manner. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered. [Laughter.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 8830) entitled "An act amending the act entitled 'An act providing for a comprehensive development of the park and playground system of the National Capital,' approved June 6, 1924, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CAPPER, Mr. JONES of Washington, and Mr. KING as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had further insisted upon its amendments numbered 1 and 5 to the bill (H. R. 9341) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and had asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. SMOOT, and Mr. OVERMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

GENERAL ANDREWS AND BEER

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk to have read a brief statement by General Andrews on a subject of interest to the House.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

STATEMENT FOR THE PRESS

APRIL 15, 1926.

The hypothetical question put to me yesterday before the Senate committee was: "If nonintoxicating cereal beverages or beer could be distributed under Government supervision for home consumption and in bona fide hotels to be taken with meals would this probably aid law enforcement?" I answered "Yes."

I am not advocating any change in this law. On the contrary, we have recently perfected plans and are seeking additional authority and funds from Congress to put them into effect, which we confidently believe will enable us to wipe out the beer traffic this season.

It is my task to enforce the law as written, and to that end I am giving my sole attention.

L. C. ANDREWS, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to enter into a discussion of this at this time any more than to make this observation. From my contact with General Andrews and the study of his work I am satisfied that he has a great capacity for the work that he is engaged in and a very thorough determination and desire for its success. The greatest need is that Congress should give him the authority and the funds that he has requested. I am satisfied, if this is done, that the work of enforcement which has so greatly improved under his leadership up to this time will improve further.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have the Clerk read the telegram which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

GREENVILLE, S. C., April 16, 1926.

SOUTH CAROLINA CONGRESSMEN,

Washington, D. C.:

Our people stand solid for prohibition. Do all possible for it.

T. W. BOYLE.

FEDERAL AID IN CONSTRUCTION OF ROADS

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9504) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9504, with Mr. TINCHER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman and Members of the House, the subject of "good roads" has become of great importance to the people of the country. In the early days the people in a neighborhood built and maintained their own roads. The automobile, however, has completely changed the method of travel and the use of the highways, and has entirely revised the method of road building. The roads, heretofore of only local use and importance, have now become a part of a great system of national highways.

Some years ago Congress took up the subject of a national highway system, and since that time there has been a vast improvement in the construction and use of the highways. In 1912 a joint committee was appointed, composed of Members of the Senate and Members of the House of Representatives, to investigate and report on the subject of what part, if any, the Federal Government should take in the construction of roads. This committee made a careful investigation of the subject, and reported its findings to the House and Senate in 1915. As a result of this investigation and report Congress enacted legislation providing for Federal aid in the construction of highways.

The first legislation was enacted and approved July 11, 1916. This legislation provided for a five-year program and provided for an appropriation of $75,000,000. Five million dollars became available the first year; $10,000,000 became available the second year; $15,000,000 became available the third year; $20,000,000 became available the fourth year; and $25,000,000 became available the fifth year.

The next legislation was passed in February of 1919 and carried an appropriation of $200,000,000, covering a period of three years. The first $50,000,000 became available immediately; $75,000,000 became available for the fiscal year ending in 1920; and $75,000,000 was available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921. Up to this time the action of the Government in aiding the States in the construction of roads was largely experimental.

In 1921, after a careful investigation and consideration of the whole subject, legislation was enacted providing for a comprehensive program of Federal aid in the construction of highways. This legislation provided for a program of road construction throughout the entire Nation, embracing 7 per cent of the roads in each State, and this 7 per cent aggregates approximately 200,000 miles of primary and secondary roads. This act established for the first time a definite governmental policy and program for cooperation with the several States in the construction and maintenance of a national highway system. Seventy-five million dollars was authorized for this work in the first year.

In 1922, following the general program outlined, Congress authorized the expenditure of $50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923; $65,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924; and $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925.

In 1925 Congress authorized the expenditure of $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926, and $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927. The present bill provides for an authorization for the fiscal years ending in 1928 and 1929. Briefly, this is a review of all of the moneys authorized and appropriated by the Government for Federal aid in the construction of good roads under the highway act.

Under the present law the Federal Government apportions these appropriations to the several States, and these funds are used in the construction of roads approved by the Secretary of Agriculture. Federal participation can not under the law exceed 50 per cent of the cost of construction of the roads or exceed $15,000 per mile.

The method for the distribution of Federal aid funds to the several States is on the basis of one-third according to the ratio which the area of each State bears to the total area of all the States; one-third in the ratio which the population of each State bears to the total population of all the States; and one-third in the ratio which the mileage of rural delivery routes and star routes in each State bears to the total mileage of rural delivery routes and star routes in all the States. You will, of course, observe that this will slightly change the amount annually that each State will receive by the varying changes in population and mileage of rural delivery and star routes.

Under this law the highways to receive Federal aid are constructed by the several States through their State highway departments, but the law empowers the Secretary of Agriculture to withhold Federal aid on any given project if it does not come up to the proper standards in compliance with the regulations of the department and if it does not in the same respect comply with the general system or policy of highway construction as provided in the act of 1921.

When the highway has been constructed with Federal-aid funds it then becomes the duty of the State in which it is located to maintain the highway in a proper manner, and if the State fails to so maintain any highway constructed with the aid of Federal funds, the Secretary of Agriculture may maintain such highway out of Federal-aid funds allotted to that State or may withhold any Federal aid to that State until the highway has been placed in a proper condition.

On the 1st of July, 1925, under the Federal-aid highway system, totaling approximately 200,000 miles of roads, 25,550 miles of this system was improved with a high-type surface, consisting of concrete and brick; 16,800 miles was surfaced with a medium type of surface, consisting of water-bound macadam and bituminous macadam; 49,450 miles of low-type roads, consisting of gravel and sand-clay had been constructed; and 30,000 miles had been only graded and drained. This leaves approximately 79,000 miles of the 7 per cent system of the highway program unimproved and untouched.

It is obvious that unless this program is followed up and Federal aid for the improvement of these roads is continued, the entire program built up in the last decade by this very satisfactory cooperation of the Federal Government with the highway departments of the several States will be greatly retarded and road construction will be given a terrific blow.

While road construction was going on in the several States, it was not until the Federal Government entered into cooperation with the States that a complete and adequate system of road building was adopted, and when the 7 per cent system or program is completed almost every section and part of the United States will be accessible to motor vehicles on an improved highway.

WHY SHOULD THE GOVERNMENT AID IN THE CONSTRUCTION OF ROADS?

There are more than 3,000,000 miles of roads in the United States. The Post Office Department is daily using 1,205,500 miles of highway in the delivery and collection of the United States mails. Many miles of these roads are practically impassable at certain seasons of the year, and they are used at great cost and inconvenience. The improvement of these roads will greatly increase the length of the mail routes, will greatly improve the efficiency of the mail service, and will greatly decrease the cost of the Government. Thirty million sixty thousand eight hundred and sixteen individuals or rural-delivery patrons are served along this mileage, and many millions more will be added to this number as the service can be extended.

It is interesting to note that five years ago 43 per cent of the rural carriers were using horse-drawn vehicles upon their routes, while to-day but 15 per cent are using horses. Also the time involved in the delivery of rural mails has been reduced one-half. But even under the present program the Government is only aiding in the improvement of approximately 200,000 miles of this more than 1,000,000 miles of rural-mail mileage.

Also the Federal-aid highway system, as approved by Congress in the act of 1921, under which we are now operating, includes all of the highways—more than 53,000 miles—which the War Department, after a careful survey, consider as necessary for our national defense.

Recognizing the importance and benefits of highway improvement and highway transportation, both of the great political parties, at their national conventions in 1924, gave utterance to their views in the following language:

THE REPUBLICAN PLATFORM

The Federal aid road act adopted by the Republican Congress in 1921 has been of inestimable value in the development of the highway systems of the several States and of the Nation. We pledge a continuation of the policy of Federal cooperation with the States in highway building.

THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM

Improved roads are of vital importance not only to commerce and industry but also to agriculture and rural life. We call attention to the record of the Democratic Party in this matter, and favor a continuance of Federal aid under existing Federal and State agencies.

Referring to this subject President Coolidge, in his message to Congress on December 6, 1923, used the following language:

Highways and reforestation should continue to have the interest and support of the Government. No expenditure of public money contributes so much to the national wealth as for building good roads.

The free use of the highways in the past few years has furnished wonderful educational and recreational opportunities to the people of our Nation, and the demand for the use of the highways is increasing day by day for this purpose. A statement was made before the Committee on Roads just recently that during the past summer 12,000,000 people used the highways for education and recreation, and expended over $2,000,000,000 in such purpose.

The importance of a complete system of Federal highways throughout the Nation can not be estimated in its benefits to the people of the country, in convenience, in recreation, in education, and in financial value.

When the present Federal-aid highway system was approved by Congress in 1921, it was the hope of Congress in this legislation to improve the highway from the farms to the markets, and thus aid in facilitating the marketing of farm products. Much has been accomplished along this line, as shown by the testimony in the hearings before the committee on this phase of the subject. Highway improvements are not only bringing this about but the evidence shows that better highway facilities are bringing the producer and consumer more closely together, to the great advantage and profit of both.

The improvement of the motor car has made highway improvement a necessity, and the vast expanse of the automobile trade and traffic has necessitated a nation-wide system of highways, and this can only be carried on in a system in which the Federal Government has a part.

The development of the automobile and of the automobile traffic, hence the necessity for greater and more extensive highway improvements, has progressed in the past few years beyond the most exaggerated dream of the enthusiast.

In 1895, just at the beginning of the automobile industry, there were but 300 automobiles in the United States. In 1900, five years later, only 14,000 automobiles had been manufactured. In 1910, 10 years later, the automobile registration had grown to a half million. In 1920, 10 years later, the number of automobiles had increased and approximately 9,000,000 cars were being used throughout the United States. In 1925, five years later, the automobile industry had made an enormous growth; the automobiles on the streets and highways almost doubled, and we had nearly 18,000,000 motor vehicles on the streets and highways. To-day it is estimated that approximately 20,000,000 motor vehicles are on the streets and highways of the United States, and the estimates indicate that these increases will continue in the future—no one knows where.

It is apparent to everyone who has given the subject serious consideration that with 20,000,000 motor vehicles in service and in operation throughout the country it is clear that a nation-wide system of highway construction is a necessity in the United States. And this necessity will grow day by day and year by year as these motor vehicles increase in number, in importance, and in value.

The telephone service has been in operation for a half century and has become a necessity in almost every household, yet we are told that there are to-day more motor vehicles in the United States than there are telephones.

In the testimony before the Committee on Roads some time ago the evidence disclosed that interesting experiments have been made to ascertain approximately the operating cost of motor vehicles over various kinds and types of roads, including dirt, gravel, and hard-surfaced roads.

This investigation discloses that on an ordinary dirt road we get approximately 14 ton-miles of traffic per gallon of gasoline. On gravel roads we get approximately 21 ton-miles per gallon of gasoline, and on hard-surfaced roads we get approximately 31 ton-miles per gallon of gasoline.

With gasoline costing 20 cents per gallon, the gasoline cost of operating a motor vehicle on a dirt road is approximately 1.43 cents per ton-mile. On gravel roads the cost is approximately 0.95 of a cent per ton-mile and on hard-surfaced roads approximately 0.64 of a cent per ton-mile.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Just what does the gentleman mean by hard surface; cement?

Mr. DOWELL. Cement, brick, and macadam.

Mr. HUDSPETH. And the gentleman is taking into consideration in the cost on a hard-surface road the wear and tear on the vehicle as well as the gasoline?

Mr. DOWELL. All things are considered.

The saving of gasoline in the operation of a car, however, is only one of the many items which go to make up the cost. Excluding the fixed items, such as taxes, license fees, and garage, which are not affected by road conditions, the experts claim that all other charges for operation and maintenance of a motor vehicle are affected in a like ratio, and in summing up the aggregate cost of owning and operating a motor vehicle the experts claim that the cost of operating a car over a gravel road is much less than over a dirt road. And the cost of operating a car over a hard-surfaced road is one-fourth less than operating it over a dirt road.

From estimates made by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, the Bureau of Public Roads, and the American Association of State Highway Officials, the estimated value of motor vehicles in the United States in 1925 was approximately $16,500,000,000. These estimates further indicate the American people are operating these automobiles on the streets and highways at the enormous cost of more than $11,000,000,000 annually. This estimate does not include garage, driver's wages, and oils. And I saw a statement the other day issued by the Associated Press which included these items, and this estimate aggregated $14,000,000,000, a sum in excess of one-half of the entire national debt. This huge annual outlay can not be imagined or understood until it is reduced to the individual automobile, but when we take into consideration that there are 20,000,000 motor vehicles in operation, we see it only requires an average outlay of approximately $600 to $700 per annum on each car to aggregate this vast sum.

With this vast investment and this enormous annual cost of operation, it is plain to everyone that a great system of highways is imperative. While the Federal-aid program is far from completed, great strides have been made in the past few years in the improvement of this system.

The highway departments in the several States are expending vast sums of money to care for the enormous increase in automobile traffic, and highway improvements have been going forward rapidly in the several States.

From the reports received from the several State highway commissions, the Bureau of Roads estimates that the cost of rural highway construction and maintenance alone in 1926 will be in excess of $1,000,000,000. It is obvious that the appropriations by Congress to aid in the construction of a great national highway system is but a small part of the enormous sums appropriated and used by the several States for the construction and maintenance of a better highway system.

With the great increase in highway construction and the great increase in automobile traffic, the problem of better traffic regulations has become an important factor in the economic use of highways throughout the country.

Some time ago the American Association of State Highway Officials took up the subject of a uniform system of markings and signals on the interstate highways. Last year the Secretary of Agriculture appointed a joint board from the Bureau of Public Roads and the State highway departments to investigate and recommend a uniform system for markings and signals on the principal highways of the country.

This board made a careful investigation of the subject and submitted its report to the Secretary of Agriculture and to the several States, recommending a uniform system of markings and signals. The evidence before the Committee on Roads a short time ago indicates that the system recommended has been favorably received in the several States by their State highway commissions, and it is hoped that out of this will grow a uniformity of markings and signals, to the great aid and safety of motorists on the highways.

It is also apparent that uniform laws and regulations must be adopted in the several States for the better protection of the motorist, pedestrian, and others on the streets and highways. And just a few days ago the Second National Conference on Street and Highway Safety met in the city of Washington for the purpose of working out and submitting to the several States a uniform system for laws and regulations for the government and control of highway traffic. It is hoped that growing out of these conferences and the efforts of experts to work out a uniform system that much may be done in the saving of property and of human life.

The 20,000,000 motor vehicles now on the streets and highways have brought to our attention, in a forceful way, an appalling record of accidents, injuries, and deaths.

The committee on statistics of the National Conference on Street and Highway Safety report that during the year 1923 there occurred 22,600 deaths as a result of street and highway accidents, and estimated the number of serious personal-injury accidents at 678,000.

In 1924, 23,291 persons lost their lives as a result of street and highway accidents, and more than 500,000 persons received serious personal injuries.

These estimates do not include hundreds of thousands of minor injuries to property and persons.

In 1925 the estimated figures show 23,850 persons were killed, and that of the number killed approximately 7,000 were children of school age.

It is apparent to all that every effort possible must be made to curb this awful destruction of human life. [Applause.]

Permit me to say in conclusion that the legislation under consideration authorizes the Federal Government to carry on the present program of highway construction upon the Federal-aid system.

Never since the Government entered into the present plan of cooperation with the several States in the building of highways has there been such general and uniform support of this program.

The hearings before the committee brought many individuals and organizations in hearty support of the legislation. Among them were:

The American Association of State Highway Officials.
The American Automobile Association.
The American Bankers' Association.
The American Farm Bureau Federation.
The American Federation of Labor (by resolution filed).
The National Grange.
The American Road Builders' Association (resolution filed).
The National Automobile Chamber of Commerce.
The Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

Your committee unanimously submit this legislation, with the hope that it will meet with your approval, thus carrying on the present system of cooperation of the Federal Government with the several States in the building of highways, which has accomplished so much in the past years. [Applause.]

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, this bill authorizes an appropriation of $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, and $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, to aid the States in the construction of roads, to be expended according to the Federal highway act approved July 11, 1916, as amended, and also the sum of $7,500,000 for each of said years for the improvement of forest roads and trails, to be expended according to the Federal highway act approved November 9, 1921, which the Director of Public Roads says will be as much as will be needed to carry out the present road program.

It comes with a unanimous report from the Committee on Roads after holding extensive hearings. This committee is composed of 13 Republicans and 8 Democrats, with the able and courteous gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] as chairman. I have had the honor of being a member of this most important committee continuously during my 12 years of service in this House and am now the ranking Democrat on this committee. I have enjoyed the work and association of the members. I assisted in the preparation and passage in 1916 of the first law that made provision for Federal aid to roads in a substantial amount, also the act of 1921. I have been a believer in and advocate of national aid for roads many years. When we made the beginning 10 years ago there was considerable opposition. I believe there were about 75 votes in the House against the bill. The opposition was chiefly from Representatives from the large cities and where there had already been considerable road improvement. I told them at that time, in my maiden speech in the House, that it was just as much advantage to the cities as the rural districts that the roads in the rural districts be improved; that whatever aided the people in the rural districts, who are engaged in farming, would help the cities.

That it was the rural districts that supported the cities; that if it were not for agriculture, the basic industry, that grass would grow in the streets of the most of our cities. I also said that time would demonstrate the wisdom of Federal aid to roads. So it is indeed very gratifying to me to-day that I have not heard a single expression in opposition to continuation of liberal appropriations to aid the States in road improvement. [Applause.] It seems that there will not be a single vote against this bill. The operation and effect of the Federal appropriations made during the last 10 years to aid the States in highway improvement have been so helpful and beneficial; that the people of the Nation, regardless of place of residence, are in favor of a continuation of it.

The people of the Nation became somewhat alarmed last year, as you will remember, because of a remark made by President Coolidge in his memorial address, from which it might be inferred that he was unfriendly to a continuation of this policy, but we now have every reason to believe that this bill will meet with his approval.

UNANIMOUS SUPPORT OF NATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

Our Committee on Roads held hearings on the various bills before it during the week of February 15-20. Never in the history of Federal road legislation has there been such a united support given for this kind of legislation. The following national organizations, covering almost every activity in the United States, presented arguments favorable to this legislation:

1. American Association of State Highway Officials.
2. American Automobile Association.
3. American Bankers' Association.

4. American Farm Bureau Federation.
5. American Federation of Labor (by resolution filed).
6. American Road Builders' Association.
7. United States Good Roads Association (Inc.).
8. National Grange.
9. National Automobile Chamber of Commerce.
10. Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

In addition to this the Bureau of Public Roads, in its capacity as administrator of the Federal highway funds, gave an accounting to the committee, as well as interesting data on surveys and research work covering road activities.

The committee is indebted to Mr. W. C. Markham, the able and efficient executive secretary of the American Association of Highway Engineers, for the very valuable information furnished by him and the assistance he rendered in bringing before the committee officials and representatives of a number of organizations interested in road construction.

I call your attention very briefly to the progress made in highway improvement in the United States during the past 10 years, which I believe is very largely attributable to the encouragement given the States and the local subdivisions thereof by the appropriations made by Congress. The States and counties gladly matched dollar for dollar the Federal appropriation, and raised and spent much more, as I will explain later.

ROAD IMPROVEMENT DURING PAST DECADE

In 1915 there were only 31 State highway commissions. To-day there is a working, active State highway commission in every one of the 48 States. In 1915, the year before we began national aid to roads, there were only 249,291 miles of improved roads in the United States. Now there are 467,933 miles, an increase in 10 years of 210,612 miles of improved roads. In 1915 there was expended $240,263,784 in all of the States in road improvement, and 10 years later, in 1925, the sum went from $240,263,784 to $1,176,000,000, a gain of $936,736,216.

AMOUNT OF FEDERAL FUNDS EXPENDED

There has been paid out of the appropriations by Congress in all the States for road construction to April 1, 1926, the enormous sum of $496,239,652. Of this amount $9,698,510 was expended in the State of Alabama, which I, in part, represent.

In 1925 the Federal automobile tax of 5 per cent amounted to $68,201,814, just about the amount that was appropriated for roads. It is estimated that the 3 per cent tax provided in the 1926 revenue act will amount to $69,600,000 for the year 1926; while this is paid by the manufacturers of motor vehicles, still it is added to the price of the cars and is paid by the purchasers and users of automobiles, trucks, and busses. So the Government is only giving back to road improvement about the amount of taxes collected on automobiles.

HOW FEDERAL FUNDS ARE DISTRIBUTED

When the Congress decided to contribute toward highway improvements the process of distributing Federal appropriations was made to the several States and not to certain roads. The method finally adopted for the distribution was on the basis of one-third according to the ratio which the area of each State bears to the total area of all the States; one-third in the ratio which the population of each State bears to the total population of all the States, as shown by the latest available Federal census; and one-third in the ratio which the mileage of rural delivery routes and star routes in each State bears to the total mileage of rural delivery routes and star routes in all the States. This has proven to be a most equitable and satisfactory method of distribution of the Federal funds.

Congress did not stop with an appropriation. November 9, 1921, will stand out as one of the great days in congressional action on the entire highway program. In addition to making an appropriation, to be expended in cooperation with the States, the law approved on this day provided for a definite system of roads to be constructed with funds from both the Federal and State treasuries. This system was limited to 7 per cent of each State's total road mileage. Seven per cent was chosen because it was found that this was the least mileage that would connect all the county seats and main market centers.

When the program of Federal aid to highway construction was adopted there were 2,941,294 miles of roads in the United States. The total allowable mileage in the 7 per cent system would be approximately 200,000 miles. The 7 per cent roads in Alabama amount to 3,959 miles. The total mileage improved and under construction with Federal aid on February 1 was 63,239 miles, and it is estimated that there have been improved by States without Federal aid about 65,000 miles. That would represent a balance unimproved of 50,558 miles; 25,550 miles of the 7 per cent system has been improved with a high-type pavement, 16,800 miles with a medium-type pavement, and 49,450 miles with a low-type pavement, meaning a sand clay, selected earth, or gravel surfacing. It is estimated that only about 42 per cent of this system has been improved. It is thought that within the next five or six years it will be possible to improve in some form the entire system.

I think all will agree that hereafter we must build more permanent hard-surface roads than heretofore; it will prove to be real economy in the end.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALMON. I will.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Does that five or six years mean from the date of this authorization?

Mr. ALMON. From this time.

MAINTENANCE OF FEDERAL AID ROADS

One of the best pieces of road legislation we have enacted was that provision in the act of 1921 which requires that when a highway has been constructed with Federal aid and State funds it then becomes the duty of the State in which it is located to maintain the highway in proper manner, and if the State fails to so maintain any such highway the Secretary of Agriculture may maintain such highway out of Federal-aid funds allotted to that State, or may withhold any Federal aid to that State until the highway has been placed in a proper condition.

Mr. MANLOVE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALMON. I will.

Mr. MANLOVE. I have not had the pleasure of hearing all the gentleman's splendid speech, but I was wondering if he has touched upon the point of the transcontinental roads in his remarks? I know the gentleman is well informed.

Mr. ALMON. I want to say to my good friend from Missouri that I am so concerned about carrying to completion this 7 per cent system of 200,000 miles that I do not care to consider and talk at this time about transcontinental roads. [Applause.]

I am glad to see that certain organizations came before our committee at this time in favor of the continuation of this system and this policy of the Congress which at one time were in favor of all the Federal appropriations being spent on transcontinental roads. Another evidence of the success of our plan and system.

DIRECTOR McDONALD OF THE BUREAU OF PUBLIC ROADS

Much of this success is due to the splendid record of service of our able and most efficient director of roads, Mr. Thomas H. MacDonald. His duties are not only important but very difficult. However, during his service of seven years as director he has discharged his every duty in a most faithful, impartial, satisfactory, and efficient manner. His services to the country have been worth many times the salary which he receives. [Applause.]

There is, in my opinion, no other appropriation of the same amount that we make which is of as much benefit to as many people as that we make for road construction. So let us continue to make these appropriations as long as they are needed and demanded by the people. [Applause.]

The Congress is certainly committed to the completion of the 200,000 miles in the 7 per cent roads which have been selected and designated by direction of Congress.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT HAS DIRECT RESPONSIBILITY

Without Federal appropriations it would be extremely difficult to obtain a connected system of interstate highways. Without Federal appropriations the great task just completed of numbering the Nation's highways and of providing uniform traffic and directional signs would have been long delayed. Without Federal appropriations the vast sum of knowledge made available through cooperative traffic and research studies would have been still lacking.

Ever since the cooperative work began on the building of the Federal aid highway system all roads constructed with Federal funds have been required to be so constructed that the culverts and bridges shall meet the needs and requirements of the Army. Likewise, when the system was approved, the War Department was consulted as to what roads would meet the greatest national need in any line of defense.

From the beginning of the Government the Postal Service has been a purely national function. Without railroads the highways and waterways were the sole source of carrying on this work for the people. With the introduction of rural-delivery mail service the use of the highway has been greatly augmented. The Federal Government is now using 1,205,572 miles of highway every day in this service and yet is assisting the States in the improvement of less than 200,000 miles. In the use of this mileage 30,060,816 individuals are being served, and yet there is still over 14,000,000 to be added as the service can be extended. Five years ago 43 per cent of the rural carriers used horse-drawn vehicles. To-day there are but 15 per cent using horses. The time involved in delivery of rural mail has been reduced one-half.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALMON. I will be glad to yield to my friend from Texas.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I recall that when our committee was holding hearings on this bill and were discussing road material that there was a controversy between yourself and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROSSION], as to which was the better road material, Alabama asphalt or Kentucky asphalt. I would like to know if that has been decided.

Mr. ALMON. Yes; in favor of Alabama both as to quality and quantity. [Applause.]

While the development of a system of good roads is of inestimable value to all classes and all communities, it is of special benefit to the farming interests of the country. It enables the farmer to get his products to the market with the least possible delay and to take advantage of the prices when they are most advantageous. It is said we are living in a motor age. Marvelous changes have been effected in the economical and social life of America by the advent of the automobile. Motor trucks and motor vehicles have practically supplanted the slow-moving horse-drawn conveyances, and with an improved system of hard-surfaced public highway trunk lines and improved connecting highways the markets and the farmers are brought closer together and a more efficient and economical marketing and distributing system provided at a great saving of time and money. It has to a great extent destroyed the isolation of the farm and the farmer, permitted a notable extension in educational facilities, is an effective aid in medical relief, and is conducive to social intercourse and more friendly relations. It has been a great boon to rural communities and should not be discontinued.

Mr. Chairman, there are at least four great aids to the building of happy homes in this or any other country—four great pillars—the schools, the churches, the press, and the State. The highway systems are the arteries of the country by which these great aids are taken to the homes. The consolidation of our public-school system has been made possible because of better transportation. Horace Mann builded better than he expected when he led the fight for the public schools of America. Those schools are developing faster than even he dreamed they would develop. They are developing rapidly in every part of the land—the country boy and the city boy are put on an equality. This can be done only where there are consolidated schools, and consolidated schools are only possible in the rural districts where there are good roads.

FEDERAL APPROPRIATIONS AGAINST STATE

It has been intimated that the Federal appropriations for highways have been so generous that in order to meet the Federal law requirements States are compelled to make appropriations beyond their means. This argument is conclusively answered when your attention is called to the fact that the States have constructed a larger mileage of State roads without Federal funds than with Federal funds.

I also call your attention to the fact that in 1924 (last report) the States collected from auto licenses and gas tax $358,060,055, when they needed but $67,081,920 to meet the Federal funds. Again, the States expended in excess of the amounts for Federal-aid roads $413,273,000.

In the State of Alabama, which I have been commissioned to represent in part, the gross receipts from motor-vehicle licenses and gasoline taxes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, amounted to $4,238,677, when only $1,541,870 of State funds was required to match the Federal-aid apportionment for that year.

TWENTY MILLION MOTOR VEHICLES IN UNITED STATES

I referred to the fact that while great progress has been made in road building during the past 10 years, still it has not kept pace with the increase in motor vehicles which use the roads. Eleven years ago there were less than 1,000,000 motor cars, valued at less than $100,000,000, on the streets and highways of our Nation. To-day there are more than 20,000,000 vehicles in use, and the total public investment in automobiles alone is something more than $16,500,000,000.

More than 4,000,000 were manufactured last year, and a similar number will probably be produced in 1926. Statistics show that new cars are produced and old ones drop out at such a rate that about seven seasons will be required to replace all those in use now. There are about 400,000,000 engine horsepower in the 20,000,000 cars in the United States. The task of replacing those is comparable in magnitude to building over again all of the central industrial and public utility power stations with their 45,000,000 horsepower and all of the steam locomotives in the country with their 130,000,000 horsepower.

In 1925 the total wholesale value of the cars and trucks produced reached $3,000,000,000, while the wholesale value of parts, accessories, and tires amounted to almost another $2,000,000,000. More than 3,200,000 persons obtained their livelihood from this industry in 1925.

This is about a million more than all the railroad workers of the Nation, and more than four times as many as all the persons employed in all the coal mines of this country. The total value of the motor-vehicle and allied industries and cost of roads is estimated to be $22,000,000,000, while the estimated value of all the railroads of the Nation is about $20,000,000,000, and the Nation is spending annually around $9,000,000,000 for motor vehicles, parts, repairs, gasoline, oil, road construction, and so forth, while the total operating expenses of all classes of railroads last year were $6,186,000,000. Last year there was four times as much passenger travel in motor vehicles as there was on railroads. We have in the United States about 83 to 85 per cent of all the motor vehicles in the world.

There can be no question about the attitude of the general public toward continued highway improvement. The mere fact that there are 20,000,000 motor vehicles on the streets and highways of the Nation to-day constitutes a straw vote of tremendous significance. Who would try to demonstrate that the condition of the highways has no effect upon the general welfare? Schools, churches, medical service, social betterment—all are tied up in this problem.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALMON. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. Do any of these roads lead to Muscle Shoals?

Mr. ALMON. In answer to the question propounded by my good friend from Louisiana I would say that all roads lead to Muscle Shoals, as he will observe when he comes to see me next summer, as he has promised to do. [Applause.]

Permit me to say in conclusion that while every part of our country has been so greatly benefited from an industrial, social, and educational standpoint, let it not be forgotten that this great Federal-aid-to-road system was inaugurated during a Democratic administration. The same administration that established the Federal reserve banking law, the farm-loan banks, farm demonstration act, and parcel post law, all so good that our Republican friends join with us in voting for the necessary appropriations to carry on the good work. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 9688) granting the consent of Congress to the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across Sandusky Bay at or near Baybridge, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. COUZENS, Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. SHEPPARD as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9795) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 8950) granting the consent of Congress to the State of Minnesota to construct a bridge across the Minnesota River at or near Shakopee, Minn., disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. COUZENS, Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. SHEPPARD as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 8190) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Colorado River near Blythe, Calif., disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. COUZENS, Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. SHEPPARD as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

FEDERAL AID IN CONSTRUCTION OF ROADS

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for 30 minutes.

BUILDING THE WORLD'S GREATEST HIGHWAY SYSTEM

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the bill now before us authorizes $165,000,000 to be used in cooperation with the States in building good roads and in building roads and trails in the national forests for the next two fiscal years. This bill received the unanimous report of our Committee on Roads, and I apprehend it will meet with no serious opposition in the House.

This year the Federal Government, the States, and their subdivisions will expend more than $1,030,000,000 for the construction and maintenance of the highways of the Nation. The Nation's annual road bill for the future will be at least $1,000,000,000. It is the largest public-works job the world has ever known. The Federal Government will contribute about 8 per cent to this large expenditure. We have about 3,000,000 miles of highways of all types, ranging from mere trails to the very best improved surfaced roads. About 500,000 miles have been graded, drained, and surfaced. Under the act of November 9, 1921, a unified and definite system of highways, embracing about 200,000 miles, is provided for. This system is made up of 7 per cent of the star route and rural mail route road mileage of each State, and this system will reach and unite practically every county seat, city, and every important industrial center and market of the Nation, and when it is completed about 85 per cent of the population of the Nation will reside on this system or within 2 miles of this improved highway system, and anyone once getting on this system may go to every part of the Nation on an improved highway. [Applause.] About 125,000 miles of this system have been improved and surfaced, and the other 75,000 miles have not been either graded, drained, or surfaced. We are improving more than 11,000 miles per year, and it is hoped that this system may be completed, or at least all of it improved, by the year 1933. Of course, all of the mileage now improved has not been with high-type surface. Some of the surfacing has been made with clay and sand, and the other with macadam, brick, asphalt, or concrete, according to the needs of the travel. When this system is completed it will be the greatest, finest, and best system of highways in the world.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Is it not true also that the Government gets in the form of taxes on the sale of automobiles and accessories more than it puts in?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes; many times more.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The bill was well considered by the committee of which my distinguished friend from Kentucky is a member, and the gentleman contributed a great deal toward securing a unanimous report on the bill. I want to ask the gentleman if the question has ever been decided whether the asphalt of Kentucky is better than that of Alabama? That seems to be the only question remaining unanswered. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALMON. I can decide that for you.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. No; you can not decide it.

Mr. ALMON. I will say Alabama, and I think the committee decided that. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. No one, so far as I have ever heard, contends that Alabama asphalt is superior to the Kentucky rock asphalt, except one gentleman.

Mr. ALMON. Will the gentleman kindly say who that is, so the House may know whether he knew what he was talking about?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I think so much of the gentleman, and he being so hopelessly in the minority, that I do not want to expose him. Therefore, I shall refrain from mentioning his name. [Laughter and applause.]

You gentlemen of the House know this is a little fun indulged in between my good friend, Judge ALMON, and myself. He is a great good-roads booster and is a worthy Representative of a worthy people.

THE NATION ON RUBBER WHEELS

In the last 25 years there has been a tremendous development in the motor vehicle and in road construction. In 1895 there were only 300 motor vehicles in the United States. In 1900 this number had jumped to 14,000, and in 1924 to 17,500,000. We produced in 1925 about 4,325,000 motor vehicles, and it can safely be said now that there are more than 20,000,000 motor vehicles in use in the United States. We have about 83 to 85 per cent of all the motor vehicles of the world. The motor-vehicle industry last year consumed 11 per cent of all of our iron and steel, 53 per cent of all of our plate glass, 50 per cent of all of our aluminum, 70 per cent of our upholstery leather, and 15 per cent of our hardwood lumber, 84 per cent of our rubber, 80 per cent of our gasoline, 7½ per cent of our copper, 84 per cent of our lead, and 9.3 per cent of our tin. The motor vehicles consumed 7,494,000,000 gallons of gasoline, 769,000,000 pounds of crude rubber, and 226,000,000 pounds of cotton fabric. The motor industry in all of its branches furnished employment to 3,200,000 people. This is about a million more than all the railroad workers of the Nation and more than four times as many as all the persons employed in all the coal mines of this country. The total value of the motor vehicle and allied industries, and cost of roads, is estimated to be $22,000,000,000, while the estimated value of all the railroads of the Nation is about $20,000,000,000, and the Nation is spending annually around $9,000,000,000 for motor vehicles, parts, repairs, gasoline, oil, road construction, and so forth, while the total operating expenses of all class I railroads last year were $6,186,000,000. Last year there was four times as much passenger travel in motor vehicles as there was on railroads.

California has one motor vehicle for every three and one-half and Iowa one motor vehicle for every four of its population. These States and some other States have sufficient motor vehicles to carry every person in the State out of the State in a single day on a single trip.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. I want to ask the gentleman, because I know he has the facts, whether the statement that there were more passengers carried by motor vehicles than by railroads refers to the number of passengers or the number of miles traveled.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. To the number of miles traveled. It has been clearly demonstrated that it requires only about one-half as much gasoline and oil to operate a motor vehicle on a good road as it does on a dirt road, and the cost of upkeep of a motor vehicle is only about one-half as much on a good road as on a dirt road, and a motor vehicle will last about three times as long on a good road as on a dirt road. With these facts in our minds, we must see clearly the tremendous importance to the Nation of improved highways. [Applause.]

EVOLUTION IN ROAD SENTIMENT

The evolution in road building in the Nation is one of the most interesting developments of our country. Only a few years ago people interested in good roads thought it was a question for the township or magisterial district. The road funds were being administered by something like 30,000 different boards in that many different communities. Of course, there could not come out of this any unified system of well-constructed and maintained highways. They failed. And then the more forward-looking people began to contend it was a problem for the whole county and not the small units of the county. The road funds were in the hands of something like 3,000 different county boards of the Nation. They failed. It was then men of larger vision began to feel that it was a State problem and many States, after conscientious and constant efforts, failed. The States failed to solve this great problem. It was then that men of wider vision began to realize that it was a problem in which the National Government must assume leadership. The times demanded a great, unified national system of highways. It was first thought that all the National Government would have to do would be to show the States how to do the job and, with this idea in mind, Congress in 1913 appropriated $500,000 to be matched by $1,000,000 from the States, and this sum was to be used to build pattern roads in various parts of the country to show the States how to construct good roads. I remember very well that a part of this money was used to build a pattern road leading over Cumberland Mountain through Cumberland Gap from Virginia and Tennessee to Kentucky. It was a water-bound macadam road, and, of course, it did not meet the requirements of the motor vehicle. But the States did not build the system of roads.

Mr. ALMON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. ALMON. The gentleman is a most efficient member of the Committee on Roads and an enthusiastic supporter of national aid to roads. I trust that in nothing he has said he is intending to convey the idea or express the opinion that he is in favor of the discontinuance of national aid to roads after the 7 per cent roads have been constructed.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. No Member of the House is a more earnest or active advocate of Federal aid for roads than I am. I trust the gentleman from Alabama will hear me to the end.

CONGRESSIONAL JOINT COMMITTEE

The rapid increase in the number of motor vehicles and great need for better highways was reflected in Congress, and under authority of an act of Congress of August 24, 1912, and continuing acts of March 4, 1913, and March 9, 1914, a joint committee, consisting of five Senators and five Representatives, was created and authorized to investigate the subject of Federal aid in the construction of post roads. This committee after very thorough investigation submitted its report to the Senate and House in January, 1915, favoring Federal aid and setting forth its reasons. The Hon. MARTIN B. MADDEN, of Illinois, the present distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, and Hon. ROBERT GORDON LEE, of Georgia, were members of that committee. I wish to take this opportunity to congratulate our colleagues for their distinguished service in behalf of good roads and in behalf of the Nation. I wish now to read their report, so that you may know that they sensed correctly the needs of the Nation:

All the arguments that have been here presented showing the value of the construction and maintenance of good roads are of equal weight in support of the plea for Federal aid in this good cause. Experience has demonstrated that past methods are inadequate to accomplish desired results. To the original plan of leaving highway construction and maintenance to the several localities, State participation has been added in nearly every State in the Union, but even this has not proved to be sufficient, and the demand for Federal aid has become general and insistent.

National participation in the good-roads movement is justified, moreover, on more extensive grounds. The activity of the National Government would more strongly emphasize the importance of the attainment of good roads, would establish higher standards, and to some extent would shift the burden of expense from the rural resident to the inhabitants of the city.

Because the Nation stands higher in the esteem of the people than does any State or community, and because the Nation usually gives its attention to the larger and more important works for the promotion of the common welfare, everything in which the Nation participates naturally assumes a more important character. It is for this reason that when the Government undertakes the good-roads movement that movement will immediately be accorded in the public mind a far higher importance than it has to-day. Each individual throughout the length and breadth of the United States will then give more careful thought and more earnest effort to the good-roads movement.

That national participation will establish higher standards will scarcely be questioned. Presumably those officers of the National Government who are charged with the duties and responsibilities of promoting public-road improvement are men chosen from among the leaders in this line of work. They are men who presumably have devoted years to the study of practical and scientific problems of road improvement and to the investigation of the experience of road builders in foreign lands. The more direct participation of the National Government, therefore, should bring the attention of road builders throughout the country to the highest standards of road construction. We believe that this can be accomplished without building up an autocratic bureau vested with dictatorial power to which the road authorities of the United States would be subservient.

These gentlemen turned out to be not sons of prophets but prophets themselves, because everything they declared has come true. [Applause.] I want here to express my appreciation, after these years, for the wonderful service these men rendered to the cause of good roads and to the Nation as a whole. [Applause.]

Congress had come to the conclusion that it was the duty of the Federal Government to help the States to build the highways and not merely show them how to build them, and July 11, 1916, Congress authorized $75,000,000 to cover a five-year program to aid the States in the construction of highways. In February, 1919, Congress authorized the further sum of $200,000,000 for this purpose. These substantial appropriations greatly stimulated road sentiment and the States and subdivisions of the States came forward with hundreds of millions of dollars to engage in this great enterprise.

Illinois has provided $160,000,000 in bonds, North Carolina $85,000,000 in bonds, Missouri $60,000,000 in bonds, Iowa about $200,000,000 in the last eight years. Each of these States is raising millions annually for this work.

PRESIDENTS HARDING AND COOLIDGE URGE FEDERAL AID

President Harding was the first President in recent years to make a strong recommendation in his message to Congress for Federal aid for roads, and the present splendid Federal aid highway act was signed by him on November 9, 1921. President Coolidge in his message to Congress December 6, 1923, said:

No expenditure of public money contributes so much to the national wealth as the building of good roads.

He again declared in his message to Congress December 8, 1925:

The work for good roads, better land and water transportation will all be continued.

The Republican National Convention in its platform of 1924 declared:

The Federal aid road act adopted by the Republican Congress in 1921 has been of inestimable value in the development of the highway systems of the several States and the Nation. We pledge a continuation of this policy of Federal cooperation with the States in highway building.

In the same year the Democratic platform made the following pledge:

Improved roads are of vital importance not only to commerce and industry but also to agriculture and rural life. We call attention to the record of the Democratic Party in this matter and favor a continuance of Federal aid under existing Federal and State agencies.

But these are not the earliest advocates of Federal aid for roads. Congress authorized and appropriated money in 1803 to 1806 to build the Cumberland turnpike. This pike was 130 miles long, 60 feet wide, and extended from tidewater on the Potomac to Wheeling, W. Va., on the Ohio River. It cost $1,325,000 and was opened for travel in 1818. Unfortunately it was turned over by the Government to the States through which it passed and by them turned over to toll companies. This road was built at the urgent request of President Jefferson. He, Hamilton, Madison, Clay, Calhoun, and Webster were all earnest, active advocates of Federal aid for roads.

For half a century or more interest for Federal aid lagged in Congress. In 1893 the Federal Government established the office of road inquiry, and Congress appropriated $10,000 to carry on the work of investigation. Much valuable work was done. It was in 1901 that the office of public roads was created. In the early struggle to bring about Federal aid for roads the Hon. M. O. Eldridge, the present director of traffic of the city of Washington, rendered splendid service. He was one of the great pioneers in this great movement.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Was that authorization for two years? We never had that much for one year, did we?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. The authorization of $75,000,000 in 1916 was for a five-year program, and in 1919 the $200,000,000 was for a three-year program.

NO SYSTEM AND NO MAINTENANCE PROVISIONS

Congress had authorized $275,000,000 for road construction in cooperation with the States, but the Federal aid law had three important defects:

1. The county and not the State was the unit in dealing with the Federal Government.

2. No unified system of highways was provided for.

3. Upkeep or maintenance was not required or provided for.

In the Sixty-seventh Congress President Harding and the Bureau of Public Roads, under the leadership of Mr. MacDonald, strongly urged Congress to cure these defects. I had the honor of presenting that bill to the Committee on Roads and had charge of the bill in the House. This bill was backed by the Bureau of Roads, the Association of American Highway Engineers, and the farm organizations of the country. It provided:

1. That the State and not the county should be the unit in dealing with the National Government in matching Federal aid.

2. It provided for a unified system of highways for about 200,000 miles that would reach practically every county seat, every industrial center, and every important market in the country.

3. It provided that the States should make provision for the constant maintenance and upkeep of all of the roads in which Federal funds were used.

4. In the event that any State failed to keep in good repair any such road, the Federal Government would make such repairs and charge it to the delinquent State and would withhold from such State any further Federal aid until such State should refund the money and make proper pledge and arrangements to maintain the road.

Another plan was submitted in the Senate. It contemplated the construction of one or two transcontinental highways, passing through each of the States, and were to be at least 20 feet in width and constructed by the Federal Government. The Senate plan was called the "joy riders' plan of America and the House plan was called the "farms-to-market roads." The House plan was adopted. [Applause.] Each of the 48 States has provided a highway department and has submitted to the Department of Agriculture a map showing the 7 per cent system of such roads that are proposed to be improved in cooperation with the Federal Government, and has passed suitable laws to provide for their constant upkeep and maintenance. This system of highways embraces about 200,000 miles. About 125,000 miles have been improved thus far and about 75,000 miles remain to be improved. We are improving about 11,000 miles a year of this system, and it is confidently expected that the entire system will be improved by the year 1933.

Before the act of 1921 counties were matching Federal funds. The rich counties that needed the roads least were matching Federal funds and adding to their highways. The poor counties that needed the roads most could not match Federal funds. Furthermore, we did not have any unified system. We were building little patches of roads in various counties, and then these were neglected and permitted to go to pieces. Under the act of 1921 the 48 States having submitted their proposed systems to the Department of Agriculture and the Bureau of Roads being under that department, with the Secretary of Agriculture, they have viewed the Nation as a whole and have laid out a great system of interstate and intercounty highways, so that these great continental lines are being built through the poor States and through the poor counties as well as the rich States and rich counties, forming a splendid, coordinated, united system. The motorist, when this system is completed, will know nothing about county lines and will be scarcely able to discern State lines.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. And will not that bring about better understandings and remove sectional feeling?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Exactly so.

The State highway departments of the 48 States are very fortunate in their representative at the National Capital in the person of Hon. W. C. Markham. He has shown himself to be honest, reasonable, capable, and efficient, and he deserves much credit in helping to work out and write into law the act of November 9, 1921, and has won many friends for the road cause. I can not refrain at this time from expressing my admiration and sincere appreciation of the splendid work of the Hon. Thomas MacDonald, Director of the Bureau of Roads, and his associates. He perhaps deserves more credit than any other one person in helping to bring about the act of November 9, 1921, and his splendid knowledge, his unquestioned integrity, and uniform courteous treatment have caused the people of the States to rejoice in the leadership of the Federal Government in this great road movement. About $600,000,000 has been disbursed under his direction, and I have not heard the least intimation of fraud or graft, and the representatives of the various highway departments of the Nation are unstinted in their praise of him and his associates. [Applause.] Under this law and the splendid management of Mr. MacDonald the Federal aid movement for roads has appealed to the citizens of the Nation, and in the recent hearings held before our committee the United States Chamber of Commerce, the American Bankers' Association, the American Automobile Association, the American Federation of Labor, the various farm organizations, and many other of the leading business organizations and road officials of the Nation strongly commend this activity on the part of the Federal Government and urged its continuation. This activity must be sound to receive such a hearty and unanimous indorsement from these organizations of business men and farmers and road officials.

HIGHWAY, RAILROAD, AND WATER TRANSPORTATION

There has been developed more or less jealousies among those interested in these three agencies of transportation. These agencies of transportation bear the same relation to the commerce of the Nation as the blood vessels bear to the human body. These arteries of commerce must be constructed and maintained in a vigorous and healthy condition to serve the Nation. No one discounts the importance of the railroads and rivers; but are not the highways more important? The highways touch every community, large and small, and all of the sources of production and every American home. Perhaps more than 65 per cent of all of the freight and passenger transportation of the country are moved over the highways; and, in fact, all of the commerce is moved in part of its journey over some highway. There are sections of the country in which we must have the water transportation. I think it might be safely said now that water and rail transportation must take care of the long haul for passengers and freight and the heavy haul for freight. The motor transport can not successfully compete with water or rail in long haul of passengers, or freight, or the heavy-load freight. On the other hand, neither rail nor water transportation can successfully compete or satisfy our present social and commercial life in the short haul of passengers and light freight, and these great agencies of commerce and the American people must work out the problem to do justice to each and to give the best service to the American people. We need them all. [Applause.] I think the representatives of some of the railroads are unduly alarmed. While the railroad mileage in 1917 reached its high peak of 254,037 miles and had fallen January 1, 1924, to 250,183 miles, it does not follow that the railroads of the country are in danger. Some of the short-line railroads throughout the country, and especially in the Eastern States, have gone out of business, because they were largely engaged in short hauls of passengers and light freight. The Bureau of Railroad Economics, Washington, D. C., reports that the net revenue of class 1 railroads in 1920 was $17,226,000 and for the year 1925 was $1,136,980,000, and the value of the railroads had increased from 1920 to 1924 more than $2,000,000,000, and in the year of 1925 the car loadings of the railroads of America were greater than they had been at any time in the history of our country. It might also be said that our highway development has been largely confined to the construction of highways running parallel with the railroads and rivers. The future road construction will be directed more especially to the construction of lateral lines. The increase in the railroad business has been largely due to the new business brought by the good roads, and this business will greatly increase as the years come and go when the lateral road lines are constructed.

The railroads receive more than $400,000,000 in freight revenues annually from hauling road materials and motor cars, parts, and so forth. Mr. Markham, president of the Illinois Central Railroad, made a most interesting and instructive speech some time ago on this subject. He says one-eighth of the revenues of his railroad comes from the motor-vehicle industry and hauling road material.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. I fully agree with the gentleman that we ought to have a complete system of transportation, railways, highways, and waterways. But in speaking of the importance of good roads the gentleman remembers that just a few years ago, when there was a serious railroad strike in the East and some of the people in the large centers were threatened with starvation, it was the motor truck that saved them?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes; that is true; and I am coming to that. That is one of the strong arguments for our road policy.

Then there is some complaint that the railroads are heavily taxed to construct highways for their competitors in business. The railroads last year paid about $40,000,000 of taxes that went to the construction of roads throughout the country, but the motor industry, with its allied activities, perhaps paid more than $900,000,000 in taxes, and more than half of this sum went directly for the construction and maintenance of highways, and you will observe that the motor industry is paying about three times as much taxes as all of the railroads, and paying many times more into the road funds than the railroads. There must be proper regulation of trucks and other motor vehicles that are engaged exclusively in commerce. Heavy trucks are very destructive to the highways and they should be made to assume a just proportion of the burden of constructing and maintaining these highways. They have no right to be provided a roadbed and it maintained without expense to them and to engage in commerce in competition with other agencies that must construct and maintain their roads. The country demands and is entitled to a truck and bus service. Few agencies have brought more comfort and satisfaction to the American people than the bus and motor truck service, and the people are entitled to have this service continued.

PRODUCERS—CONSUMERS

The proponents of the present Federal aid law—the act of November 9, 1921—had in mind a system of highways that would bring the consumers and producers of the Nation together, and this system was designated the "farm-to-market" and "producers-consumers" roads. We wanted a system of highways that would bring into closer relations the factory, field, mine, and consumers; that would break down the barrier between our urban and rural populations. Under the leadership of the Federal Government and the building of the Federal highway system, States and counties have been putting on extensive programs for building local and lateral roads. These are reaching the farms and homes of the Nation.

The Bureau of Roads, under Edward L. Browning, research specialist, gave some very interesting testimony before our committee. A survey was made of about 10 of the great cities of the country. It was found that trucks were gathering up the milk within a radius of 40 to 50 miles of these cities and delivering it to the consumers in the cities, thereby affording cheaper and quicker service and giving to the consumers fresher and better milk without any additional cost to consumers and a better price to the producers. This was a great saving of time and expense to the farmers, because they were not required to quit work and deliver their milk to some railroad station. It was taken at their doors. With our good roads there has sprung up all over the country what is known as roadside markets. While these markets are comparatively young, yet they are doing a tremendous business. The city motorist now may buy fresh fruit, vegetables, and other farm products at the roadside as he takes his trip for pleasure or business. At some of these roadside markets there have been sold by the farmers as much as $50,000 worth of farm produce in a single year. The Bureau of Roads made a survey in New Jersey in 1924 and found that these roadside stands sold $305,000 worth of produce direct to the motorist. A similar survey was made in the State of Maryland in 1925, and it was found that nearly $300,000 worth of produce was sold direct to the motorist.

One of the very great problems of the present day, and a problem that will become more pressing as the years come and go, will be how to feed and clothe the Nation. Good roads reaching all the sources of production will bring the fruits, vegetables, poultry, dairy, meat, and other products quickly and cheaply to the consumer. And even though there should be a breakdown in our rail or water transportation, the Nation could be cared for through and by her highways.

Good roads are a great educational asset. They are making better farms, better homes, better schools, and better citizens. Because of our roads the North, East, West, and South are enabled to mix and mingle together freely. Nothing could contribute more to a united and happy people. This is a great agency to wipe out sectional and provincial prejudices. In the language of the highway, we all become brethren and neighbors. I do not believe there could have been a Civil War if we had had a great system of highways such as we now have.

FEDERAL RESPONSIBILITY

There are those who inquire: Has the Federal Government authority to engage in this enterprise and will it not soon discontinue this expenditure of the public money? We think that this expenditure of public funds is clearly authorized by the Constitution, wherein it gives Congress the power—

- (a) To provide for the common defense.
- (b) To promote the general welfare.
- (c) To regulate commerce among the several States.
- (d) To establish post offices and post roads.
- (e) To make all laws which will be necessary and proper for carrying into effect these powers.

This authorization would be authorized under the national-defense clause. Nothing means more to the national defense than for the Nation to be able to mobilize and transport its resources of men and material quickly and effectively. [Applause.] In the future the highways of the Nation will be the greatest agency of transportation for this purpose. General Pershing, testifying before the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads in 1921, said:

The country road will be of tremendous value in time of war—the roads must be relied upon to obtain the needed food supply.

With the national defense in mind the Bureau of Roads, in helping to lay out and approve the present Federal aid highway system, consulted freely the War Department and other defense organizations of the Nation and established in this system of highways about 60,000 miles of the 200,000-mile system, roads that were specifically designed to be of great service to the Nation in time of war. The bridges are being built and the roads constructed with that thought in mind, and the Federal funds that we are appropriating from time to time are being used in cooperation with the States in building these national-defense highways. These good roads are as essential to the national defense as armies and navies. It could properly be contended that the Federal Government ought to pay the entire expense thereof, but the States are paying more than half of this expense.

Every mile of the 200,000 miles of the Federal-aid system is a post road, and Congress has a perfect right under the Constitution to appropriate funds to provide post roads. The fact is, the Federal Government is using 1,205,000 miles of the highways of the various counties and States over which to transport the United States mails, and more than 300,000 miles of these 1,205,000 miles have been improved and put in order by the various counties and States at their own expense, and the Federal Government is contributing less than half of the cost of these 200,000 miles in the Federal system. I think Congress has the power, under the Constitution, to provide for the entire cost of this 200,000 miles. I know of no activity in which the Government takes part that means more to the general welfare of the whole Nation than the construction of good roads. The highest court in the land has spoken on this road subject a number of times. I refer to the cases, Michigan Public Utility Commission against Duke, decided January 12, 1925, reported in 266 United States 571; A. J. Buck against E. V. Keykendall, director of public works of the State of Michigan, reported in 267 United States 307; George W. Bush & Sons Co. against William M. Malloy and others, constituting the public service commission of Maryland, reported in 267 United States 317.

Some of the Northern and Eastern States have heretofore complained about the authorization for public highways. We expended about $400,000,000 in building the Panama Canal. We have expended for rivers and harbors $1,200,000,000, a sum nearly double that we have authorized for the construction of roads, but in the river and harbor appropriations the Federal Government has borne practically the entire cost, while in the construction of the highways the Federal Government has not borne one-half the cost. And let me point out further that the greater amount of this river and harbor appropriation was expended in and about the States that have protested against Federal aid for roads, and many of the States that have only recently been receiving contributions for roads have been contributing in taxes for more than 100 years for river and harbor improvements in the so-called rich States of the Nation. I am not taking a provincial view. I want to see the Nation developed as a whole, and to do this we must have a sane and economic program of highway and river and harbor improvement and development throughout the Nation. When Congress passed the act of November 9, 1921, it said to each of the States that you must establish a highway system; you must change your constitution and laws, if necessary, to make the State the unit and not the county in dealing with the Federal Government on this question; you must pass such laws as will provide for the maintenance of this system of roads, when constructed. You must submit a map setting forth 7 per cent of your highways used for star route and rural mail routes, and the Federal Government will get all these maps together and help work out a great coordinated and unified system of highways. The States complied with these conditions; the system was laid out and is now being constructed. The Federal Government agreed to help build the system, and I think the Federal Government is honor bound to continue this contribution until this great system is improved, and in doing so the Federal Government will provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and give its mail carriers proper highways on which to conduct the Nation's mail business. It will help to unite the country as it has never been united before. It will help to add immeasurably to our prosperity, comfort, and happiness, and it will cause the people everywhere to rejoice that they are citizens of the most wonderful country in all the world, and that our country has the greatest, finest, and best highway system in all the earth. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who speak on this bill may have five legislative days within which to extend their remarks.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I would be very glad to join in that request, but I think the request must be made in the House and not in the committee.

Mr. ALMON. The committee can do this with respect to the bill that is being considered.

Mr. DOWELL. I think each individual may have permission, but general authorization must be made in the House. I will be very glad to join with the gentleman in his request when we get into the House.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, my understanding of the practice is it can be done in committee.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TINCHER). It is the understanding of the Chair that the order can be made in the committee in as much as it applies only to gentlemen speaking on the bill.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection and will join in the request if it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all Members speaking on the bill may have five legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KEMP]. [Applause.]

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill because I do not wish to hinder the progress of that agency through which the people—old and young—have derived so much happiness and which has proved such a convenience in modern life.

I am in favor of this bill because I do not wish to take from the 20,000,000 owners of automobiles the assurance of the needed continued road extension and improvement.

I am in favor of this bill because good roads have added billions of dollars to our national wealth through the enhancement of land and property values.

I am in favor of this bill because good roads have permitted a better understanding between the different sections of the country.

I am in favor of this bill because I want the United States to continue to stand an exemplar to Mexico, Central and South America, and other countries of the world in the expansion of road construction.

With our great factories, unlimited capital, skilled workmen, and massed production we need to create a market in those countries that will absorb our surplus production of cars.

That market once established would insure permanent prosperity in the automobile industry.

I am in favor of this bill because the Government collects in taxes on the automobile more than it expends on roads; besides it collects hundreds of millions of dollars of income tax from the industry.

I am in favor of this bill because it is fair to say that the money appropriated as Federal aid is derived from a direct tax on the cars, and is not contributed in undue proportion by the wealthy States, as claimed by some.

The Federal tax on cars for 1925 yielded $131,872,000, while the Federal aid amounted to only $75,000,000. Any Government expenditure which yields nearly 100 per cent profit in return should be continued without objection by those interested in Treasury receipts.

Furthermore, it is conceded that through good roads and the automobile remote and inaccessible parts of the country are made to prosper, and in the long run their prosperity is reflected in the fortunes of those who reside in the wealthy States—just as a local depression in business is felt with increasing force in other sections as the area of that depression expands.

I am in favor of this bill because, had not Federal aid been given the States, we would not have our present system of roads, and had not the roads been built we would not have 20,000,000 automobiles in operation to-day. And without the automobiles the great national prosperity of to-day would not exist.

The automobile industry has doubled its output in the last nine years. Over 3,000,000 men and women are now, directly or indirectly, engaged in this business. That great number of workers could not have been absorbed by the old-established industries and the then existing lines of business. Without a new and unaccustomed demand for labor there would have been widespread unemployment. An industry or business of vast proportions was required to be superimposed upon the old industrial and economic structure to absorb the labor and give employment to those not needed under the preexisting order. People bought automobiles because they were prosperous, and they continued to prosper because they bought automobiles.

I am in favor of this bill because I am opposed to applying a brake to the amazing progress and prosperity of this golden age of man's achievement.

I am in favor of this bill because I think it unwise to hamper the greatest industrial enterprise in this country, when it gives employment to over 3,000,000 men and women and stimulates and nourishes every other line of business.

The development of the motor vehicle as a major agency of individual transportation has provided the United States with a new and vitally needed outlet for large surplus supplies of labor, credit, and raw materials.

Billions of dollars have been added to the capital wealth of the Nation through the production, distribution, and use of the car.

Every phase of economic life has reacted to the stimulus of this new factor in modern civilization, while its influence upon social life and customs has been so profound as to entirely destroy the barriers of isolation which have existed between city and country as far back in history as tradition carries us.

HIGHWAYS ESSENTIAL TO DEVELOPMENT

The full effectiveness of the vehicle as an instrument for the general welfare awaits only a complete economic development of our highways.

Every rule of reason, every impulse for the betterment of living conditions in our country, justifies the continued expenditure of large sums annually for the increased capital facilities which the improved highway gives us.

The problem is not alone local in extent. It is national—even international—in its implications.

How much better, for example, would be the mutual understanding between Mexico and the United States if good roads permitted the daily interchange which we now enjoy with our neighbors to the north?

TWENTY MILLION VEHICLES IN UNITED STATES

Eleven years ago there were less than 1,000,000 motor cars, valued at less than $100,000,000, on the streets and highways of our Nation. To-day there are more than 20,000,000 vehicles in use, and the total public investment in automobiles alone is something more than $16,500,000,000.

More than 4,000,000 were manufactured last year and a similar number will probably be produced in 1926. Statistics show that new cars are produced and old ones drop out at such a rate that about seven seasons will be required to replace all those in use now. There are about 400,000,000 engine-horsepower in the 20,000,000 cars in the United States. The task of replacing those is comparable in magnitude to building over again all of our central industrial and public utility power stations with their 45,000,000 horsepower, and all of the steam locomotives in the country with their 130,000,000 horsepower.

The question has often been asked, When will the saturation point be reached in automobile consumption? Apparently that date lies far in the future. To maintain the present number of cars in this country requires an annual replacement production of about 3,000,000 cars. The automobile is the most coveted material thing in our civilization to-day. Every individual is a potential purchaser and, ordinarily speaking, it is merely the question of having the price. With easy terms of payment a surprisingly large number find the price. This situation will continue, and no one can say when or where the point of saturation will be reached. Great as the home market is, it is my opinion a still greater market lies beyond our borders in the foreign countries of the world. Already Mexico and South and Central American countries are awake to the great social and economic value of good roads and the automobile. The leaders of thought in those countries are profoundly impressed by the marvelous advancement brought in the United States through those agencies. They desire to imitate our example. They are looking to us for scientific guidance and instruction in road building. [Applause.]

FIRST MANUFACTURING INDUSTRY OF NATION

During the 25 years of its existence the business of manufacturing modern highway transportation has grown in extent until it is to-day first among all United States manufactures, rated according to wholesale value of production.

In 1925 the total wholesale value of the cars and trucks produced reached $3,000,000,000, while the wholesale value of parts, accessories, and tires amounted to almost another $2,000,000,000. More than 3,200,000 persons obtained their livelihood from this industry in 1925.

We may well ask what the economic situation in the United States might have been to-day had it not been for the vast range of new activities added to the industrial roster of the Nation by this product.

Labor has been employed during that time at high wages. There has been no unemployment, and yet all of the manufacturing industries have had ample labor to meet their requirements. The farms and factories could not profitably have produced more without creating an embarrassing surplus. What would those 3,200,000 people have done for a living during the last several years had they not found employment in this new industry? They could not have been absorbed in the old-established industries. Production in those industries met domestic and foreign demand in full and could not have been expanded. There is but one answer to the question—widespread unemployment would have ensued and the great unprecedented prosperity of which we boast to-day would never have existed but for the expansion of the automobile industry and the absorption of said industry of what would otherwise have been a surplus of labor.

The answer, perhaps, is best found by a reference to conditions in other nations lacking this production and now faced by large lists of unemployed.

IMPETUS GIVEN ALL OTHER PRODUCTION

The tremendous impetus which the motor vehicle has given to all other lines of production is, perhaps, best determined by an examination into the market for raw materials furnished by the manufacturing of motor vehicles.

Rubber, per cent of total United States consumption used by automobile industry.....	84
Plate glass, per cent of, used by automobile industry....	50
Copper, per cent of, used by automobile industry.....	8
Iron and steel, per cent of, used by automobile industry....	11

Crude rubber used in manufacturing tires, 1925.....pounds..	769,000,000
Cotton fabric used in manufacturing tires, 1925.....do.....	226,000,000

In addition to the products mentioned, the motor industry consumed approximately 10 per cent of the total tin production; 9 per cent of the lead; 3.5 per cent of the zinc. Millions of pounds of nickel, hundreds of thousands of board-feet of lumber, millions of yards of cloth, and hundreds of millions of square feet of imitation leather were absorbed.

The annual bill for paint, varnish, wool, lubricating oil, asbestos brake lining, and other raw materials entering into the car amounts to staggering figures.

MARKET FOR LABOR WIDENED

The broadening of the demand for labor naturally followed, despite the constant improvement in machinery and the utilization of every labor-saving device possible.

The increase in number of wage earners in those industries which contribute largely to the making of the motor vehicle is brought out in the Census Bureau's 1923 census of manufactures.

There are nearly 100,000 retail automobile establishments in the United States. (See p. 95 of Facts and Figures of the Automobile Industry for 1925.)

In the industry itself the average number of wage earners directly employed in the building of the vehicle has been as follows:

That this volume has been obtained without adversely affecting the markets for other fabricated products is evidenced by figures collected from the Bureau of the Census, which compare the growth of selected industries during the period from 1914 to 1923, the term of the greatest expansion of the use of the motor vehicle.

In all cases these industries were selected because they might be considered to be the ones which might have been affected by motor-vehicle use, and they show a material increase in the factors of greatest importance to their prosperity—that is, the number of wage earners employed, the wages paid, and the value of the product. These figures are as follows:

For further supporting data we have only to turn to the statement of the Federal Reserve Board commenting on the condition of retail trade as of February 1, 1926:

CONDITION OF RETAIL TRADE

Sales at retail stores in December were larger than in the corresponding months of any previous year, and sales for the year 1925 at all classes of retail stores were larger than for any other year for which statistics are available.

It is hardly necessary to point out that with the acquisition of the automobile come many miscellaneous purchases, such as outdoor clothing, camping supplies, cameras, sporting goods, and all the varied equipment of the outdoor life.

The condition of wholesale trade in 1925 is further brought out by the report of the Federal Reserve Board of January 30, 1926:

Trade at wholesale firms in 1925, as expressed in dollar values and indicated by the Federal Reserve Board's index of wholesale trade, exceeded that of any other year since 1920. The lines covered by the board's index include groceries, meat, dry goods, shoes, hardware, and drugs, and sales in all of these lines except groceries were larger than in 1924, and sales of groceries, meats, and drugs were slightly larger than in 1923.

RAILROAD EARNINGS AIDED BY MOTOR INDUSTRY

In the realm of transportation the motor vehicle has exerted a fundamental and favorable influence upon the older agencies. A review of railway operations in 1925 published by the Bureau of Railway Economics shows that from the standpoint of revenue, car loadings, and earnings the year 1925 was the greatest in the history of railroad operations:

3,400,000 CARLOADS DUE TO MOTOR BUSINESS

In the total of freight carloads hauled, automotive products were a large and important factor as is evidenced by an analysis made by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, which shows that 3,040,000 carloads of automotive freight, including shipments of motor cars and parts, gasoline used in automobiles, road-building material, and kindred freight, were hauled over the lines during the year 1925. Many other items, such as building materials and equipment for factories and garages, less than carload shipments of parts, accessories, and express matter, are not included, because there is no separate classification for them.

Another study by the same organization shows that more than 51 railroads are now using motor trucks to supplement their rail service at a large saving in operating expense and with a better degree of service to the using public. Fifteen railroads are studying the possibilities of transporting freight by truck, and 190 steam and electric railways are now using over 496 gasoline or gas electric rail motor coaches in their operation. Twenty-six of these lines are already considering additional equipment of this type, and have already ordered 38 more units.

It thus appears that the chief field of the motor truck is as a supplementary means of transportation rather than as a competitor of the railroad and as a supporting testimony of this we have the comments of Mr. Jardine, Secretary of Agriculture:

One thing we know very definitely—there is no basis for the fear that the motor truck is going to compete seriously with the railroads. The facts we have found in all our surveys are sufficient to convince me. The truck has found its place in the short haul, and it is not taking over any business that the railroads can do as well or better.

Former Commissioner of Interstate Commerce C. P. McChord states:

The benefits to be derived from a system of well-constructed highways are widely diffused, touching every individual and every industry, whether or not they make use of them.

BUSSES BUILT INTO ELECTRIC RAIL SYSTEMS

Referring to the connection between the bus and the electric railway, we find that there were 70,000 busses in use on January 1, 1926, with the chassis production in 1925 of 17,466.

According to the study made by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, the motor bus has been adopted to provide transportation formerly supplied by 176 street railway companies over 2,500 miles of track. This does not include 12,000 miles of bus operation by street railways at the present time providing a service formerly not given by them.

It appears from this data that the rail and electric line operation are now predicated upon an alliance with motor transport and the use of it as a complementary service.

INSURANCE AND SAVINGS DEPOSITS SHOW LARGE INCREASE

The most striking evidence, however, that the miraculous development of the motor industry has simply created a new way to wealth is found in the financial and insurance situation.

The following chart illustrates this fact graphically:

Investment in motor vehicles, banks, life insurance, building and loan associations, 1913-1925

Similar statements could be made for all other forms of insurance, but as these largely represent simply a cost of business rather than an actual increment in wealth, such as life insurance does, they are not included.

USE OF CREDIT HAS SERVED TO STIMULATE ALL INDUSTRY

One of the most striking phases of the development of automobile buying in the United States in the last few years has been the use of credit through installment purchases. A careful tabulation made by the National Association of Finance Co. shows the total volume of retail automobile paper during the last year and the maximum amount outstanding at a given time, which is an important thing to bear in mind.

The buying of automobiles on credit is equivalent to the issuance of railway equipment certificates.

Credit buying of motor vehicles is a form of saving analogous to insurance. It mortgages the future by compelling one to put away a certain amount each month for a value-yielding investment. The same money placed in the bank (if it were placed in the bank) would in turn be loaned for any number of purposes, possibly financing an automobile plant, possibly for some less necessary purpose, so that the relative social gain or loss is difficult to determine. By doing his own investing the purchaser gets the immediate value of his resources.

The money thus invested becomes available to society and to the banker. It goes to the automobile manufacturer, to the persons he employs, to the raw materials he purchases, to the persons the raw-material manufacturer employs, to the banks which husband the employer's savings. In short, the money goes back into current industrial use.

Further, as it has already been indicated, the credit system has not been employed at the expense of other forms of investment.

CREATOR OF TANGIBLE WEALTH IN MYRIAD WAYS

The automobile, in fact, is a creator of tangible wealth in myriad instances.

The development of the petroleum industry of to-day could not have happened without the car, and this is only one of the more striking examples.

For the farmer, the traveling salesman, the suburban home owner, the high-class laborer, the use of the motor vehicles is an actual time and rent saving instrument, and this makes it a paying investment.

VEHICLE IN GENERAL USE BY FARM ELEMENT

In 1924 there were 4,265,280 motor vehicles in communities having less than 1,000 population, while the attached table, compiled by the Farm Journal, indicates the total estimated number of motor vehicles owned on farms.

MOTOR CAR HAS EFFECT ON ECONOMIC FARM LIFE

Repeated studies made by the Department of Agriculture have shown beyond the question of a doubt that the use of the car not only enables the farmer and his family to travel where they want, when they want to, but has a decided influence on their economic life as well.

Where roads are improved, new markets are made available, rotation of crops becomes possible, areas held for purely farm use are brought within the influence of the cities and their values heightened, and the cost of labor is reduced through the large savings of time.

INFLUENCE ON CITY LIFE HAS BEEN OF WIDE SIGNIFICANCE

The influence on city life has been similarly significant. Large suburban areas have been made possible of development through road improvements and the use of the car. State-wide real-estate development such as witnessed recently in Florida would be impossible without highways transportation, and the highway engineer will unquestionably play a large part in every development of this kind in the future.

It is a significant fact that building figures for 27 Northeast States, collected by the F. W. Dodge Co., show that residential building has increased from $450,000,000 in 1915 to $3,000,000,000 in 1925, the period again of motor-car development.

The motor vehicle has redistributed the population, bringing about a large increase in the ownership of individual homes. It has taken the citizen away from the crowded flats of the city to the more ample living of the suburbs.

EDUCATION GREATLY AIDED BY USE OF MOTOR BUS

The influence which the use of the motor vehicle has exerted upon education can not always be stated in statistical terms. Studies made by the Bureau of Education of the United States show that in 1924 there were 19,656 motor buses in use by rural schools and 470,000 children were transported daily to them by motor vehicles.

The actual reports of 2,310 out of 3,309 county superintendents in the United States show that in this year there were 1,424 new school consolidations. Improved roads make possible a daily attendance at school, while the use of the bus has been a large factor in the elimination of the little red school house, which, while a picturesque element in our education system, is far from the standard set by the new consolidated schools, with their elaborate equipment for physical and mental training of the child and better grade of teachers.

NATION BOUND MORE CLOSELY TOGETHER BY IMPROVED COMMUNICATION

The effect of highway transportation in binding our country more closely together can not be overestimated. The Federal Government is using 1,205,572 miles of highway every day in the post-office service. In the use of this mileage 30,060,816 individuals are being served, and yet it is estimated that there are still over 14,000,000 persons to be added if the service can be extended.

From the standpoint of recreation, motor transport led to 10,120,000 motorists visiting the national forests in 1924, and 1,090,000 visiting the national parks in the same period. These travelers used the highways of all the States approaching these forests and parks.

The educational value of having large masses of the population acquainted with America's scenic resources is obvious.

Mutual understanding of different sections of the country is based on education. As men and their families travel from one State to another, there is a new sense obtained of the life and problems of one's neighbors and a new feeling of obligation to the Nation.

RELATION TO NATIONAL DEFENSE DEPICTED BY GENERAL PERSHING

The relation of the highway to the national defense is perhaps best determined from the testimony of General Pershing, speaking before the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads in 1921, when he said:

The country road will be of tremendous value in time of war * * *. The roads must be relied upon to obtain the needed food supplies.

IMPROVEMENTS IN MUNICIPAL FUNCTIONS

It is hardly necessary to point to the change which has been effected and the degree of fire prevention, police protection, sanitation, and similar municipal functions through the introduction of the motor unit.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE GREATLY STIMULATED BY CAR EXPORTS

The effect of the motor vehicles upon international relations is still in its earlier development, but already we can obtain some glimpse of what the future may be through the growth of this phase of motor-vehicle production in the past few years. In 1925, 550,000 motor vehicles were exported from the United States to the 114 countries of the world. This figure is larger than the total production of 1913.

The value of the vehicles and parts exported is approximately $400,000,000, the commodity taking first place among the manufacturing exports of the Nation, with an increase over the production of 1924 of 44 per cent. The vehicles so exported constituted 12.2 per cent of the total production, and of the 25,000,000 vehicles now in use the world over approximately 93 per cent were manufactured by American firms and 81 per cent of the registration is owned in the United States.

It is obvious that the continued expansion of this market is of first importance to industry and labor in the United States, since it provides a large field for the continued employment of services here. From the standpoint of the consumer it is important, since it insures a continuation of the present low prices of the vehicles—which are to-day 26 per cent below those of 1913—through a continuation of the mass production which brings with it low cost per unit.

In a large degree the extension of this trade is dependent upon road development and in this phase of its highway work alone; the United States Government has a responsibility which is not always immediately recognized and understood.

CAR BUILDING REQUIRES CONSTANT HIGHWAY PROGRAM ON LARGE SCALE

We turn now to the relation which exists between the economic use of the motor vehicle and highway development in our own country. Several significant facts will at once appear in this connection.

According to the testimony of Mr. H. H. Rice, appearing before the Roads Committee on behalf of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, if the 20,000,000 motor vehicles now in use in the United States were given a spacing of 20 feet, the minimum safe distance between vehicles, they would cover 122,593 miles, or the entire length of all of the improved mileage of all types of highways contained in the Federal-aid system up to this time. Assuming these to be two-way highways, they would entirely cover one-half of the total improvements, or all of the miles improved with Federal aid.

Mr. Rice might have gone further in his testimony and noted that the actual mileage covered by these vehicles is approximately one-fourth of all of the 500,000 miles of improved roads of all types which we have in the United States to-day.

With a continued annual production of 25,418 miles—assuming proper spacing of motor vehicles—it is obvious that we are but at the beginning of the development of an adequate system of highways despite all of the progress which has been made in the past 10 years.

MORE ROADS DEMANDED BY 20,000,000 MOTOR USERS

More roads are needed for local, State, national, and even international traffic, and the mere fact that the public of this country is to-day spending between $8,000,000,000 and $9,000,000,000 annually in the acquisition of cars and for their upkeep is evidence that it will not only support but will demand a continued reasonable road improvement.

In doing so, not alone does the motoring public, which to-day constitutes, generally speaking, the tax-paying public of the United States, receive a direct return in the form of lower transportation costs and increased service, which far offset the cost of development but the increase in the national wealth amounts to enormous figures.

As evidence of this latter fact, it may be noted that the Bureau of the Census, in its computation of our national wealth, does not include the investment for highways, because it is estimated that their cost is reflected many times over in the increased valuation of the land which they serve.

SPECIAL MOTOR TAXES OFFSET ENTIRE CURRENT COST OF ROAD WORK

If we turn again to the cost side of the ledger of this improvement, we will find that in 1925 the total special taxes paid by the motor-vehicle users of the country were estimated by the Bureau of Public Roads as follows:

Special taxes paid by motor users

Federal excise taxes.....	$131,872,000
Motor-vehicle license fees.....	256,000,000
Gasoline taxes.....	164,468,000
Personal-property taxes, 20,000,000 cars (estimated).....	100,000,000
Municipal and local license fees (estimated).....	10,000,000
Total.....	662,335,000

In commenting upon this, T. H. MacDonald, Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads, says:

Current estimates indicate that the annual tax bill of the motor vehicles is rapidly overtaking the annual bill for highway improvement and maintenance * * * the utilization and extension of motor transport through improved roads is a creator of property values, which in fairness should be a proper balance between the direct assessments upon the motor user and the funds raised by the taxation of real property.

STATES ACT AS COLLECTION AGENCIES

There are those who argue that the cost of Federal appropriations must be borne largely by a few States. The fact is that these States act simply as collection agencies for the revenue which is derived from the raw-material source of revenue of the Nation.

No one would argue that because the State of Michigan pays most of the manufacturer's motor tax that the people of Michigan are contributing that fund. It is paid eventually by the consumers of the Nation. The same is true of corporation taxes paid in the Eastern States as a result of earnings derived from the development of industrial, agricultural, or transportation production in all parts of the country.

SMALLER SUBDIVISIONS COULD NOT ACCOMPLISH TASK ALONE

In the development of the idea that the motor vehicle has supplied the Nation with a new outlet for vast surpluses of all kinds I have sought to point out the national as well as the local significance of highway transportation.

It is a truism to say that highway transportation knows no political boundaries. The man who drives a car does not find the end of his trip within his county or even his State, and consequently the improvement can not be stopped at county or State boundary lines but must be nation-wide. The Nation as well as the State and the local community has a direct responsibility in the development of these roads, and the annual authorization of $75,000,000 granted by the House committee for continued participation in the building of interstate highways is but a mere pittance—8 per cent, to be exact—when placed alongside of the total highway expenditures of all subdivisions of the Government.

CREATION OF UNIFORM STANDARDS OF FIRST IMPORTANCE

Yet the continuation of this appropriation has many uses and purposes which go far beyond the question of money. In the creation of uniform standards of construction and operation and in the large program of cooperative research the Government has done much to facilitate the safe and free flow of traffic. The task recently completed of setting of a uniform system of directional and safety signs was one which would have been impossible or long retarded had it been left to local authorities alone.

The formulation of sound administrative policies, of standard specifications, of universal regulatory codes, are tasks requiring national vision, and these are but a few of the great public works which have been accomplished under the administration of T. H. MacDonald, Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads of the United States, and his able staff, in cooperation with the State highway officials of the Nation.

INTERNATIONAL RESPONSIBILITY MUST BE KEPT IN VIEW

While the task is but well under way in our country, the growth of the export business already touched upon has added a new and tremendously significant phase to our highway problem. Many of these questions which have been only possible of solution through cooperation between the States, with the National Government as a disinterested party serving the interest of all, must now be undertaken in an international sense.

The growth of international tourism, travel, and communication rests upon international agreements of a similar nature. Obviously, these can only best be accomplished through the participation in such conferences by the trained personnel of our Federal bureau.

Taken from whatever approach the student may care to make, whether it be economic, social, or moral, the influence of highway transportation is a dynamic force for the betterment of living conditions, not alone in our own country but throughout the world.

The Federal Government has been wisely committed to a policy of broad cooperation in this work, which should and must be continued until the task is completed.

Roads are but a means to an end, and that end is ideal individual transportation through the use of the automobile. Man has ever yearned for a freer bodily movement. With a spirit unconfined, it has seemed cruel that throughout countless ages his body should have been held like a prisoner chained to the earth.

It is our great privilege to live in the age of his liberation and to have some share in providing the facilities that make for his greater freedom of action. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, the bill under consideration for a continuation of our present national road program is one which I hope will receive the unanimous support of every Member of this body.

Before entering upon a discussion of the subject, I wish to make an observation relative to the services of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Roads, Mr. DOWELL, of Iowa.

It was my privilege and pleasure to serve as a member of the first Road Committee ever created by Congress and was a member of this committee for 12 years, from the Sixty-third to the Sixty-eighth Congress, inclusive. Our present chairman became a member in the Sixty-sixth Congress and was made chairman in the Sixty-eighth. I take pleasure in stating that he has been capable, diligent, faithful, and courteous, and as loyal and devoted to the subject of roads as he has been to the American flag; if I could put it any stronger, I would do so. [Applause.]

I enjoyed my service on the Roads Committee so fully and was so deeply interested in its work and accomplishments that I fear that I shall never feel quite so much at home on any other committee.

Prior to 1913, when the rules of the House were changed providing for the forming of a Committee on Roads, the Federal Government had appropriated little or no money and had given but slight encouragement to road building.

The first Committee on Roads in the House consisted of 22 members, only 5 of whom are Members of this House, namely: ASWELL, of Louisiana; BROWNE, of Wisconsin; SHREVE, of Pennsylvania; WOODRUFF, of Michigan; and DOUGHTON, of North Carolina, which shows how rapidly the membership of Congress changes.

When Congress first embarked upon the policy of assisting and cooperating with the States in construction of the great State and national highways the most optimistic advocates of the policy did not hope nor even dream of the phenomenal success that has been achieved in so short a time.

The money expended by the Federal Government for road building has done more to bring happiness, prosperity, and contentment to all sections of the country and all classes, callings, professions, and conditions of life than any similar investment.

It has been the wise policy of Congress to make these authorizations a year or two in advance of the actual appropriation in order that the various States could make their plans and know just the amount of help they would receive from the Federal Government.

At the time the Government adopted this policy few of the States had made anything like adequate provision for a systematic and complete system of highways. Now every State in the Union has a State highway department that is functioning successfully.

In 1915 the total amount expended by all the States of the Union for road building was only $54,884,000, while in 1925 it had jumped to the colossal sum of about $600,000,000.

In North Carolina, the State that I have been commissioned to represent in part, there had been practically nothing done in the way of road construction up to the time the Federal Government began its activities, but immediately upon the action taken by Congress, our State, under the progressive administration of Governor Morrison, provided for a State highway commission and for a division of the State into highway districts with a commissioner for each district and with a chairman who was to devote his entire time to road matters. Provisions were also made for raising the revenue with which to carry out the provisions of the law and meet the requirements of the Federal Government.

We realized at the outset if we only proceeded on a 50-50 basis with the Federal Government that this would be too slow and satisfactory results would be too long delayed. Therefore, our legislature in 1921 provided for issuing $50,000,000 in bonds for road construction. Hon. Frank Page, one of the most successful business men of our State, was selected as the chairman of our State highway commission, and his most unusual success in handling road affairs attracted the attention of the entire country, giving him a national reputation. So conspicuous was his success in this respect that he has been elected president of the American Association of State Highway Officials.

Subsequent legislatures of our State have provided for raising additional amounts, totaling $85,000,000, and we have received from the Federal Government up to this moment $12,653,102, and there has been allocated or authorized for our State out of past authorizations by the Federal Government $15,717,206, leaving still due North Carolina $3,064,104.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I notice in passing through North Carolina a number of fine roads. I want to ask the gentleman if they have been built in recent years.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Practically all since January, 1921, when we first created our State highway department and authorized the first appropriation for carrying forward the work. We have now a system of highways reaching from the mountains to the sea and from Virginia to South Carolina. All sections of our State are connected with a modern system of up-to-date, dependable, all-the-year-round State highways that bless, benefit, and uplift everyone who lives within the borders of the State.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman how the State of North Carolina raised the money, whether by bond issue?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The State raised the money by pledging its credit or by the issuance of bonds. To take care of the interest on the bonds and for other purposes we have levied a tax on gasoline and licenses for motor vehicles, but without one dollar ad valorem or tax on personal property.

Mr. ROUSE. How much does the State raise by the gasoline tax?

Mr. DOUGHTON. For the year 1924 the amount raised from the tax on gasoline was $4,529,048 and for licenses $4,757,029, or a total of $9,286,077; and for 1925 the amount raised from the tax on gasoline was $6,092,378 and from licenses $5,413,846, or a total of $11,506,254. It is estimated that for 1926 we will receive a total amount from gas and licenses of approximately $13,250,000.

Mr. ROUSE. How much is the tax on gasoline?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Four cents a gallon. I do not believe our State would have submitted to a system of property taxation for road-building purposes. The amount raised as aforesaid gives us sufficient funds to pay the interest on the road bonds issued and a sinking fund sufficient for the retirement of the bonds at maturity, also for the maintenance of the roads and for the administration of the highway law. The system has worked most admirably and to the unanimous satisfaction of the people of the State. On good roads the life of an automobile is twice as long as it was before the roads were improved. A gallon of gasoline will propel a car twice as far on good roads as on bad roads, to say nothing of the strain that is taken off one's religion, and the driver of a car is in no danger of falling from grace in our State. [Laughter.]

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Certainly.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The gentleman has been making an interesting statement, and I would like to know the road mileage they have in North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The amount of hard-surface roads completed is 1,832 miles; other types of improved roads, such as gravel, and so forth, 2,615 miles; and we have under construction at the present time hard-surface roads 498 miles and other types 418 miles.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. What mileage has the State built without Federal aid?

Mr. DOUGHTON. We have built a large percentage of it without Federal aid. We have received in round numbers $15,000,000 from the Federal Government and have expended approximately $85,000,000 of State funds, or a total expenditure for road construction of $100,000,000, only about 15 per cent of which has come from the Federal Treasury. This does not take into account the roads built by the counties but only the State and national system.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Does the gentleman have at hand the amount of his State's bonded indebtedness for roads?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Eighty-five million dollars.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. And have the counties in addition to that made bond issues for the same purpose?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Many of them have built a system of county roads for which they have issued bonds.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Are all the county roads under State supervision?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The county roads are not. The State system or interstate roads all belong to the State system and are maintained by the State.

Mr. PEERY. Did I understand the gentleman to take the position that the only way to get a State highway system was through the medium of a bond issue?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Oh, no. I said I believed that was the only way we could have succeeded in our State, and our success has been most wonderful, attracting the attention not only of all the other States of the Union but of the entire world. I do not, of course, mean to pass on what is best for other States in respect to this matter. In their wisdom they work out their own salvation.

Mr. PEERY. I think that is a matter for each State. Without any criticism for North Carolina, let me say that we are getting a splendid highway system in Virginia, and we are doing it without resorting to bond issue.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I compliment the gentleman and I congratulate his State. I made no suggestions nor intimation as to what was best for other States. I will say this, however: When one goes out of North Carolina into Virginia or Tennessee or into any of the other States that border ours, he is always proud and thankful to get back into our own State and on our own good roads.

No State is more fortunate than North Carolina in its neighbors, and we are proud of them all. A finer galaxy of States surrounds no State in the Union than South Carolina, Georgia, Virginia, and Tennessee, "our beloved daughter with which we are well pleased."

However, I have noticed when meeting with citizens from any one of the aforementioned States that when interrogated as to where they live they will usually or frequently tell you one of four things: That they were raised in North Carolina, that their ancestors moved from North Carolina, that they married in North Carolina, or that they live right near the North Carolina line. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREENWOOD. Is any of the money raised by the gasoline tax allocated to the county?

Mr. DOUGHTON. No; but there is not a county in my State that does not receive the benefit of this fund, because our system of highways reaches from county seat to county seat and from principal town to principal town throughout the entire State.

The $690,000,000 that has been authorized and apportioned to the various States by the Federal Government since 1917, when the first authorization was made, has not only been a great direct benefit to the States of the Union but the indirect benefit has been even greater. It has acted as an incentive and stimulus to the people of the various States to help themselves and encouraged by this Federal assistance they have created highway commissions, employed the most efficient road officials, engineers, and so forth, thereby bringing into action the most potential forces for road building of both the State and Federal Governments.

Our Nation and every State and section thereof has been uplifted educationally, industrially, and socially by the building of this splendid system of highways, and it has done more in every way to promote the general uplift and public welfare than any other one governmental agency.

"Finally, brethren," let us not forget that it was under a Democratic administration that this great movement was inaugurated, and it was a Democratic Congress that wrote the first practical, effective national highway law and made the appropriations necessary to carry out the same. "Lest we forget," it should also be remembered along with our good road law came through the Democratic Party the Federal reserve system, the farm loan law, the parcels post law, and the farm demonstration law. The condition of the farmer is bad enough as it is, but what would it have been had it not been for this constructive and helpful legislation? The picture is too dark to even contemplate.

I am supporting the pending legislation with an Abrahamian faith that it will be money wisely spent; that it will promote the public welfare and add to the prosperity, contentment, and happiness of all sections of the country and all conditions of life. [Applause.]

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS]. [Applause.]

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, this bill authorizes the appropriation by Congress of the sum of $75,000,000 for each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1928, and June 30, 1929, as Federal aid for the construction of highways under the act of Congress approved July 11, 1916, and subsequent enactments amendatory thereof, and the additional sum for each of said years of $7,500,000 for forest roads and trails.

I am very much interested in this legislation. I regard such legislation as an investment. I frequently refer to it as a productive appropriation, in that it results in beneficial returns. I would favor larger financial contributions on behalf of the Federal Government.

Under the terms of the act as amended not more than 2½ per cent may be used for administrative purposes in the city of Washington and $73,125,000 of the sum appropriated is distributed among the several States on the basis of area, population, and mileage of rural mail delivery and star routes.

Under this distribution the State of Oklahoma receives the sum of $1,755,105.

A great impetus has been given to road building since the first good roads bill was enacted on July 11, 1916. I was glad to give that bill my support. It was assailed at the time on the ground that it was unconstitutional, but the constitutionality of such legislation is now generally conceded, and its constitutionality has been sustained by all courts where it has been assailed. There is authority in the Constitution to provide for the common defense and general welfare, and authority is given to establish post offices and post roads, and we are also authorized to regulate commerce among the several States so that under any of these provisions the constitutionality of the Federal Government contributing financially to road building may be successfully defended.

The advantages of good roads being so universally conceded and admitted, it is not now a controversial subject for discussion. The history of good roads legislation, however, is interesting.

Our first appropriation was in aid of the Cumberland Road and was approved by Thomas Jefferson on March 29, 1806, in the sum of $30,000. This road was projected from Cumberland, Md., on the headwaters of the Potomac River, west to a point on the Mississippi River. Appropriations were made from time to time for a number of years, the last appropriation for that purpose being made May 25, 1838, and was in the sum of $159,000.

New Jersey claims credit for the first State highway commission, which was established in 1891. In the year 1915 31 of the 48 States had highway departments. To-day all of the States have such departments. The total expenditures on all kinds of roads in 1915 were $240,263,784. In the year 1925 the sum of $1,176,000,000 was expended. These figures indicate the very great interest which all classes of citizens are taking in road construction. At an early date not enough consideration was given to road maintenance. It is now recognized as a necessity. True, the cost of maintenance is greatly lessened upon the more expensive roads, but it is recognized that a maintenance fund must be provided for.

It is estimated that there will be expended during the year 1926 the sum of $1,030,286,948. My own State of Oklahoma, though new, is alive to the necessity of road construction and maintenance. The roads, particularly in the eastern part of the State, upon our admission to Statehood in 1907, were in a very bad condition, due to the fact that the lands had but recently been surveyed and that they were Indian lands and nontaxable. We have made remarkable progress. We have a splendid highway department, officered by men of exceptional ability, and all known to be good-road enthusiasts. It is estimated that there will be spent in our State during the calendar year of 1926 the sum of $22,000,000 for the construction and maintenance of good roads.

The question of financing road construction and maintenance is a serious one with each of the several States. Most of them have resorted to a motor-vehicle tax, a gasoline tax, a gross-production tax in those States where oil and gas is produced, and an ad valorem tax. Through the courtesy of the very efficient secretary of the State Highway Commission of the State of Oklahoma, I am advised that the sources of road finance are as follows:

(a) A motor-vehicle tax based upon the manufacturers' list price of the vehicle. In 1925 this tax averaged $10.53 per vehicle, including motor cycles, trucks, tractors, and automobiles of all characters. This tax is divided 40 per cent to the State highway construction and maintenance fund, and 60 per cent goes back to the counties from which it came, and out of this 60 per cent cities and incorporated towns get 15 per cent of the total vehicle tax collected within their corporate limits. The total of this tax in 1925 was $4,570,572.45.

(b) A 3 cent per gallon gasoline tax. This tax is collected through the State auditor from the jobbers and wholesalers and is apportioned one-third to the counties upon the ratio of their area and population. The other two-thirds goes into the State highway construction and maintenance fund for the maintenance and construction of State highways. In 1925 the total tax collected from this source was $5,374,858.92.

(c) One-sixth of the gross production tax collected in each county is returned to the road fund of that county, and in 1925 41 counties participated in this fund, there being divided among them $1,503,112.42. No portion of this fund goes into the State highway fund.

(d) The State levies a quarter mill State tax for road purposes, which is returned to the counties from which it is collected, to be used upon the county highways. No portion of this tax reaches the State highway fund. During 1925 the sum of $428,479.32 was derived from this source.

(e) The counties, through their county excise boards levy an ad valorem tax for roads and bridges, all of which goes to county and township highways. During 1925 the sum of $4,111,914.02 was derived from this source.

(f) The townships also levy an ad valorem tax for roads, which is expended exclusively upon township highways, and during 1925 the sum of $3,161,456.21 was derived from this source.

(g) There is also a provision in our statutes for a poll tax. This section of the law, however, is enforced in some parts of the State, and wholly neglected in others, and the record of its collection is so incomplete and difficult of compilation that about all we can do is estimate receipts. However I feel safe in advising you that at least $500,000 per year is raised in this manner, and all of this is expended either under direction of the county commissioners or the township officials.

(h) Our Federal aid fund, which is handled exclusively under the jurisdiction of the State highway commission, in 1925 amounted to $1,755,105.

In addition to the above there has been voted during the past few years approximately $30,000,000 in the aggregate in township, county, and bridge bonds.

The act of November 9, 1921, provided that the nontaxable unappropriated public lands in excess of 5 per cent should be taken into consideration in the contribution by the Federal Government for road construction.

In 1924 I introduced a bill, H. R. 8885, and it became section 4 of the act of February 12, 1925, placing nontaxable Indian lands in the same class with nontaxable unappropriated public lands. This section is now permanent law. This provision is of greater importance to the State of Oklahoma than to any of the other States, for the reason that we have more nontaxable Indian lands in our State than in any other. The advantages of this provision to Oklahoma are apparent when it is known that in order to match the $1,755,105 Federal aid which the State receives Oklahoma is required to pay the sum of $1,415,000.

The more important transcontinental highways and those connecting the larger trade centers are receiving the first consideration, and the money thus far expended, contributed by the Federal Government, has been largely in aid of those roads. Aid to the lateral roads will follow. We must begin somewhere. If the Federal and State aid money is exclusively expended upon State highways, local money expended under the supervision of the county commissioners may be used in the construction of lateral roads leading into the centers of trade and State highways.

I think the money collected for road construction and maintenance is more cheerfully paid by the people of the country than any other tax. A system of State and National highways is being mapped out and the benefits of good roads are in evidence on every hand. This is one form of legislation that is indorsed by all classes, those who live in the cities and towns, and those in the country, and it can not be subject to the criticism that it is class legislation. The people are entitled to and have a right to expect full value for every dollar expended.

It is rapidly developing the rural sections of our country, making the lands more valuable, giving to the farmers better roads over which to carry their farm products to market, and thereby lessening the cost of such transportation, and the cheaper they can get their products to market the greater the net return will be received by them. It enables the farmer with his motor transportation to market his vegetables, dairy products, fruit, and poultry regularly and with little expense; it gives him rural mail facilities equal to the mail service received by those living in the cities and towns, and enables him to keep up with current events and market quotations; it makes possible better school facilities to the people in the country, thereby enabling their children to remain under the influence of home life and to be transported to district schools where better educational facilities are possible, and better church advantages, because distance is largely eliminated and the people of greater areas are enabled to assemble in larger congregations. Good roads are a necessity to the business men with modern motor transportation.

From the standpoint of recreation, improved highways enable the people of the cities and towns to spend enjoyable week ends in the country and it brings all classes of the people in sympathy with each other because they learn to know each other better.

I very greatly regret that the amount authorized as Federal aid is not very much larger. We are criticized with being too liberal in our expenditures for nonproductive appropriations. I think this criticism is in a large measure just. We are spending during the coming fiscal year very large sums of money for the maintenance of the Government, through its many departments and bureaus. We are making debt settlements, remitting to foreign governments very large sums of money. As compared with the British settlement we lose in the Italian debt settlement the sum of $2,565,013,500. I spoke and voted against it. Suppose this amount of money were used in aid of road construction. It would enable us to improve and develop to a very great extent practically every highway throughout the country and would add greatly to the happiness and prosperity of our people.

I have repeatedly stated that I favor liberal appropriations for the internal development of our country, including good roads, rural credits, rural mail, farm legislation, and reclamation of swamp and overflow lands. We should aid our own people before we give too lavishly to dictators across the sea to finance revolutions, to pay the expenses of large standing armies, and enable them to menace the peace of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, on account of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Woon] desiring to present a matter of conference, I desire at this time to ask that the committee rise, and I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TRINCHER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 9504, had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 6730. An act to detach Fulton County from the Jonesboro division of the eastern judicial district of the State of Arkansas and attach the same to the Batesville division of the eastern judicial district of said State; and

H. R. 9398. An act to amend an act regulating the height of buildings in the District of Columbia, approved June 1, 1910.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to Senate amendments Nos. 1 and 5 to the independent offices appropriation bill and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title. The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9341) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House further insist on its disagreement of Senate amendments Nos. 1 and 5 and agree to the conference asked.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will announce the conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WOOD, Mr. WASON, and Mr. SANDLIN.

PULLMAN SURCHARGE

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, the Pullman surcharge has come to be regarded by the public as such an onerous and irritating practice that I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, the Pullman surcharge has come to be regarded by the public as an onerous and irritating exaction for the imposition of which there is no justification. It was first instituted, although under a different name, and swallowed patriotically by the public, by the Hon. William G. McAdoo, then Director General of Railroads, as a war measure for the purpose of curtailing travel. Save for this purpose it would never have originated, and in consonance with this purpose it was removed directly after the armistice. It was reinstated by the Interstate Commerce Commission in the Increased Rates, 1920, case, though not requested by the carriers when that case was originally instituted. The carriers insist that this surcharge must be maintained for the present and indefinitely in the future in the face of experience and justice, although it is a war-time measure unsupportable now.

The railroads in 1900 paid the Pullman Co. $1,990,707 mileage charges and received no payment at all from the Pullman Co. In about 1905 the contracts with the Pullman Co. were altered. Mileage payments made by the carriers in 1922 were but $473,496. On the other hand the contract revenues paid the railroads rose from zero in 1900 and $142,908 in 1905, to $11,616,866 in 1920, and after the surcharge were $8,241,813 in 1921 and $7,930,064 in 1922. Without going back to the time when the railroad companies were contented to receive no extra revenue from the Pullman Co. from that traffic, but instead to pay the Pullman Co. for the privilege of using its cars, it may be noted that the percentages of the total Pullman revenues received by the railroads were, in 1915, 6.95 per cent; in 1916, 6.67 per cent; in 1917, 8.99 per cent; an average of 7.53 per cent; were in 1920, 13.68 per cent; in 1921, 11.61 per cent; in 1922, 10.90 per cent; an average of 12.06 per cent. In addition the Pullman revenues themselves in these last three years were 20 per cent greater for each passenger mile because of the 20 per cent increase in Pullman rates in 1920. Thus in 1920, 1921, and 1922, without the surcharge, the railroads received 192.19 per cent of the amount derived by them in 1915, 1916, and 1917, from every mile of Pullman travel. This percentage is obtained by dividing the average for 1915, 1916, and 1917, i. e., 7.53 per cent, into the average for 1920, 1921, 1922, i. e., 12.05 per cent, and multiplying the quotient by 1.20 per cent to account for the increase in Pullman revenue per passenger mile.

Long after the hearings in Increased Rates, 1920, had begun, the surcharge not having been among their original demands for increases, the brilliant idea occurred to the carriers that Pullman traffic could afford them additional revenue of many millions of dollars a year, to be obtained by increasing the Pullman charges, previously unquestioned by them, 50 per cent for the benefit of the carriers, in addition to the share of Pullman revenues they were already receiving.

The carriers wanted all they could get and what source was more logical than the Pullman passenger as to whom a precedent was found ready made in the calm way he had borne such a charge during the war. What if the railroads had for many years found no objection to the much lesser sums received by them from the Pullman Co. What if they had at one time been content to pay the Pullman Co. without receiving any compensation in addition to the ordinary fare. What if, under their peculiar contracts with the Pullman Co., they were already deriving from the Pullman passenger enormously more in 1920 than they had before the war. Here the war-time precedent opened to them a new source of revenue and they determined to draw on it. They have, without the surcharge, been reaping during the last three years almost twice the revenue, about 192 per cent, they were satisfied with in the three years preceding Federal control, not to make a comparison with the years before that. With the surcharge they have increased their profits from the use of Pullman facilities nearly tenfold, to be exact 98 per cent of their average profits per passenger mile in 1915, 1916, and 1917 from this source. This percentage is obtained by dividing the average for 1915, 1916, and 1917; that is, 7.53 per cent into the surcharge percentage of Pullman revenues; that is, 50, and multiplying the quotient by 1.2 per cent to account for increase in Pullman revenue per passenger mile, the result being 796.81 per cent, to which is added 192.19 per cent, representing the relation of contract revenue in the two periods, giving a total of 989 per cent as the relation of the amount taken by the carrier for Pullman facilities in 1920, 1921, and 1922 to that taken by them in 1915, 1916, and 1917 per passenger mile.

CARRIERS' CONTENTIONS

The carriers are obliged, of course, to offer some reasons for the continuance of a war charge in peace times. They contend that they have never made the return on investment allowed under the Esch-Cummins law by the Interstate Commerce Commission, that the cost of Pullman service is greater to them because they carry extra weight for Pullman passengers, since the cars are heavier and the passengers per car fewer, and that they are rendering an added service to the public.

The data adduced as to this matter is of great volume. This résumé consequently must be confined to some of the more salient features. It is impossible in this space to point out the fallacies of much specious or irrelevant data tending to obscure the main issues. More detailed discussion can readily be given if occasion warrants. The matters of fact stated herein where they are not of common knowledge are from the testimony and exhibits before the Interstate Commerce Commission, to which we shall be glad to give particular reference where same is requested.

CONTENTIONS OF THE PUBLIC—ALLEGED DEFICIENCY OF GENERAL REVENUE

The carriers admit that in the first four months of this year their return was 5.49 per cent as against the allowed return of 5.75 per cent. In making this computation the factor allowed for the usual great increase of business in the last six months of any year over the first six months is questionable.

The operating expenses upon which the showing of return is based do not allow for the abnormal expenses incurred by taking up the undermaintenance during Federal control, for which the carriers have made immense claims and toward which great sums of money have been paid them by the Government, nor does the showing of 5.49 per cent make allowance for accrued depreciation in investment and other matters unnecessary to refer to here. It is sufficient to say, without impugning the percentage set up by the carriers and accepting for the moment the figures furnished by them, that no showing whatever is made of the return on investment devoted to passenger service nor of the return on investment devoted to Pullman service. This claim of alleged deficiency in revenue leaves out of account entirely that if there were any deficiency that is no justification in itself for making up the shortage from a single class of patrons. The carriers can not ignore the accepted principle that each service must stand on its own bottom and pay its own way, so far as the traffic will bear it.

LOSS TO CARRIERS INCURRED BY SURCHARGE

But even if we assume that there is a deficiency in return on investment and that it should be made up from one class of travel it must be apparent that the railroads lose more revenue than they gain by the surcharge. It is claimed by the carriers that Pullman traffic since the surcharge has increased somewhat more than coach traffic, but this claim does not take into account the fact admitted by them that travel in automobiles and busses has had a greater effect in depleting short-haul coach travel than Pullman travel; that ever since its inception many years ago Pullman travel has increased at a much greater rate than coach travel; that since the surcharge new opportunities for Pullman travel have been afforded by great increases in Pullman facilities, simultaneous with a reduction of coach facilities; that Pullman traffic would have increased in a much greater ratio had the surcharge not been imposed.

The outstanding and inescapable fact is that in the first year following the surcharge there was a decrease of 2,271,731,566 Pullman revenue passenger miles as compared with the year immediately preceding; that in the next year—that is, the last four months of 1921 and the first eight months of 1922—there was a further decrease of 953,488,724 Pullman revenue passenger miles, or a deficiency for such year as against the year immediately preceding the surcharge of 3,225,202,290 Pullman revenue passenger miles; that is, a total loss for the two years immediately following the surcharge as against the year preceding its institution of almost five and one-half billion Pullman revenue passenger miles. Moreover, the last four months of 1922 and the first four months of 1923 show a deficiency of 1,220,700,886 Pullman revenue passenger miles as against the same eight months of 1919 and 1920. The very first month of the operation of the surcharge was marked by a loss of 216,930,643 Pullman revenue passenger miles as against the last month preceding its inception.

Every Pullman revenue passenger mile lost means a loss of 3.6 cents to the railroads, not to speak of the additional loss to them of the contract revenues they would have derived from the Pullman Co. The very revenue they claim to need would be more than provided by the removal of the surcharge instead of by its continuance, and at the same time added service would be furnished the public.

EXTRA COSTS OF PULLMAN SERVICE—ERRORS IN CARRIERS' DATA

The carriers contend that the average Pullman car weighs approximately 110,000 pounds for the country as a whole. They have further attempted to show that taking the United States as a whole the average occupancy in Pullman cars is 12.82 passengers per car-mile, and the average occupancy in coaches is 15.88 passengers per car-mile, and from those figures it is calculated that the weight hauled per Pullman passenger is 11,310 pounds, while that per coach passenger is 6,927 pounds.

As against these figures of the western carriers for the country as a whole, the eastern and southern carriers have made certain tests of one week's duration on roads and trains selected by them in their districts, showing in the South somewhat greater divergence and in the East much less divergence in the weight of cars than the data above mentioned, while in both the South and East the tests show entirely different figures for occupancy with a very much larger excess of coach over Pullman occupancy than is shown by the data of the western carriers for the United States. Because travel fluctuates from month to month and even more so from week to week, because the road and car mileages chosen in these tests are totally insufficient and unrepresentative, as well as for many other reasons, which a detailed analysis makes apparent, it is not unfair to say that these tests present an unfounded selection and combination of figures, patently lacking in significance, rather than an earnest and enlightening statistical analysis, and are not entitled to any probative force whatever.

Like criticism can be made of the statistics offered by the carriers upon which their conclusions as to dead weights are based for the country as a whole; it is sufficient to say that the data submitted by them as to weight and occupancy of cars is merely a guess, and one shown on its face to be incorrect. For the assert that they have not and can not obtain, just as they did not obtain in the tests, comparative weight of Pullman cars and coaches on a mileage basis; that the weights they rely on are simply lump averages of the weights of certain cars selected by them without regard to the amount of use of the various classes of equipment included in the average. In other words, in getting the average weight of coaches and Pullman cars they have, for example, taken weights of old-fashioned light coaches that are used but seldom, if at all; they have taken the lighter-weight coaches on smaller lines and given them as much or more influence in arriving at the average than the heavier coaches on lines having greater road mileage and operations, in some instances many times greater.

They admit further that they have not accurately excluded heavy commutation occupancy from the coach occupancy in comparing it with the Pullman. Although the capacity of Pullman cars is not as great as that of coaches, it must be remembered that their capacity can be utilized to a much greater extent, because it is possible to require reservations in advance. More important, however, the carriers' guess leaves out of account the fact that almost every coach ordered in recent years, and especially those used in the same general distance operations as Pullman equipment, have been of steel practically as heavy as Pullman cars, so that the carriers justify the continuance of this rate in the future upon conditions which are obsolete. Again, they omit the fact that Pullman occupancy would almost surely be much greater if the operation of wasteful and unnecessary Pullman trains and cars for the sake of competition with other lines were eliminated. The existence of this wasteful competition, because of which the carriers operate duplicating and superfluous trains between the same points in order that other lines may not obtain the business, is now made the basis for justifying this increased rate. Moreover, they omit to consider that Pullman occupancy would be much greater if the surcharge were removed. Before the surcharge the occupancy of Pullman cars was higher by several passengers per car-mile than it is to-day; and it is admitted that where the surcharge does not prevent people from traveling altogether, it tends at least to drive them from the Pullman into the coach, and thus to create the very divergency in occupancy given as the reason for its existence.

ADVANTAGES TO THE RAILROADS OF PULLMAN TRAVEL—SAVINGS TO THE RAILROADS

In considering the claim of extra expense the carriers neglect to remind us that they do not own the cars in which the Pullman passengers ride, nor do they mention that they do not even maintain them, and that in the eastern district the Pullman Co. also bears a great preponderance of the operating expenses.

This represents a saving to the roads of great amounts in interest on investment, maintenance, and operating expenses, in addition to the taxes paid by the Pullman Co., all of which the carriers themselves have to pay in the operation of coaches, not to speak of the revenue they derive under their contracts with the Pullman Co., amounting to $27,788,743.65 in 1920, 1921, and 1922. Moreover, the Pullman Co., by supplying cars, as it must under the contracts, as and when demanded by the roads, enables them to take care of flexible demands and peak business which would otherwise be lost without a large additional investment in cars that would in normal times lie idle.

APPORTIONMENT OF OTHER EXPENSES

But, laying aside this most important element for a moment, the expense of railroad operations does not at all vary in direct proportion as the dead weight per passenger. Purely from the standpoint of distributing the common expenses incurred between coach and Pullman service, the Pullman has features tending to make it much cheaper for the railroads than coach service. The enormous terminal expenses can not be properly divided according to dead weight, but only according to the number of passengers using the terminals. Since the Pullman traveler makes an average journey about ten times as long as that of the average passenger, not only the large terminals but intermediate short-interval stations are maintained chiefly for the coach passenger. Wear and tear on roadbed and even fuel consumption, which is the item most directly affected by weight hauled, are largely governed by the number of stops and starts made, and there can be no doubt from the average length of journey that many more of these are made for the sake of coach passengers than for Pullman. Again, Pullman passengers move chiefly in the heavier lanes of traffic, where train occupancy is greater and more trains pass over the rails, thus netting more revenue to the carriers on their investment than coach traffic.

For while it is true that goodly portions of coach travel also move in the heavier lanes, in general coach traffic must have attributed to it the heavy investment and maintenance expenses of roadbed and facilities, with the comparatively small returns of the light lanes of travel. In other words, not nearly as much investment and expense per passenger is required for the Pullman traveler as for the average coach traveler. This is the first time that the carriers have attempted to justify a rate upon weight and occupancy. In other matters involving passenger rates the carriers have endeavored to allocate to the service for which a rate is made the expenses reasonably incident to that service.

VALUE OF PULLMAN PATRONAGE

The most glaring fallacy in the carriers' theory for the surcharge is the failure to consider the fact that Pullman travel because of the long distances made, approximately ten times as great as that for the average passenger, is the most valuable type of patronage to the railroads and that from which they make the greatest net return. Of course, the carriers must admit that, although Pullman facilities are a benefit to the public, without them passenger transportation would be enormously curtailed. Moreover, the fact that Pullman travel is in great preponderance night traffic, relieves daytime facilities of the carriers and makes it possible for them to use their property 24 hours a day. This furnishes the carriers an immensely greater return on investment, even assuming that all this night travel would be transferred to the daytime. So, even if there were any extra weight per passenger, which, as already pointed out, is not the fact and not supported by any probative data, and ignoring the features involved in Pullman service which are most advantageous to the carriers, as shown before, what the surcharge really does is to make the passenger—and the most valuable passenger to the railroads from a revenue standpoint—pay extra for the very things that are of extraordinary benefit to the carrier.

If there were real merit in the contention of the carriers that the Pullman passenger costs them more than the coach passenger, is it possible to believe that they would not have made appropriate provision for this condition in their contracts with the Pullman Co.? For many years they were satisfied with immensely less than they now receive without the surcharge and at one time even paid the Pullman Co. for the privilege of using its facilities. The surcharge was an afterthought, proposed not even at the outset but long after the inception of the hearings in Increased Rates 1920, and it is inconceivable that the carriers during all these years have forgotten this item of $33,000,000 annually.

The theories advanced by the carriers are the specious and superficial arguments usually put forward where real reasons are lacking to justify an obsolete precedent.

GOOD ROADS BILL

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9504.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9504, with Mr. TRISCHER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9504, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9504) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOPER].

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Chairman, it has been demonstrated already by the debate upon this bill that infinite good has been accomplished by the aid extended by the Federal Government to the States in the building of good roads. It is apparent that the membership of the House is in practical unanimity upon the proposition that the legislation under discussion is of vital importance to the Nation. It is apparent also that the discussion is one in which partisanship has no place.

Civilization marches with no uncertain step along good roads. They are the insignia of progress. They knit together communities isolated before; they bring town and country into closer and more harmonious relations. They permit to millions of our people pleasures and privileges never enjoyed by their ancestors.

Good roads are bringers of enlightenment. The various sections of our country are known to each other to-day as never before, because of the advent of the automobile and the good road. The nation whose people are able, as they are to-day, to travel in comfort over its highways is far more fortunate than the nation of yesterday, when the absence of good means of communication tended to provincialism and to jealousy and suspicion of those living in other sections.

Good roads are educational, because travel is educational. The hundreds of thousands who annually visit our great national parks, now that the automobile and the good road have made travel easy, must of necessity always afterwards be better citizens of their country, because they realize better than before its vast extent and the manifold wonders it holds.

The good road of to-day and of the future will do much toward making our Nation a compact and harmonious whole; much toward increasing the happiness and prosperity of our people in all sections of the country; and I am glad that our committee has reported a bill which seems to meet with such hearty approval from the membership of this House. The substantial aid given by the Federal Government to the activities of the States will surely have beneficent results for many years to come, not only in material ways, but in a happier and a more enlightened people. [Applause.]

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON].

Mr. ALMON. And I, Mr. Chairman, yield 10 additional minutes to the gentleman from Utah.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, Pat had been making a trip through the West, and when he returned he was asked what he thought of the roads. He replied: "Mr. Lincoln did a good job in making his road; Mr. Dixie did a good job in making his road; but, begorry, Detour, that Frenchman, made a miserable job of it." [Laughter.] We are engaged in a great program to eliminate detours in American roads.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, at the risk of being sentimental I am going to call your attention this afternoon to a phase of this question that appeals to me very strongly. History records how strangely the development of transportation and civilization are interwoven. When Rome prospered, when the Empire of Rome was at its height, it had its great Appian highway, connecting every part of that great empire. Every civilized nation has had a great system of transportation. We are told that the South American countries to-day feel that the lack of highway transportation is responsible for the slow development of those countries and of their great resources. We are all agreed that the basic unit of civilization, after all, is the home; the best asset that any nation has is a contented, happy people—a home-building people. [Applause.]

There are at least four great aids to the building of happy homes in this or any other country—four great pillars: The schools, the churches, the press, and the State. The highway systems are the arteries of the country by which these great aids are taken to the homes. The consolidation of our public-school system has been made possible because of better transportation. Horace Mann builded better than he expected when he led the fight for the public schools of America. Those schools are developing faster than even he dreamed they would develop. They are developing rapidly in every part of the land—the country boy and the city boy are put on an equality. This can be done only where there are consolidated schools, and consolidated schools are only possible in the rural districts where there are good roads.

The churches of our land are doing their part in the development of this great civilization of ours. Gentlemen, you need only to get people of various religious beliefs together and you get tolerance as a result of that coming together. We need to know each other better. When we do know each other, then the spirit of tolerance in religious belief is found, and where there is no social mingling together you will usually find religious intolerance. Good roads usually mean social development. And so by means of transportation this great pillar of civilization—the church—is enabled to better perform its function in the great scheme of things.

The press: We need an enlightened public opinion. Nothing brings that about like the daily papers, the magazines, that are brought to the very door of the inhabitants of this country. Good roads are always conducive to better understanding and react to the social and economic advantage of all the people.

And last, may I speak of the State? I come from a section of the country in the great West where we knew the old-time outlaw. We know him no more. The outlaw of the early West has been superseded by the automobile outlaw of the city. The outlaw of the West is a thing of the past, largely because we have access now to parts of the country heretofore not accessible. The old-time outlaw, gentlemen, is a thing of the past, largely because of the improved transportation system.

In my State, where we have but a little over a half million inhabitants, we have over 24,000 miles of highways. Sixteen hundred miles of that highway have been improved, and much of it either paved or graveled. Six hundred miles of that has received Federal aid. A thousand miles additional have been done by the people of my State. Sections of the great West that were heretofore inaccessible have been brought in contact with the later civilization. It is impossible for the old-time condition to obtain. The State is able to function. Lawlessness in the old form has passed away, and I am constrained to believe that if you could solve the problem of transportation in the cities as well as we have solved it in the country our wet friends would not need to worry so much about lawlessness. [Applause.] If the officers of the law could pursue the criminals in our cities as they can in the country, there would be less bootlegging. Perhaps our wet friends could aid the enforcement of the law by giving attention to the traffic problem. Let them think more of this and less of wine and beer.

Now, gentlemen, I want to make one other point before concluding: Out in that section of the country we are still unable to build all of the roads that we want. Our country in certain sections is so sparsely settled that it is impossible for the people to build the necessary connecting links in the great primary system. A bill is pending before this Congress, which I introduced and which I hope soon to see reported out, that will enable the Federal Government to concentrate the funds that will be allotted to a particular State, and no more, in completing those links. The people are willing in many cases to sacrifice their comfort by postponing the work on county and secondary roads and permitting the Government to build where it is impossible for the State to do it. The States are now doing all they reasonably can do, and the Federal Government must help. The general welfare requires that we help connect the towns and homes of our people and make it possible to enjoy the benefit of their churches and the benefit of their schools and to give an equal chance to the boy on the farm and on the ranch with the boy in the city. Let them share alike schools and all other educational opportunities.

It is for this reason that we are so earnest and anxious for this program to be continued. We want our people to be enlightened; we want to have an enlightened public opinion. We want our States to enforce the laws and let our people understand that the happiness of our homes is dependent upon obedience to law and order. Teach the people correct principles, and they will govern themselves. Education will bring obedience to law.

If you will continue this plan as it has been commenced until this great system is completed and until you have brought the means of transportation to American home builders, you will aid in preserving the institutions of America and our great traditions will be perpetuated and made safe. I believe in the continuity of American institutions and American ideals; and if we are anxious to continue them, I say the United States Government can do much toward bringing about that happy condition by continuing this great road-building program. [Applause.]

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. LEATHERWOOD].

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to present to the committee certain facts and statistics relative to the disposition of our public lands and disbursements from the Treasury of the United States to the several States. This is not done in order to raise any controversial question as between the several States with reference to the policy of the Government in furnishing aid for the construction of roads and the reclaiming of arid land in the Western States.

Some opposition has been voiced, from time to time, by Representatives of the older States with reference to the question now under consideration, but I believe, Mr. Chairman, that if we will carefully study the history of the past and fully acquaint ourselves with what has been done for the various States by way of land grants and disbursements from the Treasury of the United States for internal improvements, and other purposes, we will all be more able to discuss the question of Federal-aid projects fairly and impartially.

Most of the criticism that we hear is directed at the so-called arid-land States, and I hope to be able to show that they have not received, and will probably never receive, in public land, or money, anything like the amount that has been given outright to many of the older States.

In the Nation's Business of March, 1926, there appears an article entitled "Let's stop this '50-50' business." The distinguished author of this article follows the same path that has been traveled heretofore by all the critics of reclamation and Federal-aid highways. He does not contribute anything new to the discussion of the question. He bitterly complains that many of the States pay large sums into the Federal Treasury annually and receive but a small share in return. He very properly points out that 25 per cent of the gross revenues from timber sales, grazing privileges, and other uses of the forests, are refunded to the States from which the revenue is derived. Reference is also made to the leasing act of 1920. It is true that 37½ per cent of the royalties, reserved under the above-entitled act, are paid to the States from which the royalty was obtained.

The author of the article might also have noted that 10 per cent of the royalties thus obtained go into the miscellaneous fund of the General Treasury and that 52½ per cent is paid into the reclamation fund. Under the general reclamation law, that fund will ultimately go back into the Treasury for the benefit of all the States. The distinguished author of the article also complains that some of the larger Eastern States are wet-nursing other States; and, of course, he means the arid-land States. He carefully refrains, however, from pointing out to his readers that in most of the arid-land States from 50 to 90 per cent of all of their great natural resources are now impounded for the benefit, largely, of their wet nurses.

In my own State 80 per cent of all the land in the State is in public ownership and most of it will remain indefinitely in such ownership. It never can be taxed for State purposes, but it will contribute from its great natural resources large sums of money for the benefit of the entire country.

In a recent editorial appearing in the Kaysville Reflex, a newspaper published in my district, the editor makes this statement:

In the States east of the Mississippi the people have for themselves, and the States have as taxable property, every ton of coal, every stick of timber, every pound of lead, every water-power site, every perch of stone, every barrel of oil, every foot of natural gas; in fact, everything on the surface of the earth and under the earth, and wharf rights on the shore of the ocean, the lakes, and the rivers.

Let me remind the distinguished author of the above-entitled article that the East was built up by allowing the individual to take advantage of all of the great natural resources, while under the doctrine of conservation the great natural resources of the West are being largely held in trust for the benefit of the entire country.

My own State has had large areas of land allotted to it for school purposes, but under the present policy of the Government much of that land is being taken from the State upon the pretext that it contained known mineral deposits at the time the title was supposed to have passed to the State, and that therefore title never did pass.

I do not want to be understood as opposing the doctrine of conservation, for I am, Mr. Chairman, an ardent conservationist. I want the people of the older States, however, to take this matter under consideration when the question of Federal-aid projects is being discussed.

Let me call your attention to the vast resources of the arid-land States that, under the doctrine of conservation, are now locked up for the benefit of the entire country. I call your attention to page 30 of the annual report of the Secretary of the Interior for the fiscal year 1925. I quote two entire paragraphs for your information:

The United States owns approximately 30,000,000 acres of coal lands with valuable coal deposits of more than 200,000,000,000 tons. It has 500,000 acres of phosphate lands, which can supply 8,000,000,000 tons of this essential fertilizer when it is demanded for American farms. There are 4,000,000 acres of oil shale in the public domain from which possibly 60,000,000,000 barrels of oil can be extracted when prices warrant the higher cost of its development. Before that time, however, there are millions of barrels of oil yet to come from wells on Government land, the amount now being taken from public and Indian lands representing one-tenth of the Nation's annual petroleum production. Already one-twentieth of the coal mined in the public-land States comes from mines operated under Government lease, and 20 per cent of the zinc and 8 per cent of the lead mined in the United States comes from mines on Indian lands under supervision of this department. The public domain also contains hundreds of water-power sites with potential power aggregating 25,000,000 horsepower. There are a dozen or more water-power plants operating now in the United States of greater capacity for developing primary power than the site at Muscle Shoals and an equal number of unused sites of as great possibilities of development.

To safeguard this vast estate for future generations of America and permit its economic development to supply present needs require foresight and administrative skill. Five years ago Congress enacted the general leasing law, which established the system of leasing mineral deposits on public lands to private operators, the Government receiving bonuses and rentals as well as royalties on the minerals produced. At the present time there are outstanding 211 leases on Government coal lands and 422 on oil and gas lands.

From these vast resources the Government will in the future receive many times in revenue what it will expend for Federal-aid roads.

We frequently hear upon the floor of this House criticism directed at the reclamation policy of the Government, particularly where aid is extended and water furnished to lands in private ownership. For illustration, during the Sixty-eighth Congress when the appropriation bill for the Department of the Interior was being considered by the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] made this statement.

But, you know up in my country if a farmer wants a silo or some additional facility on his farm he can go to the Farm Loan Board of the United States and can borrow the money for that purpose. . . .

Why, for an area in private ownership should the Treasury of the United States spend its money, on terms more or less vague and uncertain, to provide these private facilities.

Under the terms of the bill every dollar of money so expended must be returned to the Government, and by the terms of the contract the individual receiving the benefit must give good and ample security as a guaranty for the faithful performance of the contract and the return of the money.

For the information of the gentleman from Michigan let me call his attention to a little bit of history.

The Federal Government has for a number of years cooperated with the State in the protection of State and private timberland from fire. Until the fiscal year 1926 this cooperation was carried on under the authority granted in section 2 of the act of March 1, 1911. Beginning with the fiscal year 1926, this cooperation is based upon the authority granted in sections 1 and 2 of the Clarke-McNary law, approved June 7, 1924. Contributions to the State of Michigan from the forest-fire cooperation appropriation are given below:

1914	$1,564.64
1915	12.00
1916	8,648.00
1917	8,612.00
1918	4,008.00
1919	3,998.50
Fiscal year:
1920	4.00
1921	7,240.00
1922	25,000.00
1923	22,285.92
1924	22,163.87
1925	23,935.00
Total	117,471.93

The above total sum referred to was a gratuity to the State of Michigan and its citizens by the Federal Government. Not one cent of this money is ever to be returned to the Treasury. I do not complain about this expenditure. I think it was a proper expenditure of money; but I want my good friends in Michigan to take this into consideration in discussing the subject of reclamation as it applies to the arid-land States.

I referred a moment ago to the fact that large grants of land have been made from time to time to the several States for internal improvements and educational purposes. Large sums of money were also paid to them out of the Federal Treasury for educational purposes. Many of the States in addition to the above items received aid for their State banks during President Jackson's administration. A considerable portion of this money deposited in the State banks was never returned to the Federal Government. On June 23, 1836, a measure was approved providing for the distribution of the surplus in the Treasury to the several States. This distribution was to commence on January 1, 1837. I will show you a little later the entire amount so distributed to each of the States.

For illustration let us take the States carved out of the Northwest Territory and hastily glance at what they have already received from land grants and funds distributed to them from the Treasury of the United States.

In my own State the minimum price for public land is $5 per acre. That, in most cases, means desert land. If then we figure the value of the land granted to the States of the Northwest Territory at $5 per acre and also the money given to the States out of the Treasury, we find that the State of Indiana has up to January 1, 1925, received $43,511,398.58; Illinois, $35,503,458.03; Ohio, $22,989,848.64; Michigan, $71,325,852.63; and Wisconsin, $57,551,180.26; making a grand total for these five States of $230,981,736.

From the above amounts received by these five States there should be deducted such sums as were repaid to the Government from the deposits made in their State banks, and I will insert in the RECORD a table from which this computation can be made.

Gentlemen of the committee, if you will carefully consider what has been done for the States east of the Mississippi River in the last 100 years I believe you will agree with me that your Government and my Government, whatever it may expend in the arid-land States for Federal-aid roads and reclamation, it will only be doing equity as between the several States. If our great natural resources should be turned over to us, as they were to the people east of the Mississippi River, we could and would build our own roads, reclaim our arid lands, support our schools, and never ask for one cent of Federal aid. You have had all of nature's bounteous gifts for your own development. Most of our resources are locked up for the benefit of all and for the future ages. If you will consider this question in its true light, I am sure you will not complain about Federal aid in the West.

I am not going to discuss the benefit that all the people of the country get from good roads. The economic phases of this question have been discussed by those who have preceded me.

For your information and under the permission granted me I will now insert in the Record certain data prepared by the legislative reference service of the Congressional Library with reference to the questions which I have discussed. I believe it will be a benefit to the members of this committee in the future consideration of Federal-aid projects. This information is in the form of answers to certain questions propounded by me with reference to the matters which I have briefly discussed:

Question 1. What States received money from the sale of the public lands? How much did each State receive? How much interest did they pay? How much of the money did each pay back to the Government?

The first act of the Congress of the United States making provision for the disposal of the public lands was that of May 18, 1796. Under the terms of this statute a "credit system" for the purchase of public lands was put into operation, and this arrangement was further developed by the acts of 1800 and 1804. This "credit system" was continued until 1820, when the act of April 24 substituted a "cash sales system" that is still in force. The total amount received by the States from the proceeds of sales of public lands for purposes specified by the Federal Government is indicated in the following table:

Amounts accrued and paid to States for purposes of education or of making public roads and improvements on account of grants of 2, 3, and 5 per cent of net proceeds of sales of public lands lying within said States

State	Total to June 30, 1922	Fiscal year 1923	Aggregate to June 30, 1923, inclusive

Arizona.....	35,588.38	1,217.49	36,805.87
Arkansas.....	331,921.82	693.19	332,615.01

These disbursements granted to the States from the net proceeds of the sale of public lands were for specific purposes, and no return in the way of principal or interest was expected by the Federal Government. Therefore no record exists of any returns made by the States benefited by these grants.

2. What States of the old Northwest received Federal aid for internal improvements? How much?

The old Northwest consisted of the present-day States of Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, Michigan, and Wisconsin. As early as 1802 the question of distributing the public lands among the several States became a subject of congressional inquiry. The need of improved transportation facilities between the East and the territory west of the Appalachian Mountains was very apparent, and many thought that the continued existence of the Union depended upon closer economic ties. Grants of public lands for internal improvements appeared to be the easiest way of promoting transportation agencies, such as railroads, wagon roads, and canals. In 1823 Ohio received a grant to be applied toward the construction of a road from the lower rapids of the Miami of Lake Erie to the western boundary of the Connecticut Reserve, and in 1824

Congress passed an act authorizing Indiana to construct a canal to connect the Wabash River and Lake Erie, granting a right of way 90 feet in width on each side of the canal.

By 1830 the practicability of railway transportation had been demonstrated, so in that year the State of Ohio was authorized to use the canal grant of 1828 for a railroad to connect Dayton with Lake Erie. In 1835 important grants were made for rights of way through the public domain in Florida and Alabama. In 1852 Congress passed an act granting a right of way 100 feet in width to all railroad companies then chartered, or that should be chartered within 10 years, through any public land of the United States over which the legislatures of the State should authorize the construction of a road.

These acts were soon followed by more comprehensive legislation. "The country went railroad mad and Congress reflected the general craze for immediate development of rapid means of communication. The Civil War also served to emphasize the importance of the railroad for military purposes and was one factor in extending the policy to the Pacific roads. The first grant to a Pacific railroad was made to the Union Pacific in 1862. This was also the first grant to a railroad corporation as distinguished from grants to States. But public opinion was swinging the other way. The last railroad land grant to a State was made to California in 1867, the last to a railroad corporation to the Texas Pacific in 1871."

The following table indicates the amount of Federal aid received by the States of the old Northwest for internal improvements, including canals, wagon roads, and railroads:

4. What States received aid for their State banks in President Jackson's administration? How much for each State? How much was returned from each State?

In 1833 President Jackson, having become convinced that the United States Bank was a menace to the best interests of the United States, decided to instruct the Secretary of the Treasury no longer to use it as a depository of public funds. Secretary Duane refused to carry out such a policy, so he was dismissed and Roger Taney, of Maryland, was installed as the new Secretary of the Treasury. He promptly gave the order suspending deposits in the United States Bank after October 1, 1833, and certain State banks were then selected as the depositories of the public funds. A list of these State "pet banks," as they were called, and the public funds intrusted to their keeping, December 1, 1835, is as follows:

DISTRIBUTION OF THE SURPLUS

In January, 1835, the national debt was extinguished, and inasmuch as it appeared that a yearly surplus of some nine millions would accumulate in the public depositories, a strong movement was started to distribute this surplus among the several States according to their electoral vote. Finally, on June 23, 1836, a measure providing for this distribution was approved, and the payments to the States were commenced on January 1, 1837, and additional payments were to be made on April 1, July 1, and on October 1, 1837. The conditions under which this surplus was distributed to the States were embodied in section 13, of the act of June 23, 1836, and are as follows:

"Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, that the money which shall be in the Treasury of the United States, on the 1st day of January, 1837, reserving the sum of $5,000,000, shall be deposited with such of the several States, in proportion to their respective representation in the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, as shall, by law, authorize their treasurers, or other competent authorities, on receiving certificates of deposits therefor, signed by such competent authorities, in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary aforesaid; which certificates shall express the usual and legal obligations, and pledge the faith of the State, for the safe-keeping and repayment thereof, and shall pledge the faith of the States receiving the same, to pay the said moneys, and every part thereof, from time to time, whenever the same shall be required, by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the purpose of defraying any wants of the Public Treasury, beyond the amount of the five million aforesaid: Provided, That if any State declines to receive its proportions of the surplus aforesaid, on the terms before named, the same shall be deposited with the other States agreeing to accept the same on deposit in the proportion aforesaid: And provided further, That when said money, or any part thereof, shall be wanted by the said Secretary to meet appropriations by law, the same shall be called for, in rateable proportions, within one year, as nearly as conveniently may be, from the different States, with which the same is deposited, and shall not be called for, in sums exceeding $10,000, from any one State, in any one month, without previous notice of the 30 days, for every additional sum of $20,000, which may at any time be required."

On January 1, 1837, when the first payment of the surplus revenue was scheduled to take place, the actual surplus to the credit of the Government was $41,468,859.97. This money was on deposit in the select banks, which were now called upon to transfer to the State officials, at designated periods, the surplus funds, excepting a reserve of five millions. There can be no question legally that this act of June 23 was "to be interpreted as merely a temporary deposit of the surplus with the States. Such is the wording of the act, and such has been the decision of the Supreme Court."

But the advocates of distribution were quite sure that the Federal Government would never recall these deposits, and that the States could use these funds for their own purposes without having to make provision for their eventual repayment. On his return home after the passage of the distribution bill, Mr. Clay informed his fellow citizens that he "did not believe a single Member of either House imagined that a dollar would be recalled," and the New Haven Palladium, December 8, 1836, significantly observed: "It is the people's money, and the Government will never ask for it."

The States have never made any provision for the repayment of these deposits, which were soon dissipated for various State needs. On two occasions, however, it has been suggested by Federal officials that these funds be made productive for Federal purposes. On December 9, 1840, the Secretary of the Treasury, in view of a deficiency in the revenue in 1842, advised that so much of the surplus as was needed should be recalled. A second occasion was in 1861, when it was proposed to borrow $25,000,000 to meet pressing demands upon the Treasury. As security for such a loan, Secretary Dix, in a letter to the Committee on Ways and Means, January 28, recommended that "the several States be requested to pledge the United States deposit funds in their hands."

The amounts of the surplus revenue received by the States and the disposition of it will be shown in the following tables:

Tabular summary showing disposition of the surplus funds distributed among the States in 1837

Original use of principal	Use of interest	Final disposition or present condition of principal
Alabama: Deposited in the State bank and branches, and used for capital.	Devoted to support of schools till 1843 and since 1854.	Lost in bad banking or by too heavy charges on the capital of the bank.
Arkansas: Used as capital for the principal bank, and appropriated.	Nominally for schools; law, a dead letter.	Used up long since in general appropriations.
Connecticut: Deposited with the towns and loaned by them.	Three-fourths for schools till 1855 (by law one-half); after 1855 the whole for schools.	Still loaned by towns; some lost; some a fixed charge on town books.
Delaware: Invested in bank stock, loaned, and invested in railroads.	Devoted to schools.....	In bank stock and a single State bond.
Georgia: Invested in banking, or rather, deposited in the Central Bank and used as capital.	The interest on one-third was appropriated for schools, but probably used for general expenses till 1870.	Used up in banking.
Illinois: Internal improvements, failures.	The interest on two-thirds for schools.	Wasted on improvements.
Indiana: Two-thirds loaned, one-third used for bank capital.	The interest on two-thirds for schools; on one-third for the State debt.	The portion loaned was lost; the portion in the bank was doubled.
Kentucky: Used for bank stock and to pay the public debt.	The interest on four-sevenths devoted to schools.	Part in the school fund, and still exists.
Louisiana: Three-fourths appropriated for State debt and for bank stock, the rest for education.	For schools since 1854.....	Appropriated.
Maine: Mostly distributed per capita; a part devoted to schools.	A very small part for schools.	Mostly distributed.
Maryland: Two-ninths for State debt, the rest deposited in banks.	The interest on seven-ninths for schools.	Used to pay the State debt.
Massachusetts: Deposited with the towns to be used like revenue derived from taxation.	Somewhat for schools.....	Used up mainly on town expenses.
Michigan: State expenses and unsuccessful improvements.	-----	-----
Mississippi: Improvements (fraudulent (?) and State expenses (?).)	-----	-----
Missouri: State bank.....	For schools.....	Invested in State bonds.
New Hampshire: Deposited with the towns.	Small interest for schools.....	Distributed or appropriated; small part as a school fund.

Original use of principal	Use of interest	Final disposition or present condition of principal
New Jersey: Deposited with the counties.	A good part for schools since 1867 the interest on four-fifths for schools.	Expanded on war bounties and county buildings.
New York: Loaned on real estate....	Interest for education.....	In bonds and real-estate loans.
North Carolina: Invested in improvements, bank stock, and debt.	Mainly for education.....	Lost during the war and reconstruction period.
Ohio: Deposited with the counties to be loaned.	For schools.....	Used to pay the internal improvement debt. Interest charges till paid by the State to the school fund.
Pennsylvania: One-third for education, two-thirds for State expenses.	-----	-----
Rhode Island: Bank stock and loaned to towns.	Part for schools.....	Largely if not wholly used for State expenses.
South Carolina: Invested in a profitable railroad.	State purposes.....	Railroad property much injured during the war.
Tennessee: State bank.....	Schools.....	Used up in banking.
Vermont: Deposited with towns....	About half for schools in 1844, now nearly all.	Still deposited.
Virginia: Invested as bank capital.	-----	-----

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, the main purpose of this bill is to aid the States in building good roads. It authorizes an appropriation of $75,000,000 for each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1928, and June 30, 1929. The Nation is interested in the construction of good roads as it is interested in no other subject. Civilization and highways are closely related. The question of good roads affects all the people in all the walks of life, whether they live in the city or in the country. The entire membership of Congress is in favor of legislation that promotes highway construction. In this modern and better day there is a universal sentiment that it is the duty of the Federal Government to assist the States in the construction of the main highways.

DISTRIBUTION EQUITABLE

The distribution of funds is made to the several States and not to certain roads; the method is equitable. One-third is according to the ratio which the area of each State bears to the total area of all the States; one-third is in the ratio which the population of each State bears to the population of all the States; and one-third is in the ratio which the mileage of rural-delivery routes and star routes in each State bears to the total mileage of rural-delivery routes and star routes in all the States.

There are about 3,000,000 miles of roads in the United States, and the Federal Government is now using daily 1,205,572 miles in the Postal Service. Under the law the United States is assisting the States in the improvement of about 7 per cent of the roads, or about 200,000 miles. In using the public roads the Postal Service is serving about 30,000,000 people, and there are about 14,000,000 to be added as fast as the service can be extended. Five years ago 43 per cent of the rural carriers used horse-drawn vehicles. To-day there are but 15 per cent using horses. The time of delivery of rural mail has been reduced more than one-half.

Under the law no State receives less than one-half of 1 per cent of the annual allotment of Federal funds. During each of the years Mississippi will receive approximately $1,291,960. There was spent on roads in Mississippi during the year 1925 a total of approximately $14,550,000.

FEDERAL INTEREST AND RESPONSIBILITY

What is the Federal interest? Is there any Federal responsibility in highway construction? Recently many objections have been urged against Federal aid and particularly against Federal aid in highway construction. However, there is ample authority in the Federal Constitution for Federal assistance in road building. Under Article I, section 8, of the Constitution Congress may levy taxes to provide for the common defense, to promote the general welfare, to establish post offices and post roads and to regulate commerce among the several States.

The main highways will provide for the national defense. Nothing will mean more in time of war than to be able to mobilize and transport men and material quickly. General Pershing, speaking before the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads in 1921, said:

The country road will be of tremendous value in time of war. The roads must be relied upon to obtain the needed food supplies.

Improved highways are an important factor in the social and economic life of the people. They promote schools, and have aided as no other agency in the establishment of consolidated schools. They promote churches; they aid the people of the rural districts in obtaining medical assistance; and they contribute generally to the social betterment of the people in the country. The general welfare is promoted by making living conditions better.

The Postal Service is a Federal function. I have already stated that the United States is using daily more than a million miles of roads for rural mail purposes. The Government can render no better service than to extend the benefits of the rural routes. The people of the country are entitled to as good mail advantages as the people in the towns.

Good roads provide for commerce among the States. The question of transportation is an increasingly important one. Highway transportation, both freight and passenger, has come to stay. The truck aids the railroad in transportation; the highways are feeders to the railways.

THE HISTORY OF FEDERAL AID TO PUBLIC ROADS

Thomas Jefferson was interested in the internal improvement of the country. One of the first appropriations in aid of good roads was an appropriation of $30,000 to build the Cumberland Road, projected to extend from the Potomac River to the Ohio River. It was known as the Cumberland Pike, and it was built from Cumberland, Md., as far as Wheeling, W. Va. The first appropriation was made on March 29, 1806, and the last appropriation for this purpose was made on May 25, 1838, in the sum of $159,000.

The first highway department was established in New Jersey in 1891. To-day all of the States have such departments. The total expenditure for roads in 1915 was $240,263,784. In 1925, $1,176,000,000 was expended. Good roads are now recognized as a necessity.

The history of Federal aid for roads is interesting. In 1912 a committee of Congress was appointed to investigate the part that the Government should take in the building of roads. The report of this committee resulted in the first legislation that was enacted on this subject; it was approved on July 11, 1916, and this legislation provided for an appropriation of $75,000,000 for a period of five years. The next legislation was passed in February, 1919, and carried an appropriation of $200,000,000, covering a period of three years.

In 1921 a comprehensive program of Federal aid was enacted to provide for 7 per cent of the roads in each State, and this 7 per cent aggregates, as I have stated, 200,000 miles. In 1925 Congress authorized an appropriation of $75,000,000 for each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1926 and 1927. Under the present law the Federal Government can not participate more than 50 per cent in the cost of construction and can not aid in excess of $15,000 per mile; the contribution by the Federal Government is on a 50-50 basis. The expenditure of the Federal funds contributed is under the supervision of the State highway department, and the Federal Government exercises through the Secretary of Agriculture a general supervision to see that any given project is up to the proper standards. The highways to be improved are selected by the States, and when completed the system will be the greatest on earth.

What is Federal aid? It is the share paid by the Federal Government as its obligation for the use of the national highway system. The Government is in the highway business on a basis of partnership between the Nation and the States. Its aim is to assist in the building of the main thoroughfares, north and south and east and west, through all the counties and in all the States of the Union, so that all cities of more than 5,000 inhabitants and all county seats may be connected.

The highways are used by the people of the whole country for education and recreation. During the past summer 12,000,000 people traveled the main highways and spent $2,000,000,000 for the item of travel alone.

Again, the Federal tax on motor cars in 1925 yielded $131,872,000, while Federal aid amounted to only $75,000,000. The tax on cars has been materially reduced during the present session of Congress, and in my judgment, like all other excise taxes that originated during the war, it should be wholly repealed by the Federal Government. Excise taxes should be left to the States as a source of revenue. I mention the collection of the motor tax to show that motor cars have paid more than the amount of Federal aid in road construction since the policy was inaugurated.

A complete system of Federal highways will be of inestimable value to the people of the country. President Coolidge in his message to Congress on December 6, 1923, used these words:

No expenditure of public money contributes so much to the national wealth as for building good roads.

MOTOR VEHICLES RENDER IMPROVED HIGHWAYS A NECESSITY

The automobile has made the improved highway a necessity. The development of the automobile has been remarkable. In 1895 there were 300 automobiles in the United States; in 1925 it is estimated that there are approximately 20,000,000 motor vehicles on the streets and highways of the country. There are more automobiles than there are telephones; this is true notwithstanding the fact that the telephone has been in operation one-half century, and motor vehicles have been in general use but little more than 15 years.

The investment in automobiles is more than $16,500,000,000. The United States is first in the automobile industry. It is an important factor in the world trade of the United States. The automobile industry contributes very largely to the balance of world trade in favor of this country.

The difference in the cost of operation over improved roads and over unimproved highways would pay for the cost of improvement in a short time. To discontinue the Federal policy would be disastrous.

Experiments have been made to ascertain the cost of operation over various kinds and types of roads. These types include dirt, gravel, and hard-surfaced roads. The investigation discloses that an ordinary dirt road will give approximately 14 ton-miles of traffic per gallon of gasoline; graveled roads average approximately 21 ton-miles per gallon; and hard-surfaced roads, including concrete, brick, and macadam, give about 31 ton-miles per gallon of gasoline. The gasoline cost on a dirt road is approximately 1.43 cents per ton-mile; on gravel roads it is 0.95 of a cent; and on hard-surfaced roads 0.64 of a cent per ton-mile. When gasoline, repairs, and maintenance are considered the cost of operation over a hard-surfaced road is one-fourth the cost of operation over a dirt road.

There has been a remarkable revolution in road building as a result of the automobile. There has also been a marvelous development in good roads throughout the country. The problem became a national one; it demanded a great unified system of highway building. The increased traffic and the multiplication of motor cars bring problems that can only be solved properly by cooperation among all the States. Uniform traffic regulations promote safety; uniform standards of construction give efficiency.

The record of accidents, injuries, and deaths is appalling. There must be a uniform system of marks and signals. There must be greater aids to travel on the highways. Accidents and injuries must be eliminated. In 1925, 23,850 persons were killed as a result of highway and street accidents, and more than one-half million persons received serious personal injuries. Of the number killed, approximately 7,000 were children of school age. Every possible effort should be exerted to prevent this awful destruction of human life. The automobile has come to stay. America has more automobiles than the other countries of the world combined, and surely the Government can provide for their use so as to promote without injury the social and economic progress of the country.

BENEFITS OF GOOD ROADS

Everybody is benefited by good roads. The value of the crops of the American farmers last year was over $20,000,000,000. Good roads are essential to the development of the community, and to the progress of the State and Nation. The merchant in the city, the resident in the town, and the farmer in the country, all profit by good roads.

Unimproved roads are a great burden to the people. The load falls ultimately on the consumer, and it is shared by the laboring man in the city and town, and the producer on the farm. The cost of hauling over the average unimproved roads exceeds the cost of hauling over improved roads about $0.08 per ton-mile. It is estimated that the tonnage hauled on the highways of the United States is 700,000,000 tons per year; at an average haul of 9 miles the gross saving on transportation over improved roads is 72 cents per ton, or something like $504,000,000 annually.

STATE AND FEDERAL COOPERATION

Formerly the jurisdiction of roads was vested in the county. It was a local question. The people in one part of the State were not concerned about the condition of the roads in another part of the State. The citizens of one State, before the advent of motor cars, did not use the highways of another State. But now all has changed. The main highways are not limited to the borders of any one State. In some localities there are improved roads where more than 50 per cent of the traffic originates in other States. Some counties are traversed by main roads on which not more than 10 per cent of the traffic originates within that county.

If the citizens of the district or the county are to pay for their roads without assistance, they ought only to be called upon to pay for a road that is suitable for their own local traffic.

Mr. Chairman, the building of highways is no longer a local matter. The construction of the main thoroughfares is not a county or a State matter. In our generation we recall the time when the working of the roads was left to the community. Then the county assumed supervision over the improvement of the roads; finally the State highway commission was created. But to-day the construction of the main thoroughfares, north and south, east and west, through the counties, is no longer a county or State problem, but it is a national problem, because the use of these roads is not confined to the citizens of any county or State, and for the further reason that the main highways are now used by the citizens of the United States. [Applause.]

The people of the entire country who use the main thoroughfares should contribute to their construction. There is no fairer or more equitable method of contribution than Federal aid for the main highways. [Applause.]

TAXATION FOR ROADS

Taxation is burdensome; economy in government should be fostered. Road taxes and school taxes constitute the greater part of the local taxes of the citizens. In Mississippi something like 60 per cent of every dollar paid in ad valorem taxes goes to the support of the schools. The taxes for roads and for schools are especially heavy upon the landowner. There must be a reduction of land taxes if agriculture is to be profitable. All who profit from good roads should participate in the taxes for their construction and maintenance. All taxes, both State and national, have increased enormously in recent years. We can recall the billion-dollar Congress of a few years ago, but the billion-dollar Congress has now given way to a $4,000,000,000 Congress. There must be a reduction in taxation. The present Congress has reduced taxes, under the revenue act of 1926, in the sum of approximately $375,000,000. More than 2,000,000 taxpayers have been relieved altogether from income taxes. The rates in inheritance taxes have been materially reduced. There is no Federal inheritance tax on net estates of $100,000 or less. In other words, after paying all the debts and liabilities of the estate, $100,000 is exempt from Federal inheritance tax. An estate of $150,000 would pay only $500 Federal estate tax. So far as Mississippi is concerned, therefore, Federal estate taxes have really been abolished. I would like to see Federal inheritance taxes repealed altogether. I favor further tax reduction. I know, however, that taxes can only be reduced as the appropriations by Congress are reduced. Any demagogue can proclaim that he is in favor of tax reduction, but taxation can only be reduced by reducing appropriations. It is difficult for a legislator to vote against appropriations. Our Government is really a big business enterprise. It takes courage to vote against many appropriation bills.

A legislator must be careful, painstaking, informed, and he should be a man of broad views, and he should be well grounded as to all governmental functions. He must have the courage of his convictions, and it takes courage to vote against many appropriations and thereby provide for tax reduction. Some Members of Congress, when the matter of taxation is mentioned, are prone to dismiss it with the statement that the burden of taxation is really local and State, and the average citizen is not burdened with Federal taxes. For one, I believe that the Federal Government should aid in the reduction of certain local taxes. I know that the taxpayer is burdened; he ought to have relief, and the Federal Government should give him relief where it is proper in the exercise of its Federal functions. I believe that the Federal Government can aid the State and the county in reducing taxes by giving a sympathetic ear to the plea of the overburdened taxpayer and by lending a helping hand with the reduction of State and county taxes. I refuse to take refuge behind the statement that the burden of taxes is local rather than national. I know of no better way for the Federal Government to aid the overburdened taxpayer of our State and Nation than by aiding the States in the construction of the main highways and thus relieving the local taxpayer from the entire burden of building these roads. [Applause.]

Moreover, land in the towns and in the country is being burdened for the construction of roads. In Mississippi this arises from the fact that a great portion of the tax collected is on land and on visible personal property. Those who use the highways, whether they are citizens of the county or the State or the Nation, should contribute to their maintenance, and I know of no better or more equitable method to provide for this contribution than by Federal aid in the building of the main roads. [Applause.]

BURDEN ON THE STATES EQUAL

Certain States are not overtaxed for aid to other States. The burden is not unequal. There is an agitation against Federal aid, and particularly against Federal aid to roads in certain parts of the country. This is particularly true in the States with the greatest wealth and the largest population. There has been a campaign against Federal aid. Those who oppose Federal aid argue that it is a departure from our system of government; that it promotes centralization; that it fosters bureaucracy; that it deprives the States of their independence and initiative; and that its tendency is toward the breaking down of local self-government. I am opposed to centralization, to bureaucracy, and to the Federal Government doing any of those things that can be done by the States and their subdivisions. I know that the government is best that is closest to the people. However, there are many instances where there should be cooperation between the State and the Nation. In all matters the State must maintain its independence.

In Federal aid to highways the State is not deprived of any of its rights. There is no tendency to centralization in Washington. The contracts are made by the State authorities; the roads are selected by the State agencies; they are built under the laws of the State, and the funds contributed by the Federal Government are disbursed by the State highway commission. This is as it should be, for I would oppose the surrender of the independence of the State and the transfer of its funds to the Federal Government in the construction of highways that received Federal aid.

Moreover, in Federal aid to highways the State is not sacrificing its initiative. The United States aids in the construction of the main highways to the extent of about 7 per cent of all roads in the States. The facts are that the States that have the best main thoroughfares have the finest system of lateral roads. The initiative of the States is being developed by the help of the Federal Government. Federal aid is helping and not hindering in road construction.

The better type of roads is being promoted. The people are realizing that the cheapest type of construction is the most expensive in the long run. I am not saying that all of the roads of the county should be of the same type. The type of road needed depends on the traffic. There should be several types of roads in every county, but it is unfair and inequitable for the local taxpayer to be called upon to build the type of road which is required to accommodate the State and national travel. The main roads should be of a permanent type; the Federal Government should aid in building them. Among the best types of main roads are concrete, brick, and macadam; they are the most economical in the long run for the main thoroughfares north and south and east and west through the counties and the States.

The States must never sacrifice their sovereignty to secure Federal aid. In accepting aid for roads local self-government is not destroyed and the rights of the States are not surrendered.

In my opinion, if some of the conditions now imposed were modified or withdrawn in Federal aid the administration would be more efficient and economical. I shall continue to work for the removal of any restrictions in Federal aid that will not stimulate State initiative.

The Federal Government has always been interested in the matter of transportation. Without Federal aid the transcontinental railroads could never have been built. It is said that the Federal Government granted lands to the transcontinental railroads that aggregated more than the entire area of the States of Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan, and Wisconsin. If the Federal Government was justified in promoting railroads, surely it is more justified in supplementing the transportation of the railroads by aiding the highways.

Our Government is a dual form, and it involves a dual citizenship. We are citizens of the United States, and we are citizens of our respective States. We are neighbors and brothers largely because of better means of travel and communication. The Nation is vitally interested in lending a helping hand to the States. We are citizens of a common country. Every State is interested in every other State. It is the duty of the Government to provide for the welfare of all the citizens. Mr. Justice McKenna expressed this thought when, speaking for the Supreme Court of the United States, he said:

Our dual form of government has its perplexities. State and Nation have different spheres of jurisdiction, as we have said; but it must be kept in mind that we are one people, and that powers reserved to the States and those conferred on the Nation are adapted to be exercised, either independently or concurrently, to promote the general welfare, material and moral.

I maintain that the opposition of States like New York and Massachusetts to Federal aid is not justified. The claim is made that many States receive in Federal aid more than they pay into the National Treasury. The statement is true as to many of the States, but the argument is not sound. I may say in this connection that Mississippi paid in Federal taxes during the fiscal year 1925 $4,069,777.21 and received in Federal aid for all purposes from the Government $2,523,354.20.

But no State pays more than its population and wealth justifies. Many large cities and commercial centers are really the clearing houses for the business of the Nation. There is not a large city in the country that secures its prosperity exclusively from the people who reside in the State in which the city is located. The poorest State helps to enrich the wealthiest State. It is a false theory that maintains that the States contribute to the Federal Treasury. Taxes are levied upon individuals and not upon legal subdivisions.

Opposition to Federal aid has been more pronounced since the income and inheritance taxes were enacted. The wealthier States maintain that the tax burden is unequal. In 1925 New York paid in Federal taxes $658,585,982.21. It received in Federal aid $5,736,846.21. Massachusetts paid $118,909,084.22 and received $1,649,915.10. New Jersey paid $110,199,707.06 and received $2,223,399.00. Michigan paid $195,726,494.83 and received $4,044,224.64. Again, it is said that in 1923 New York paid 28.72 per cent of all the income taxes paid in the United States, while New Jersey paid 4.35 per cent, and Massachusetts paid 6.72; Michigan, 4.24 per cent, while Mississippi paid 0.29 per cent, or approximately three-tenths of 1 per cent.

The State of New York for the years 1917 to 1925, inclusive, paid into the Federal Treasury 35.68 per cent, or more than one-third, of all the Federal estate taxes collected. Massachusetts paid 6.43 per cent, while Mississippi paid 0.14 per cent, or approximately one-eighth of 1 per cent. Of course, the great benefit from the repeal of the Federal estate tax will accrue to States like New York, Michigan, Massachusetts, and New Jersey.

However, the argument of those opposed to Federal aid is not sound. States are political and not economic units. There are many large corporations in New York City that derive their prosperity from other States. On the 15th of May, 1925, the deposits in New York City banks amounted to $2,218,027,000, and yet 38 per cent of this amount represented deposits by banks outside New York City. Many large railroad corporations pay their income taxes in New York City. For instance, the Union Pacific in 1923 paid an income tax of $4,500,000, and yet this railroad does not operate east of Omaha and Kansas City. But all of its Federal taxes were paid in New York State. Take another case: The United States Steel Corporation in 1923 paid an income tax of $16,000,000 in New York. This corporation has 145 plants and warehouses, but only 2 of them are located in the State of New York. New York, Hartford, and Baltimore are the homes of many of the great fire, life, and casualty insurance companies of the country, and yet no one would be so foolish as to say that these cities alone contribute to their prosperity. Boston is the center of the wool market, yet there are but few sheep in the State of Massachusetts. The mines of several States of the West have furnished wealth to the residents of other States. There is not a large city in the country which secures its wealth exclusively from the citizens who live in that city or in the State where the city is located. Rockefeller lives in New York, and yet his fortune accrues from his operations in every State in the Union. Henry Ford resides in Michigan, and yet his business prospers because he sells cars in every county in the United States.

The entire Nation contributes to the building of all the great fortunes in the country. Wealth should be taxed for the benefit of the whole country and not for the benefit of any particular locality.

GOOD ROADS UNITE THE COUNTRY

National highways make neighbors of all the States and promote a better understanding among all the people. Progress and highways go hand in hand. Good roads are an educational asset. They make for better schools, they foster good citizenship. They make better homes and better citizens. Humanity advances along its highways. We live in the golden age of human achievement, and highways are removing the barriers between the city and the country.

In Germany, France, and Italy the national governments build and maintain the main highways. The citizen is taxed for the secondary roads. The primary roads are for the general welfare and are constructed at the general expense. They were important factors in the prosecution of the World War.

Rome is famous for her legions and for her highways. We can not recall Rome without thinking of the Appian Way. The footprints of Caesar can be traced to-day in England along the highways that he constructed in his conquest of Britain.

The farm is the foundation of American prosperity. Good roads promote rural life. They make living conditions in the country worth while. Our national highways will help to unite the entire country. We lead the world in railways and, when completed, we will have the best and greatest highway system in all the earth. By Federal aid to highways the citizens of the United States, regardless of their residence, and according to their ability, are contributing to the progress and advancement of all the people. [Applause.]

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BRAND].

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this does not seem to be exactly a debate on the road question. The Members of the House evidently have been about unanimously convinced that this bill should pass. [Applause.] I believe this is because the people of the country have been equally convinced. I do not hear in my State any objection to Federal aid from the National Government in helping the States to build roads.

However, the chairman has asked me to bring up the one objection to Federal aid which has lodged itself in the minds of some against this proposition. I refer to the way the money comes into the Treasury from the States and the proportion that goes out to those same States. The money does not go out in the same proportion to each State as each State puts the money into the Treasury, and some think, on that account, Federal aid is unfair. I have gone over the payments into the Treasury from the several States, and I have picked out some outstanding illustrations, and I want to bring them to the attention of the House and again give you my logic on the subject to show it is fair even under those circumstances.

North Carolina, for instance, pays into the Treasury of the United States about $167,000,000 a year. South Carolina pays in only $6,000,000; and yet when you find out what Federal aid they receive, you find that South Carolina receives nearly as much as North Carolina. South Carolina receives $1,250,000 a year and North Carolina about $1,750,000 a year, and yet North Carolina pays into the Treasury about thirty times as much as South Carolina. Now is this fair? Let us analyze and see where North Carolina gets the money that she pays into the Treasury. You will find down there the principal business is tobacco, and this State pays $151,000,000 in tobacco taxes. The manufacturers down there put up tobacco in forms of cigarettes and in package form, and the Government requires that on each one of those packages you must have a stamp, and that stamp costs considerable money. All these packages are sent out all over the United States by the manufacturer, and does that manufacturer absorb the cost of that stamp himself? We all know he does not. He would break up if he did. He sends that package out over the United States with the tax added, and then everybody who smokes cigarettes or uses a package of tobacco contributes to the fund that comes back into North Carolina and is sent in to the Treasury of the United States, and North Carolina gets the great credit of paying $167,000,000 into the Treasury of the United States. Why, gentlemen, North Carolina is just a collector of taxes; that is all. All the people are paying that tax all over the United States.

Let me take another illustration I find up in Michigan. Michigan pays $193,000,000 a year into the Treasury. Indiana, her sister State, pays only $38,000,000. Yet each of these States receive about $2,000,000 Federal aid for roads. Is that fair? When you analyze the money paid by the State of Michigan into the National Treasury, you find that there is the State where the automobiles are made; and when you buy an automobile, you will find on your bill so much for national taxes, and you pay that before you get the machine. That is a part of its cost. So everybody who jumps over the roads in a Ford all over the United States or rides in a Cadillac contributes to that sum, which Michigan turns into the National Treasury. Michigan is a collector of taxes from all over this broad country.

The Standard Oil in New York and the Rockefellers in New York pay large sums into the National Treasury, but we all know that on every corner in this great country where there is a gasoline station that funds is being collected from the people generally in the United States, and it is sent to New York and turned over to the National Treasury.

So, if my logic is correct, I say it is absolutely fair to give national aid out of the National Treasury to the States. [Applause.] If there are those who do not agree with that logic of the situation; if there are those who cling to the idea it is not fair, then I want to say to you there is another way out for you. The States of the Union are collecting on gasoline to pay for the construction of roads, generally, 2, 3, 4, or 5 cents a gallon. Now, what is the Nation doing? We are placing a tax on the construction of every automobile made in the country, and when that tax is all collected we find it equals the amount of Federal aid which we have involved in this bill. So those who do not believe it is fair on account of the unequal amounts paid by the States into the National Treasury to pay out this Federal aid to the States, I believe they can see that we are collecting from the traffic the amount that the National Government is paying on the roads.

I believe in Federal aid to the States, not as a gift, not as a gratuity to the States, but as an obligation of the Nation, because the Nation is using the roads and needs them. We are running the Post Office Department down here, one of the greatest businesses in the country, and we are running it successfully. The Post Office Department has 45,000 rural mail carriers in the United States who go out on the roads of the country every morning. Each one of them drives about 30 miles every day, and this means that the mails are carried over 1,350,000 miles of roads every day. The States are spending at least $1,000,000,000 a year making these roads good, and the Post Office Department is using them all without paying 1 cent for their use, and every dollar that the State spends on these roads makes it cheaper to deliver the mails. Now, is not that true? You know the mail carrier has reduced the time of his service to three or four hours a day on the rural routes. He gets through in three or four hours, and the Government is cognizant of that, and we are gradually beginning to reorganize the mail routes. In my district in the last year there have been five reorganizations. They have reduced the number of carriers. When a carrier dies now in my district or when one quits we do not appoint another. We reorganize the routes in that district. I had a report from Mr. Billamy this week saying he had reorganized in one town and changed the number of routes from 5 to 4, at an increase to the men delivering the mail of $306 apiece in their annual salaries, and yet saved the Government $1,260 a year at that place. We had five of these reorganizations in my district in the last year, and this means a saving to the Government of about $6,000. This is all because the States and the counties have been spending money on these roads. Now, are you going to say that the Government is going to use all these roads and pay nothing for their use when it is an absolute benefit to the Government?

Another point: The traffic in the United States is now at least 20 per cent interstate traffic; that is, people do not travel just in their own State. They go out of their State, and just as soon as you go out of your State the State you are in is really under no obligation to furnish you a road. You are getting it for nothing and you pay no taxes there. It seems to me as soon as you get out of your own State you are in interstate traffic, you are in United States traffic, and it seems to me it is reasonable to say that the United States should contribute to the care and building of that road which such people are using at the sufferance of the State they are in.

Twenty per cent of the traffic is interstate, and a billion dollars is being spent by the State every year, and if the United States would spend her share represented by the interstate traffic, we would have a bill here for $200,000,000, which is one-fifth of what is being spent, instead of $75,000,000 which the committee reports.

Mr. HARE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. I will.

Mr. HARE. I am very much interested in the discussion and I would like to know the gentleman's idea of taking the excise tax off from automobiles and placing it in what would be known as a Federal highway fund to be used exclusively in the construction of roads.

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. That is a debatable question in which the automobile manufacturers and the users would object. I am not at all sure but that we are coming to that as a policy of road building.

Mr. HARE. My idea was that there would be no change in the excise, but when the tax is collected and turned into the Treasury it would go into a fund to be known as a Federal highway fund.

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. There is no fairer way to provide for roads than by tax on the traffic on these roads.

Now, in conclusion, there is another reason why the Government should participate in road building, and that is as a means of national defense.

I remember during the war in 1918 out in Ohio the trucks were coming through our State in caravans, carrying war munitions to the East, where they were needed, and I remember very distinctly that some of our roads were not strong enough and broke down, and we had to declare an emergency on the national roads between Zanesville and Wheeling and build the roads strong enough to support truck traffic that the Government was furnishing.

Since that time I was in Europe and in France and studied the roads there. Now, does the French nation go out into the country and collect money from the country people for building main roads? Not at all. Way back more than 100 years ago one of the most practical and greatest men who ever ruled over man decided the French policy of building roads. Napoleon Bonaparte decided that policy, and the French nation at that time and since has built the main roads in France out of the public treasury.

I went down into Italy and stood on a road built by one of the Caesars centuries ago, and ever since that time in Italy the National Government has been building the main roads there as a means of defense.

And over in Germany I found the National Government building all their main roads as a means of national defense, so that they could get to their frontiers before the enemy could get in.

So when you compare what other nations are doing and what the United States are doing—we are furnishing 7½ per cent of the cost of building the main roads, while over there in Europe they are furnishing 100 per cent—you must conclude that this committee has brought in here a conservative measure. [Applause.]

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, in the consideration of this bill (H. R. 9504), a bill for the further extension of Federal aid to the States for the construction of Federal aid roads, I realize that there will be little, if any, opposition to the passage of this bill. Yet, as a member of the Committee on Roads, and one who has been interested for a number of years in the construction of good roads, I can not let this opportunity pass without expressing my views on this bill. And I desire, first, to give, in brief, the history, as I understand it, of what the Federal Government has done in the way of Federal aid to the States.

On August 24, 1912, an act was approved creating a joint committee composed of five Members of the Senate, to be designated by the chairman of the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and five Members of the House, to be designated by the chairman of the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to make inquiry into the subject of Federal aid in the construction of post roads and to report at the earliest practicable date. And for this purpose an appropriation of $25,000 was made for the use of this joint committee in such investigation, and an appropriation of $500,000 was made to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture, cooperating with the Postmaster General, in improving the condition of the roads over which the rural mails were delivered, or were to be delivered.

On July 11, 1916, an act was approved authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with the States through their respective highway departments in the construction of rural post roads in the various States and Territories. And which act provided an appropriation of—

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917.....	$5,000,000
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918.....	10,000,000
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.....	15,000,000
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.....	20,000,000
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.....	25,000,000

That act provided that after the Secretary of Agriculture made certain deductions authorized by that act, he should then apportion the remainder of the appropriation of each fiscal year among the several States in the following manner:

One-third in the ratio which the area of the State bears to the total area of all the States.

One-third in the ratio which the population of each State bears to the total population of all the States, as shown by the latest available Federal census.

One-third in the ratio which the mileage of rural delivery routes and star routes in each State bears to the total mileage of rural delivery routes and star routes in all the States. (The information as to the mileage of rural delivery routes and star routes to be furnished by the Postmaster General.)

The same act made appropriation to be apportioned to the States as follows: The sum of $1,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and each fiscal year thereafter, up to and including the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926. In all, $10,000,000 to be used for the construction and maintenance of roads and trails within, or partly within, the national forests.

The act of February 28, 1919, amending the act of 1916, made appropriations for Federal aid, as follows:

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, available immediately.....	$50,000,000
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.....	75,000,000
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.....	75,000,000

Said additional sums to be expended in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 11, 1916. This amendatory act also made appropriations, to be expended in our insular possessions, of $3,000,000 for each of the above-mentioned years.

The act of July, 1916, was further amended November 9, 1921, and made appropriation of $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and also made additional appropriation for the construction and maintenance of forest roads and trails in the sum of $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923.

The act of June 19, 1922, further amended and extended the act of 1916 appropriating $50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923; the sum of $65,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924; the sum of $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and also making the additional appropriation of $6,500,000 for each of said years of 1924 and 1925, to be expended for the forest roads and trails.

And the act approved February 12, 1925, extended these appropriations for the fiscal years as follows:

The sum of $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926.

The sum of $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and the further sum of $7,500,000 for the forest roads and trails for each of said years.

And this present bill simply continues this appropriation of $75,000,000 to be apportioned among the States for each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1928, and June 30, 1929, and the further sum of $7,500,000 for the forest roads and trails for each of said years.

I simply call attention to these appropriations made in the past to show that the Congress is not being asked to do anything different from what it has done for the past several years. And, in my judgment, if there is any criticism to be offered to this bill, it is because the appropriation that it carries is too small, rather than too large, an amount, considering what these appropriations have done and are still doing for the good of the country.

The act approved November 9, 1921, in addition to making appropriation to be expended in cooperation with the States, the law provided for a definite system of roads to be constructed with funds from both the Federal and the State Treasuries. This system was limited to 7 per cent of the total road mileage of each State. Seven per cent was chosen because it was found that this mileage would connect all of the county seats and main market centers. And this appropriation is being asked for the purpose of further carrying out the construction of this 7 per cent mileage system.

The construction of good roads is not a political question, yet both of the two leading political parties have declared in favor of continuing this Federal aid to the States for the improvement of highways. In the last national platform of the Republican Party the platform pledges its party to a continuation of this program in the following language:

We pledge a continuation of this policy of Federal cooperation with the States in highway building.

The Democratic platform of the same year pledges its party to a continuation of this program in the following language:

Improved roads are of vital importance not only to commerce and industry but also to agriculture and rural life. We call attention to the record of the Democratic Party in this matter and favor a continuance of Federal aid under existing Federal and State agencies.

I desire to speak briefly of what Federal aid in road construction has done for my State, Indiana, and what progress has been made in the improvement of roads since the creating of this Federal-aid system, approved July 11, 1916, and amendments thereto. I speak of Federal aid in Indiana because I am more familiar with what Federal aid has done for Indiana than I am with what it has done for other States. Indiana did not have a law creating a State highway commission until 1917, when an act was passed creating such a commission. The constitutionality of this act was challenged before the provisions of the law could be fully put into effect, but in 1919, in case of Wright et al. v. House (188 Indiana, 247), it was decided by the court that the act was constitutional. But before much was accomplished by that act the legislature of 1919 enacted a law which, with later amendments, is now the governing act of the State of Indiana as to the State highway commission.

This act of 1919 created a nonpartisan highway commission, composed of four members to be appointed by the governor, and that commission selects a director of the commission. Since the organization of the State highway commission in Indiana, under the provisions of that act, there has been a wonderful improvement in the highway system of the State due to the efforts of the commission. I believe the State highway commission of Indiana will compare favorably with any of the State highway commissions, and the present commission is doing a wonderful work in the State of Indiana. And for the information of those who care to know, I herewith submit a table showing the expenditures of that department for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1925:

Construction.....	9,639,765.92
Maintenance.....	3,761,597.72
Equipment.....	883,417.19
Capital expenditures.....	$69,433.64
Right of way.....	108,967.71
Gasoline tax to counties.....	1,000,000.00
Miscellaneous.....	1,942.92
Total.....	15,517,942.18

Since the organization of the commission in 1919 the following table shows the miles of roads constructed by the Indiana State Highway Commission prior to 1925, during 1925, the program of 1926, and the totals, as follows:

Type	Prior 1925	During 1925	1926 program	Totals
Concrete.....	526.17	203.33	250	979.50
Bituminous.....	127.35	52.15	22	201.50
Brick.....	7.07			7.07
Total pavement.....	660.59	255.48	272	1,188.07
Gravel and stone.....	215.34	52.08	14.3	281.72
Grand total.....	875.93	307.56	286.3	1,469.79

On January 1, 1926, the State highway commission was maintaining a system of 1,225.44 miles of pavement; 2,629.48 miles of gravel and stone road; 81.07 miles of earth and new location; making a total of 3,935.99 miles. This 81.07 miles of earth road will practically all be constructed during the present year.

The following table shows what the State of Indiana has received from the Federal Government and what it has expended:

State's fiscal year	Amount apportioned to Indiana	Amount received by Indiana
1917.....	$135,747.62
1918.....	271,495.24
1919.....	1,756,149.60
1920.....	2,564,846.88	$484,999.05
1921.....	2,087,033.27	1,446,622.73
1922.....	1,958,855.41	821,912.91

Total Federal aid apportioned to Indiana..... 18,204,355.00

The above figures and tables relating to Indiana were given me by John D. Williams, director of the State highway commission of Indiana.

I know of no one thing that has done more in improving conditions in the State of Indiana than has the improvement of its roads. And I think what is true of that State is true of all States. It has brought the farmers closer to the markets. It has opened up many sections of country to development that were practically inaccessible before good roads were built through those sections. Many sections of the country, where but a few years ago farmers had difficulty in marketing their crops and livestock, on account of the condition of the highways, to-day are putting their products and livestock in the markets 25, 50, and more, miles away by use of trucks going over good roads to these markets. Schools are being consolidated, and the school children carried in automobiles to the schools; rural-mail routes are going over these roads carrying daily papers and other mail to the citizens of the rural districts in automobiles in about one-half of the time that it took the mail carrier of a few years ago to deliver mail on these routes with the horse-drawn vehicle. While the construction of good roads has brought about a wonderful improvement in the rural districts, yet this road-building program is still in its infancy.

President Coolidge, in his message to Congress December 6, 1923, said:

Highways and reforestation should continue to have the interest and support of the Government.

And the kind of support the States need from the Government in the improvement of roads is financial support. This program of Federal aid to the States in the construction of roads began under the act approved July 11, 1916, and continued to this date is the one good thing, in my judgment, above all others, that Congress has done for the upbuilding and improvement of the agricultural and rural districts of this country, and this date stands out as one of the great days in congressional action. Again quoting from President Coolidge's message of December 6, 1923:

No expenditure of public money contributes so much to the national wealth as for building good roads.

And in addition to contributing to the national wealth, I know of no appropriation that has done so much to improve conditions and bring about enlightenment as has this system of extending Federal aid to the States for road improvement. When this system was first inaugurated there was considerable opposition to the Government extending this Federal aid to the States, and some still contend that such appropriations should not be made. When conditions were different roads were constructed with the township or the county as the unit of taxation and construction. But conditions have so changed that it is necessary that the unit of taxation and construction be made larger, even larger than the State. With the township as the unit, the poorer townships are not financially able to construct roads that will accommodate the traffic of to-day. Many counties are not financially able to construct roads that will accommodate the traffic of to-day. Many States are not financially able to construct roads that will accommodate the traffic of to-day. Yet the public wants to travel through these townships, these counties, and these States that are unable financially to construct these roads, and there is no other alternative but to make the Federal Government the unit for the taxation and the construction of the main market roads. And many of the roads now are used more for the through traffic than they are used by the persons residing along the roads. For that reason it is proper and right that the Federal Government and the taxpayers of the Federal Government should bear a part of the expenditure for the construction of roads in the various States.

In Indiana the State highway commission, aided by the funds from the Federal Government, has constructed, and is constructing, the main market highways of the State. And, under our State laws, the counties and the townships are constructing roads to connect with these main market highways. On the roads built by the State Highway Commission of Indiana, the State's portion of the construction is being paid for as the roads are being constructed, and Indiana has no State bond issue for the construction of State and Federal roads, nor has the State any indebtedness for that purpose.

This same principle of finding a larger unit is recognized in many of our State school systems. In the State of Indiana, for instance, we have a law that any township, or municipality, after levying and collecting a certain rate on the taxable property of that municipality, and it is found to be insufficient to maintain the schools for the length of time required by the State law, that municipality may then draw on the State funds for a sufficient amount to continue the schools for the length of time required by the school system. The State recognizes the fact that it can not permit the children of any part of the State to be deprived of the necessary training in school because of the lack of funds in that particular municipality, thus recognizing the fact that a township, or a county, is too small a unit for the school system, and the same is equally true with the road system.

Some of the larger cities, or some of the wealthier States, may contend that under this system of road building that particular city or State is paying more than its just proportion of taxes for road purposes. It may be paying out more money than it is receiving, yet these roads are bringing into that city, or that State, the products and necessities of life from the States receiving this benefit. The mines, and the agricultural fields of the West, in many instances, are sending their products to such cities and such States. Life insurance companies, banking institutions, manufacturing establishments, and other institutions receive much of their profits from States other than their own. And many of the stockholders, and others contributing to the profits of these institutions, are residents of other States. And it is just and equitable that these wealthier centers should contribute their pro rata part in the way of taxation to this Federal-aid system of road construction. And I hope that this bill continuing the appropriation of Federal aid to the States for road construction will pass without opposition. And I also hope that many more such appropriations will be made extending the life of this system for years to come. [Applause.]

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAGRADY].

Mr. MAGRADY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to suggest to you that I know of nobody who objects more to high taxes than I do. You all know that when the road question arises it always brings up the question of taxes, and the great amount of taxes paid is a paramount thing in all our minds. However, we pay taxes in two ways. One is the direct way and the other is the indirect way. For many years I have been working for good roads. I have been paying taxes, including road taxes. I have been paying for repair bills, the biggest part of our road taxes. Without good roads we are paying excess taxes, because we are depriving the farmer of the right to come into town quickly and comfortably, and we are depriving the citizen of the city of the opportunity to get through the country easily. In that way we are aiding in high taxation. Let us be liberal and lay down the general broad plan, not for the citizens of the city only, nor for the farmer or worker alone, but for the Government as well. Let us help our neighbor and get acquainted with him by reason of our ability to get to him and home again without great inconvenience.

My earliest knowledge of contemplated road improvement dates back to the World's Fair in Chicago. Several little sections of sample roads were built for exhibition purposes only, so that all who were interested in good roads might see what was then supposed to be the last word in road building so far as the needs of that time were considered.

The advent of the automobile, and with it the tourist, awakened the public to the great need of better highways for both business and pleasure. State after State took up the question of building much-needed highways according to a set plan. Pennsylvania was among the first to prepare a great highway system, but found that it required a vast sum of money to make just a start in the work. Plans were proposed to raise some of the money to establish what is one of the most efficient highway departments of any State, and to prepare maps showing the proposed routes and plans for general construction of what then was considered a foundation strong enough for any known vehicle. Just as the railroads learned that the wooden rail with an iron strap fastened on top of it would not bear the heavy locomotives, freight, and passenger cars that roll over the tracks now, so the highway department has learned that what was once an amply strong and durable road for such traffic as then passed over it, is no longer able to bear the strain of the ponderous machines laden with every conceivable kind of freight that now is carried upon the highway, sometimes to the advantage of the shipper and very much so to the owner of the transport, because the State furnishes and keeps in good repair the track he is privileged to use. He has no overhead or capital investment in tracks that must be constantly renewed and kept in good repair. This situation borders on real socialism, to the great disadvantage of the stockholder whose savings are invested in railroads or trolley roads.

One of the situations that roused communities at first was whether or not the road would be laid to and through that particular community. Heads of departments were besieged with committees and delegations asking for immediate consideration of their locality. However, the permanent plan was adhered to and the more important ones were laid according to the then best-known practices of road builders.

Taxation was the one bugaboo that retarded the work. Bond issues were not possible because the fellow who did not own an automobile roused his neighbors to vote against the approval of a bond issue, and they voted it down. To the credit of the unselfish worker for good roads, let it be said, that in the face of defeat he continued diligently to talk and work for good roads. He is represented by the American Automobile Association, the Pennsylvania Motor Federation, and kindred well-known automobile clubs and highway associations and organizations. Unfair tax placed upon the automobile owner is fast becoming a thing of the past. Repairs are no longer needed in the same volume as formerly, so that form of indirect tax, a very heavy one, is going out of our present-day experience.

The spirit of early times relating to road construction largely held that each State, county, and locality must provide its own money by whatever plan of taxation they saw fit to adopt. The need of more permanent and rapid construction to meet the crying demands led to the invention of numerous plans of taxation for both building and maintaining the public road system. I believe one of the fairest plans is that of the gasoline tax.

The machine passing through a State and using the highways consumes gasoline in proportion to the mileage traveled, and assuming, of course, that all gasoline tax is paid into the proper treasury, the owner only contributes a small amount of his tax to assist in maintaining the kind of road he finds it a pleasure to use. Our road taxes give us as good returns in profit and pleasure as any we pay. Good roads reduce our cost of upkeep, which has been very heavy because of bad conditions existing not only in neighboring States but within our own balliwick.

The public-spirited, big organizations have persistently kept up the work of enlightening the people. Their efforts are being rewarded by having the pleasure of seeing the friendly attitude of the Sixty-ninth Congress toward helping States that are willing enough to carry on their good roads program, but are financially unable to bear the whole of the present heavy burden.

Good roads reduce taxes; they give the worker an opportunity to visit distant friends and to travel in comfort; they enable the farmer to reach distant markets that otherwise would be closed to him; they have helped to bring joy to the drudgery of domestic life by making it possible to travel in comfort in any season as we desire, disregarding distance and time of day. None have greater returns from good roads than the worker who daily may now travel distances to work that formerly required his absence from home for the week.

Regardless of whether the stretch of good road is within our State or in a distant one, I am for good roads and want to help get the best. I am in favor of the pending bill, H. R. 9504, which provides rural post roads, because I believe it is real economy. It gives all the people good value for the taxes paid and for the money spent in building good roads, whether for postal or general purposes.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is always a real pleasure to me to support an authorization for the expenditure of public funds for Federal aid for the building of good roads. I had the honor to be a member of the Committee on Roads 10 years ago when the first bill of this kind was reported from the committee and enacted into law by Congress. I refer to the Shackleford Federal aid road bill. At that time there was quite a division in the Congress as to the advisability of the Federal Government contributing to the States in the aid of good roads. But we passed the act, which carried, I think, $100,000,000 authorization. At that time it was suggested in the debate, and was urged as one of the arguments in favor of the policy of the Federal Government participating with the States in the building of roads, that such action would be an encouragement to the States and to the local subdivisions of the States to enter upon a constructive program of road building. I think that argument has been abundantly demonstrated to be sound by what has happened since that time.

In my opinion one of the most powerful incentives in this country in the past 10 years in inducing the States to enter upon the great program of road construction that we have seen in nearly all of them has been the aid and encouragement and approval given by the Federal Government to this great movement. Ten years ago the State of Illinois ranked twenty-ninth among the States of the Union in improved roads. Our whole State for four or five months out of every year was practically in the mud. Our towns were not connected with each other, and in places it was almost impossible for the people living in the rural districts to get into the towns for several months in the winter season. Two years after the enactment of the Federal aid law our people began to discuss road building, and in 1920 there was submitted to the voters of Illinois a proposition to issue bonds in the amount of $60,000,000 to be paid out of the automobile license fees, this fund to be used exclusively in the building of hard-surface roads.

The legislature laid out a system of roads, comprising some four thousand miles. The bonds were voted by the people by an immense majority, and our State commenced the improvement of its highways. At the end of two years it was seen that the $60,000,000 would not be sufficient to complete the program laid out, and the legislature submitted an additional bond issue of $100,000,000 to be paid in the same way. That was submitted to the people and the people by a very large majority voted that $100,000,000 and an additional system of 3,000 miles was laid out by the legislature. In the 10-year period since the passage of this Federal aid road bill the State of Illinois has advanced from twenty-ninth place until now she is the first State in all the Union in its mileage of improved surface highways. [Applause.] So it is with particular pleasure to-day that I support this authorization for $75,000,000 for the two ensuing fiscal years, to be contributed by the Federal Government as a part of the fund to be used by the States of the Union in the improvement of highways. Nothing does so much for the benefit of rural communities of the State as good roads, and this legislation and this policy of the Federal Government that we entered upon 10 years ago has been worth many times the amount of money it has taken out of the Treasury in encouraging the people of all the States to build improved roads. To-day this country is noted almost from ocean to ocean as a Nation of good roads, which all of its people enjoy, and which contribute greatly to their prosperity and happiness. [Applause.]

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to my colleague from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I simply rise to say that no committee of Congress has contributed more to the prosperity, the happiness, and the welfare of every State, Territory, and island possession of our great country than has the Committee on Public Roads. [Applause.]

It is a pleasure to recall in that connection that my distinguished friend and colleague from Alabama, Judge ALMON, has been for some years a member of that committee, and I think I voice the sentiments of his associates when I say that no member of that great committee has shown broader vision, wiser foresight, and more constructive thought in the preparation of the programs that they have from time to time recommended to the House than has my friend from Alabama. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask permission to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman already has that permission.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I yield back such time as I have not used.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BROWNE].

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, Charles Sumner over 50 years ago prophesied that the improvement of our schools and rural highways would do more toward advancing civilization than any other agencies. This great statesman's prophecy has come true. Back in Jefferson's time we began a system of Federal aid to construct the Cumberland Road from Cumberland, Md., toward the Ohio River, over which the march of civilization from the East toward the West began. The invention of the steamboat and the locomotive soon after turned the attention of the people from highways to these other ways of transportation, and appropriations were made for rivers and harbors and transcontinental railroads. As my friend from Iowa, Mr. RAMSEYER, said yesterday, we gave in land grants to the railroads more than the entire area of Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan, and Wisconsin—in value more than enough to build the railroads. We abandoned the idea of Federal aid to roads for over a century, leaving the matter of road building to the localities, until the Sixty-fourth Congress, when the Federal Government again passed a Federal aid law, July, 1916. Since the appropriation of 1916 we have appropriated $591,000,000 and the States have appropriated more than that amount to meet this amount. In 1918 we levied a Federal tax on automobiles, which the owners of automobiles paid, which amounted to $942,816,107; in other words, the auto owners and truck owners have paid in taxes $451,616,107 more than the Federal Government has appropriated up to date for roads.

Our system of Federal aid for roads established in 1916 was thought out carefully by the Committee on Roads, of which I had the honor to be a member. Investigations were made in different States and different countries. The question of apportioning the money appropriated between the several States was a perplexing question. After considering many ways, the committee finally agreed that the fairest way of apportioning the money appropriated for roads by the Federal Government was by apportioning one-third according to the area of a State, one-third according to the miles of post roads and one-third according to the population. This gave a State like the State of New York, with a large population, a fairly large area and quite a large road mileage, a very fair apportionment of these funds. It gave to a State like Rhode Island or a State like Connecticut, small in area but large in population, a fair amount. It gave to States like Montana and Wyoming, with a small population and a fairly small road mileage but a large area, a fair amount of the Federal aid appropriation. I do not think any fairer apportionment could have been made than was made in the road law of 1916. That this method of apportionment has never been changed but reenacted by every succeeding Congress justifies my statement that this is a fair way of apportioning the money.

The bill we are considering here to-day, the Dowell bill, appropriating $75,000,000 for the next two years, 1927 and 1928, is simply a continuation of the former road law.

This road law has been well administered by the Bureau of Public Roads and the money appropriated so honestly and efficiently expended that we have received a dollar's worth of road for every dollar expended. I think the people of the United States owe a great debt of gratitude to the director of public roads, Thomas H. MacDonald, who, for a very small salary, half of what a good many of the State highway commissioners are getting, has administered this road law so fairly and impartially and has given such satisfaction, that among the 48 States of the Union, I do not believe there is a single highway commissioner who is not his warm friend. [Applause.]

Commissioner McDonald is getting $6,500 a year, when most of the State highway commissioners are getting from $10,000 to $20,000 a year. The highway engineer of Wisconsin, Mr. Hirst, was getting $12,000 a year, and he resigned to accept a more lucrative position.

At first the cities objected because there was not a penny of this Federal appropriation that went into the construction of roads in any city of over 2,500 inhabitants, but the cities soon found they were benefited as much by these good roads as the country. Many commodities that had formerly been brought in by railroad were brought in by trucks much more conveniently and with far less handling, the trucks leaving the freight at the door. Take, for instance, the delivery of milk. In cities where formerly almost all of the milk came in by train, now 90 per cent of it comes in tank trucks. These tanks are glass lined and are built on the thermos-bottle principle, keeping the milk cool for many hours. The milk carried in the glass-lined trucks is delivered earlier than by rail and gets to its destination in better condition and at a somewhat lower price. So that from the utility standpoint the cities are getting the benefit of good roads as much as the country districts.

UNIMPROVED ROADS

The cost of hauling over the average unimproved roads has been estimated by good authority at 21 cents per ton-mile. The cost of hauling over improved roads is estimated at less than 13 cents per ton-mile, making a saving of 8 cents per ton-mile.

GROSS TONNAGE

The gross tonnage to be hauled over the highways of the United States on an average year is over 700,000,000 tons. This computation was made by a joint committee of Congress on Federal aid in 1914. It is much more than this now. The average haul computed at 9 miles makes a gross saving on the transportation over improved roads of 72 cents per ton. This, multiplied by the gross tonnage, gives $504,000,000 the saving per year through improved roads, estimated away back in 1914. In other words, the United States has been paying a penalty of more than $504,000,000 per year in the excessive cost of the transportation of our agricultural products alone because of its neglect of its highways.

The heaviest tax that the people of the United States are paying to-day is the poor road or mud tax. Quite a portion of this tax falls on the ultimate consumer and is shared by the laboring man in the city as well as the producer on the farm.

GOOD ROADS

The question of good roads concerns everybody. At one end of the road is the farmer with his crops for sale, which aggregated last year over $20,000,000,000. At the other end of the road is the city with its people waiting to be fed, with merchants waiting for trade, and with the railroad waiting for goods to transport. To whose advantage is it to have good roads? For the farmer to come to town it is clearly to the advantage of the merchant in the city and the railroads as much as it is to the farmer. Every man's house faces on a road that connects with every other road and leads to every other man's door and to every market place throughout the land. The farm and the farmers are the great and abiding support of the city.

President Coolidge in his message at the opening of this Congress made the following comment on Federal aid to roads:

I do, however, recommend for the consideration of Congress that future legislation restrict the Government's participation in State road construction to primary or interstate highways, leaving it to the State to finance the secondary and intercounty highways. This would tend to diminish the amount of Federal-aid contributions.

PRIMARY AND SECONDARY HIGHWAYS

In my opinion, it would be a very great injury to the good-roads movement to confine Federal aid to what are known as primary or interstate highways. Many highways that are designated as secondary highways become primary highways under our present Federal-aid system. For example, the total mileage of roads on which Federal aid can be spent in Wisconsin under the Federal aid law is 5,514 miles, or 7 per cent of the total road mileage of the State. Of this, three-sevenths, or 2,355 miles, are designated under the Federal aid law as primary highways, and four-sevenths, or 3,159 miles, as secondary Federal highways. If we received Federal aid as President Coolidge proposed only on our primary highways, our secondary highways consisting of 3,159 miles would be stricken from the Federal-aid system. You can see at once that this would be a great blow to the splendid system of Federal aid which is in the process of completion in the United States.

STATE AND FEDERAL AID

It was my privilege to be chairman of the highway committee in the State Senate of Wisconsin in 1907, and the first State aid law passed by Wisconsin bears my name.

In my platform upon which I ran for Congress in 1913 I promised to work for Federal aid for roads, and the establishment of the parcel post. I was placed on the first road committee which was created by the Sixty-third Congress in 1913, and assisted in drafting the present Federal aid law. I also worked for and voted for the establishment of the parcel post. I am in favor of extending our rural routes, which we can do without very much more expense on account of our hard surface roads, so that eventually every farmer will have a mail box in front of his house.

OPPOSITION TO FEDERAL AID TO HIGHWAYS

The opposition to Federal aid to highways comes from a few of the wealthy States east of the Allegheny Mountains.

Statements have recently been made on the floor of Congress and broadcasted throughout the country that New York pays over 25 per cent of every bill that the United States must meet. New York therefore argues that unless she receives back 25 per cent of any distribution of Federal aid she is imposed upon. I deny that New York or any State contributes 1 cent more to the Federal highway fund than it receives in benefits.

We are all proud of the city of New York, the financial center and the metropolis of the United States. We, however, maintain that the city of New York could not be the financial center and the metropolis of the United States if it were not for the natural resources, the millions of acres of wheat, cotton, corn, and the 25,000,000 dairy cows and the other great resources that contribute toward making this the wealthiest nation in the world.

In the 10-year period from 1912 to 1922 the wealth of the United States increased from $186,000,000,000 to $320,000,000,000, a net increase of $134,000,000,000. All of the 48 States, with their splendid citizenship, contributed to the increase of this unprecedented wealth. New York did no more than many other States in the creation of this wealth.

On May 15, 1925, the statement of the United States Treasury Department showed that while the deposits in the New York City national banks totaled $2,218,027,000, 38 per cent of these deposits were from banks and trust companies outside of New York State.

RAILROADS

The Union Pacific Railroad in 1923 paid an income tax in New York of four and a half million dollars, and yet this road does not operate east of Omaha and Kansas City, a half continent away from New York State.

The Southern Pacific paid a tax of $5,000,000 in New York and this road does not run any nearer than New Orleans.

The United States Steel Corporation in 1923 paid an income tax of $16,000,000 in New York. They have 145 plants, only two of which are in the State of New York. They have 153,350 stockholders who paid this tax, and only 32,322 of these stockholders live in the State of New York. Many other corporations pay their income tax in New York, but are obtaining their resources and making their money in other States of the Union as well as New York State. As an illustration of this, such large corporations as the American Railway Express, American Beet Sugar Co., American Can Co., American Locomotive Co., American Radiator Co., American Smelting & Refining Co., American Tobacco Co., Western Union Telegraph Co., Nevada Consolidated Copper Co. pay these taxes in New York. So I say that although New York does theoretically pay 25 per cent of the taxes, yet, as a matter of fact, she does not pay any more than her share, because this wealth is produced from all over the country, and if it was not for the development of the West and the great agricultural parts of the country New York would not be the wonderful metropolis we are all proud of to-day.

Wisconsin, with her dairy industry alone, produces over $200,000,000 in wealth each year. The South produces hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of cotton. The West produces wheat, corn, beef, and other farm products, besides the millions of dollars of oil and minerals; in the aggregate making a total of from $30,000,000,000 to $40,000,000,000 a year, and all of this wealth, no matter where it is eventually taxed, should help pay for the roads, for the roads contribute materially toward creating this great wealth. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILSON], who is president of the River and Harbor Congress, is not only a strong advocate of river and harbor improvement but is also for highways. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I am much indebted to my good friend from Alabama [Mr. ALMON] and the other members of the Committee on Roads who have worked so diligently to bring out this bill providing for a continuation of the great program of highway building that looks to the completion of our system of public roads so that it may take its proper place in the transportation trinity—rail, river, and road—that means so much to all classes of the American people.

As the situation stands to-day the railway system may be considered as practically completed, no new mileage is being added, and no substantial extensions are contemplated. We have recently entered upon a comprehensive and businesslike program for the completion and utilization of our waterways. With authorizations already made and that made by this bill, there will be available for the highway program between now and June 30, 1930, $300,000,000 to be expended by the Federal Government. This is what the friends of the highway system have advocated, and will make it possible to carry out the original intention, purpose, and plans of the Federal road program—a system of interstate highways connecting State capitals and principal cities, intrastate highways between county seats, and farm-to-market highways accessible to the main systems. The passage of this bill will bring new hope and confidence to the people living in the rural communities who have been continually paying taxes for the completion of the main lines, since this will enable the States, by joining local funds with the Federal contribution, to complete the connecting highways into the rural sections, and what we have termed the "farm-to-market" roads will be a reality.

With this comprehensive plan of highways completed it will be entirely practical to coordinate transportation over the system with our waterways. Not only for the cities and industrial centers, but also for the farmer as well.

Not long ago my attention was called to plans being worked out whereby schedules of time and place for shipment over one of our rivers would be given by radio the evening before, so that the growers of truck and other produce might come to the river landing over the improved highways and make direct connections into the market. Under our present rate of progress this will be entirely practical in all sections.

Shipment by water on our inland waterways is, generally speaking, about 20 per cent cheaper than rail, yet if the benefits of this are to accrue directly to more than a very limited number of shippers improved highways are necessary. This is because rail and water interchange facilities are quite expensive and consequently widely separated. All those originating freight which might be more cheaply shipped by water, and who are within striking distance by truck of the waterway and yet far removed from an interchange point, must depend upon highways and motor transportation for the connecting link.

When the program of Federal aid to highway construction was adopted there were 2,041,294 miles of roads in the United States, and under the act 200,349 were entitled to this aid. Of this mileage so entitled, 57,500 miles have been completed or are now under construction with Federal aid, and 62,900 miles have been completed by the States without Federal aid. The original program is therefore about 60 per cent completed. The action of the committee in bringing out this authorization bill is wholly justified, because it would have been unthinkable to abandon a well-thought-out program, one bringing returns to every citizen, short of completion.

In my own State of Louisiana there are 39,803 miles, of which 2,771 miles of highway are eligible for Federal aid. Of the mileage eligible, about 40 per cent has been completed. Louisiana has been one of the most, if not the most, progressive and active of the Southern States in this work. Our plans for interstate and important intrastate highways are in the midst of execution, with the work going forward in all the States. To make an orphan of this half-grown highway system would be an economic blunder, to say nothing of the fact that it would be a breach of faith with the States and their political subdivisions which have bonded and taxed themselves to carry on their share. I therefore say again that the action of the committee was eminently proper and just.

One other point, Mr. Chairman. I can see nothing in the objection raised to the cost of the completion of the program. The appropriations made under the authorization in this bill will be productive investments in the best sense of the word. The improvements will bring comfort and convenience to all our citizens and will pay for themselves in tax returns, perhaps many times over. To take but one feature of the returns brought in the form of taxes to the Federal Government by more and better highways: The improvements increase the production and use of automobiles, on which the United States collects a tax. This increases the incomes of the manufacturers, distributors, and repairmen of automobiles and thereby increases the income taxes received from these people by the United States. And so the returns, direct and indirect, might be followed through the oil industry, the accessory people, and so on, almost ad infinitum. Returning, however, to the direct tax levied by the United States on the sales of automobiles, trucks, and accessories: Since 1918 the United States has collected $791,000,000 from this source, almost twice the amount it has put into roads.

I can say with confidence that the continuation of Federal aid in road building meets the approval and support of an overwhelming majority of the people throughout the country.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to another distinguished, patriotic statesman from Louisiana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I hope the introduction that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON] has given me does not carry with it an implication that my colleague, Mr. RILEY J. WILSON, who just preceded me, is lacking in patriotism or statesmanship. [Laughter.]

Gentlemen of the committee, I do not intend to impose upon you at this late hour in the evening with anything like an elaborate speech, but it has just occurred to me that in view of the fact that Louisiana was so backward for a number of years in road building and is so very much interested in it now that a few words from me on the bill under consideration might not be amiss. The conditions in southern Louisiana—I mean the physical surface conditions—retarded the movement of road building very considerably. But as in the case of all movements that are retarded, we latterly showed a wonderful burst of speed, and in accordance with the law of compensation have made up for whatever time that was originally lost. In addition to that we were able to profit by the experience of other States, though our conditions, I repeat, are somewhat different from those that obtain or prevail in other sections of our country. We have in southern Louisiana, within 6 inches of the surface of the soil and going down several feet in depth, a clay mud bottom, which made road building extremely difficult. Right at this point it may be of some information to the many Members present in the House, notwithstanding the lateness of the evening, to know that the clay mud bottom is the reason why we have such beautiful rice fields in the lower part of our wonderful State. Rice needs a great deal of water, which is furnished to the fields in our section through a series of main canals and laterals. The process is economic, for the reason that the only way the water can escape is through evaporation. It is utterly impossible for water to percolate through clay which is gluish and bluish in its consistency.

Without a clay mud bottom it would be so expensive to keep the fields in water as to preclude farmers from the cultivation of rice. But to return to our mutton, as the French say—that is, to the subject of good roads—all parts of Louisiana, north, south, east, and west, are making such prodigious strides in road building, having several years ago solved the engineering problem of the clay mud bottom obstacle as to make the many visitors who pass through our beautiful Commonwealth express their amazement and wonderment in admiring tones. Through the piney-woods section, the cotton, the cane, and the rice fields run these splendid roads, which are a source of profit, comfort, and pleasure not only to Louisianians but to thousands of people from other States that visit us and then pass on to new scenes. In the very near future there will be completed two great bridges over the marsh section that lies between New Orleans and the Gulf coast, and then millions of people will annually pass through New Orleans, moving east and west along the great Spanish Trail.

En passant, we, in the Mother of States, as Louisiana is affectionately styled, are interested not only in good roads but in the profitable operation of our railroads, for we are the friends and not the enemies of railroads. We recognize that they are among the outstanding factors in the development of the wonderful civilization that obtains in the United States of America; but if we are interested in good roads and railroads, we are for obvious reasons interested in the scientific and logical development of rivers and harbors, with a view of ultimately coordinating these great transportation systems into a unified whole that will make for the greater glory and profit of the Nation.

The Rules Committee should unhesitatingly and immediately grant the rule for which the friends of rivers and harbors are asking in order that the bill reported out by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors shall have consideration and an expeditious passage through the House. We want the fraternal strife ended in regard to the bill, which is presently raging in the steering committee as a result of a division of thought among prominent Republican Members of the House as to whether or not certain features of the bill should be eliminated or not. We who are friendly to all waterway projects that will add to the transportation facilities of the country earnestly hope that the cruel war will soon be over and that the rule, the rule for which we are clamoring, will be granted.

I can not resist the opportunity presented through this discussion of transportation to remark that about seven or eight years ago while in the city of Chicago where I had gone to deliver an address a booklet was handed to me by a young man with the request that I read the editorials it contained taken from the New York American. I regard it as one of the best booklets that I ever had the pleasure of reading, but loaned it so frequently and to so many people that it was, of course, finally lost. For books, like umbrellas, are treated by many honest folks as not subject to larceny and property whose ownership varies with the possession. One of the editorials was on the subject of the desirability of the Government or the people of the United States acquiring all of the railroads and then operating them free of cost for the shipment of goods and the carrying of passengers. Such a suggestion may seem at first sight to you who are listening to me as blizzard as it read to the millions who read it; but, my friends, in the fullness of time that writer's suggestion will be vindicated and become a glorious reality.

Under such a mode of transportation farm land 500 miles from New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, or San Francisco, or any other port, or from any inland city would become just as valuable as farm land within a hundred miles of the same city. For it is clear to even the superficial observer that the greatest factor in contributing to value of agricultural lands is the freight rates to which the products of that land are subjected. I believe that it was Fletcher who said:

I care not who write the laws of a country if you will permit me to write its songs.

And I might suggest to you that I would care not who wrote the laws of a country or was its executive if you were to grant me the right to fix the freight rates on all the commodities that move over that land through its transportation channels. Of course, there were many who endeavored to deride the editorial writer by suggesting that millions of people would be traveling constantly, because there was no cost attached to it. It did not take long, however, to see how ridiculous was such an assumption. Some few relatively might gratify a curiosity to ride to a place that would be expensive, but the novelty over they would soon subside to normalcy; and business men and farmers never ship except that which they desire to sell.

Gentlemen of the committee, the idea of that editorial writer will be vindicated in less than a quarter of a century. We are gradually adopting it, in a measure, right now in this bill, for Federal aid to the several States for road building means nothing more nor less than giving to shippers and passengers for nothing at least a part of their transportation. I am in favor of it—do not mistake me. But I want you not to be confused and to understand that the proposition is not a revolutionary one as you might have thought when I first suggested it. In the fullness of time, in a quarter of a century as I suggested a moment ago, the idea in its entirety will be thoroughly vindicated. You are giving gradual expression to it in the appropriation for rivers and harbors.

For the millions and millions we are giving to good roads and rivers and harbors is a contribution to free transportation to the people and their goods. If you can build roads and waterways, you can build the equipment that will run over them. As a matter of fact that is what we are doing right now in the operation of the Mississippi-Warrior Barge Line. Do not be startled, gentlemen, it is in the coming and will come because it is the inexorable and logical development of the foundation which we are laying in building good roads and developing waterways. There is no doubt that in the near future the Government without the assistance and regardless of the attitude of some States will construct two great national highways from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, one running through the northern tier of States and one running through the southern tier of States, and two other great roads running from the Canadian line to the Mexican border and the Gulf of Mexico, one through the Eastern States and one through the Western States. Probably it will startle you to know a prophet in his own country, for he deserves this title, Arthur Brisbane recently, while writing on the subject of New Orleans, the Gulf coast, and his friendly visit to one of the great publishers of the country, Col. Robert C. Ewing, stated that the time would come when the Great Lakes to the Gulf would be such a reality that ships would be seen steaming up the Mississippi River and through its tributary, the Illinois River, to the great inland city of Chicago, which is the glory of the Great Lakes. You are coming to what the editorial writer on the American brilliantly forecast years ago.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. If the Government can spend fabulous millions to build highways it ought to build waterways over which boats can float.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MADDEN. Internal commerce of the country is of such importance as to justify the development of the internal waterways for the carriage of goods of the manufacturers and the products of the farmers—

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Unquestionably.

Mr. MADDEN. That is true, is it not, in the Central and Middle West, where we are thousands of miles away from the seaboard?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. And within a quarter of a century you are going to come to the conclusion that you will best promote the general welfare of this country by equalizing the value of land and distributing cities a little more scientifically. Instead of having congested cities of several millions in population, you will have more cities, splendidly situated geographically, and you are going to have the people free from the tyranny of freight rates. I agree with the gentleman in so far as his interrogation is concerned. I do not ask him to agree with what I said in addition, because it might carry him a little farther than he is willing to go presently.

Mr. MAPES. Does the gentleman know of any period within the last 25 years when the existing transportation systems of the country took care of the traffic better than they have in the last two or three years?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. I do not exactly catch the import of the gentleman's interrogatory. I am not complaining about the instrumentalities that we have. They are conducting the business which brought them into existence admirably, I think; but I do state that advancement and a desire to meet the general demand for lower freight rates and the inexorable logic of the position that we have assumed in giving aid to the States in constructing highways will carry us inevitably to the end of the trail, and that is to build the equipment on which to operate over these roads and to carry free the goods and products of the people, farmer, and consumer, manufacturer and tradesman alike. It may seem radical and extraordinary but it is coming. It is not revolutionary. It is evolution, and you—we can not sidestep. It will come so slowly and surely that there will be no commotion attending its march. The clamor for reductions but thinly conceals the desire for rates that will be zero, or at the vanishing point, to use a much used phrase.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HARE].

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I do not know that I can make any further contributions in the way of an argument favoring Federal aid for roads. I rise to say that, in my judgment, we are in our infancy, in the road-building business. We have just begun. We take a great deal of pride in saying how much we have contributed to the building of roads in the last few years. We compliment ourselves in narrating the number of miles we have constructed. Yet I believe we have only begun; I believe, as I have said, we are only in the infancy of the system of building roads by appropriations from our Federal Government. I think that as soon as the main "throughways" have been constructed we are then going to build "highways" into the "byways." In other words, I believe as soon as the great network of roads has been completed between the States and the various sections of the country we will then launch out upon a system of building roads to such an extent that all of the rural mail routes of these United States will be constructed and maintained at the expense of the Federal Government, and I hope to see it done at no distant day.

It is rather singular that the excise tax from automobiles this year corresponds so nearly with the appropriation called for in this bill. We find that the estimated excise tax on automobiles for 1926 will approximate $75,000,000, and we are authorizing to be appropriated $75,000,000 for a two-year period. In view of the fact that the good-roads idea or the good-roads policy of the Government is a permanent, stable, and definite thing, it would be well for our Federal Government to consider creating what might be known as a Federal highway fund, whereby we can take the excise tax—that is, a tax paid when a person buys an automobile—and place it into a Federal highway fund, to be used exclusively in the construction and maintenance of highways. It is unfortunate that we have to pay this tax, for I am opposed to it; but if it is to be collected, we should set it aside and use it for the construction and maintenance of public highways; and if the highway system inaugurated by the Federal Government is to be permanent and continue, the Federal Government ought to begin such a program for financing the construction and maintenance of these roads in the future. [Applause.]

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SPROUL].

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, though a new member of the Roads Committee, I have immensely enjoyed both my associations and my work.

I desire to congratulate not only the committee but the House as well, upon having for the head of the Roads Committee the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] who has so ably and courteously guided the committee during its lengthy hearings upon the Federal aid roads bill, H. R. 9504.

Mr. Chairman, in the discussion of this bill, I desire to call attention to two remarkable facts which have been developed in the hearings before the committee and various speeches which have been made in support of this bill.

In the consideration of this bill before the Roads Committee and here on the floor of the House, not only no Member of the House has offered one word of opposition to the bill, but no word of opposition was offered to the Roads Committee during its entire hearings. This, to my mind, is not only remarkable, but it proves the almost universal popularity of Federal road legislation.

Another remarkable fact is that among the many distinguished Members of the House who have spoken in favor of this bill in strong terms of indorsement, are the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Judge ALMON], the ranking Member on the minority side of the Roads Committee, the gentleman from Texas [Judge HUDSPETH], the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PEERY], the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KEMP], the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HARE], the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON], and the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROSSIGNOL], ranking Member on the Republican side of the committee; men who, like myself, were born and reared in that section of our country where the doctrine of local self-government was more than elsewhere indelibly impressed on the minds of our ancestors by the tyrannical and oppressive rule of King George's government. I say this too, Mr. Chairman, is a remarkable fact.

Mr. Chairman, I am not informed as to the originator of this Federal aid for roads proposition, but certainly there is great credit due some person or persons for a proposition that has brought so much good to this Government and its people.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. ALMON. The gentleman will recall that the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is the only Member of the House now who was a member of the joint congressional committee, the report of which was very largely instrumental in the Congress of the United States in establishing this highway system.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. I thank the gentleman from Alabama for this information. This, however, is merely cumulative proof of the great worth of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] to his country as a real statesman.

The governments of the original thirteen States, because of hardships experienced by the people under the reign of King George, provided for road districts of 3 or 4 square miles in area and a supervisor for each road district. Township or district boards, consisting of three members, also had some road-building jurisdiction. The roads built by these officers did not connect and coordinate, and for this reason only a very few years ago road building was vested in the county officers. A better system of roads, although limited to counties, was built. As the demands for intercounty travel increased it was observed that the roads of adjoining counties did not coordinate and connect in such way as to accommodate intercounty highway traffic. This condition gave rise to a demand for State boards to control and regulate intercounty or State road building. And as the population has increased and progress been made in various lines, including interstate traffic over public highways, the demand for interstate or national highways has grown throughout the whole country, hence the Federal aid and supervision laws by the Congress.

Fifty years ago there was no considerable sentiment or demand for an interstate or national road system. At that time Congress could not have been induced to enact the Federal road laws that we now have.

The country and natural resources of the United States have been wonderfully developed during the past 50 years, until its population now is approximately 117,000,000 people. To accommodate the demands of business being conducted throughout the whole country, 250,000 miles of railroad and 3,000,000 miles of public highways have been built to connect the thousands of municipal and the 48 State governments within the United States. Upon these 3,000,000 miles of public highway are driven more than 20,000,000 motor vehicles.

It is said that one-fifth of our entire population is traveling interstate every day, and that that one-fifth of the population changes every day, so that the one-fifth moving interstate today is different from the one-fifth that moved yesterday or which will move to-morrow or the day following, so that during a short space of time practically our entire population is moving interstate over the public highways of the country.

Mr. Chairman, the subject of an interstate public highway system has been wisely and lucidly discussed from many viewpoints. Various plans for raising money with which to build State road systems have been advanced. The North Carolina plan and system has been specially mentioned. It seems to comprehend an entire State system to be built from an issue of bonds, the bonds to be liquidated by a fund to be raised exclusively from a tax on motor vehicles, gasoline, and oils. It is said this plan of raising the money is working successfully; providing an ample interest fund, sinking fund, and maintenance fund, and relieving the taxpayers of any other tax burden for road purposes. Of course, the Federal-aid fund coming into the State contributes its share of the requirement for road purposes. In this connection it might be suggested that the Federal tax on automobiles, paid by those who purchase them throughout the United States, amounts to more than the Government appropriation of $75,000,000 per year, so that if every State would employ the North Carolina system it might be said that the automobile purchasers and users would pay not only the State's share but the Federal Government's share of all road building and maintenance funds. When all the States impose a reasonable tax on motor vehicles, gasoline, and oils for road-building purposes it will be true in substance that the automobile owners will be contributing the sum total of the money expended in the United States in building and maintaining public highways.

A splendid and comprehensive system of good public highways in the United States constitutes the best of all educational agencies, an agency that enables the inhabitants in one part of the country to travel and see and learn of the development and progress of the country, industrially, edu-ationally, and morally. It furnishes an opportunity to become acquainted with the greatest country in the world and the greatest people in the world; to see the most interesting natural scenery and phenomena. The road system furnishes an opportunity and an inducement for the people to become acquainted with each other. The road system gets rid of sectionalism and the prejudices of one part of the country against another. It makes better and more loyal citizens. It makes the entire people of our country united and harmonious, just as the United States is a solid and indivisible Government. A splendid interstate public highway system is the best possible national defense the Government can have. It would be an effective substitute for railways when for any reason they are not properly functioning.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to discuss for a few minutes a proposition quite intimately associated with the highways. During the past summer and fall I had a pleasant trip from my home in Kansas, west to the Yellowstone National Park and from the park, over a different route, back through Kansas and into the Southern States to northern Alabama, where I visited with interest the great Muscle Shoals dam and power project, which is located in the congressional district of our good friend, Judge ALMON. From Alabama we drove through Tennessee and other States back to Washington. On these trips, of necessity, we were continually passing from one municipal jurisdiction and State jurisdiction into and through other municipal and State jurisdictions. We were continually traveling interstate. This long automobile trip over the public highways furnished an opportunity to observe a most complex and varied lot of traffic laws and regulations; laws that we knew nothing about and were therefore unable to obey.

The failure of the police to enforce the laws against us enabled us to keep out of the police courts. These many traffic regulations in the different cities and States were as different as the cities and States were different. No two cities, no two States, have the same traffic laws and regulations. Because of these conflicting and overlapping traffic regulations, no person traveling interstate can avoid breaking the laws and getting into police court once in a while. There is no question, Mr. Chairman, that it is costing the people of the United States many millions of dollars to even try to enforce the traffic regulations. Police courts are congested. Men are becoming law violators but do so reluctantly and unavoidably. Traveling interstate as they do, they can not know the laws of the jurisdiction into which they are continually going and traveling. One-half of all the crime in the United States consists in traffic violations. This subject, Mr. Chairman, deserves the attention of the American people.

The traveling public do not wish to be lawbreakers and to pay fines in the police court; but they can not avoid it if they travel. No good whatever comes from penalizing an interstate traveler. The next city into which he goes will have different traffic regulations about which he knows nothing and so he gets into trouble again. He thus unavoidably becomes a lawbreaker. There is too much differing and conflicting law to be in harmony with good citizenship.

I have here called attention to the cause for much of the crime in the country. This traffic regulation involves two or more questions, one a moral or good government question, another is economical, having to do with money and property, expenditure and loss; and there might be a third question, that of protection to life.

Many millions in money are paid out in maintaining the police, in fines, cost of maintaining police courts, and in damage to property, and the question is how to save and avoid spending this money.

The morale of our citizenship is being broken down. A general disrespect for law is being created.

Uniform title and transfer certificates of ownership could be provided by Federal law, thereby greatly reducing the number of larcenies of automobiles and incidentally reducing the number of holdups and robberies.

What are we going to do about these objectionable conditions? Shall we have uniform interstate traffic regulations? If so, how may they be brought about? It is possible that uniformity may be brought about to a degree by a system of amity agreements between the legal representatives of the different State or municipal governments; but it indeed would be very difficult to achieve much success by that method. Congress could enact legislation, as it certainly has power to do under the Constitution, which would provide for uniform traffic regulations throughout the United States.

The Constitution gives the Congress power to regulate interstate commerce and to build post roads, yet there may be some question as to just how far Congress, by legislation, may go in regulating all character of traffic upon the public highways in the various States.

As I have stated, there is a big moral question involved, as well as a big economical one, in bringing about uniform highway traffic regulations.

While the system of highways of the United States is of inestimable worth to the people and the Government, yet incidental to its use, as I have suggested, are problems for solution by our thinking people. Whether uniform traffic regulations should be provided by Congress, if possible, is a question which should receive the serious consideration of the public. To throw some light upon the subject of the powers of Congress in that regard, I submit a few excerpts of opinions of courts defining the term "interstate commerce," what it includes, and so forth, and explaining the extent to which the Congress may regulate interstate and intrastate commerce. And we might say that many contend that Congress has ample power to regulate all automobile traffic upon connected interstate public highways, no matter to what remote part of the State they may extend:

The term "commerce" is defined in Givens v. Ogden (22 U. S. (9 Wheat.) 1, 6 L. A. D. 23) to mean not only traffic, but also intercourse.

In Southern Railway Co. v. Railroad Commission (1913) (179 Ind. 23, 100 N. E. 337) the court said: "There are some general propositions that may be regarded as settled:

"First. That the power of regulating commerce 'among the States' is in Congress and the subject of exclusive Federal control.

"Second. That when Congress does act, and its action covers the subject matter, its action is exclusive as to interference.

"Third. Until and unless Congress does act, and its action covers the subject matter, the States may act.

"Fourth. That so long as the action of the States is not repugnant to, or does not interfere with, or place burdens upon, or undertake to regulate interstate commerce, or are mere police regulations, their action, though in aid, or if in aid, of interstate commerce, is not invalid, unless it is a direct interference.

"Fifth. That it is not enough to render the State law invalid that it is similar to the Federal act upon the same subject. It must in operation interfere directly or substantially with interstate commerce, and not be an accidental or casual interference or remotely affect it hurtfully.

"Sixth. That where both the acts of Congress and of the State make a definite act an offense, the commission of the act may be an offense against each and punishable by each."

The police power of a State can not obstruct foreign or interstate commerce because the necessity of it is exercised, nor can objects not within its scope be secured under color of the police power at the expense of the protection afforded by the Federal Constitution. (Railroad Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 455; Crenshaw v. Arkansas, 389.)

Pensacola Telegraph Co. v. Western Union (96 U. S. 9), in which the court said:

The powers thus granted are not confined to instrumentalities * * * known or in use when the Constitution was adopted, but they keep pace with the progress of the country and adapt themselves to the new developments of time and circumstances. They extend from the horse with its rider to the stagecoach, from the sailing vessel to the steamboat, from the coach and the steamboat to the railroad, and from the railroad to the telegraph as these new agencies are successively brought into use to meet the demands of the increasing population and wealth. They were intended for the government of the business to which they relate at all times and under all circumstances. As they were intrusted to the General Government for the good of the Nation, it is not only the right but the duty of Congress to see to it that intercourse among the States and the transmission of intelligence are not obstructed or unnecessarily encumbered by State legislation.

The term "commerce" not only includes navigation but the transportation, by whatever agencies, of commodities or passengers, even on foot, or the transmission of ideas, and it is immaterial whether such transportation is connected with a sale. Included in the term transportation are all the services in connection with the receipt and delivery of the property transported. (Pennsylvania v. Wheeling Brdg. Co., 13 How. 518; Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall. 713; Head Money cases, 112 U. S. 580.)

NATIONAL SUBJECTS REQUIRING UNIFORM REGULATIONS

The power to regulate commerce among the States, etc., is an absolute and exclusive grant of power to Congress; so far exclusive that no State has power to make any law or regulation which will affect the free and unrestrained intercourse and trade among the States. Whatever subjects of this power are in their nature national, or admit only of one uniform system of regulation, may justly be said to be of such a nature as to require exclusive legislation by Congress. The power embraces all the instruments by which such commerce may be conducted. Commerce, as embraced by this clause, strictly considered, consists in intercourse and traffic, including in these terms navigation and the transportation and transit of persons and property, as well as the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities. Whatever may be the nature and extent of the police power, no definition of it and no urgency for its use can authorize a State to exercise it in regard to a subject matter which has been confided to Congress exclusively. Whenever the statute of a State invades the domain of legislation which belongs exclusively to Congress it is void, no matter under what class of powers it may fall or how closely allied to powers conceded to belong to the States. (Pittsburg, etc. v. Coal Co. v. Bates, 156 U. S. 587; Minnesota Rate cases, 230 U. S. 352.)

INCIDENTAL CONTROL OF INTERSTATE RATES

Congress may control intrastate rates of a carrier under State authority when necessary to remove the resulting unjust discrimination against interstate commerce from the relation between intrastate and interstate rates which are unreasonable in themselves. (Houston, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., 234 U. S. 342; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Illinois, 245 U. S. 493.)

COMMINGLING OF INTERSTATE AND INTRASTATE TRANSACTIONS

The authority of Congress extends to every part of interstate commerce and to every instrumentality or agency by which it is carried on, and the full control by the Congress of the subjects committed to its regulation is not to be denied or thwarted by the commingling of interstate and intrastate operations. This is not to say that the Nation may deal with the internal concerns of the State, as such, but that the execution by Congress of its constitutional power is not limited by the fact that intrastate transactions may have become so interwoven therewith that the effective government of the former incidentally controls the latter. This conclusion necessarily results from the supremacy of the national power within its appointed sphere. (Minnesota rate cases, 200 U. S. 352.)

TO STATES IN GENERAL

It is within the power of Congress to permit the exercise of the power to regulate interstate commerce by the States. In sections 4278 and 4279 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to nitroglycerin and other explosives, Congress gives directly to any State, Territory, District, city, or town the right to prohibit the introduction of such substances into its limits for sale, use, or consumption therein. (Ex parte Jervey, 63 Fed. 960.)

It has been considered that the power given to Congress to regulate commerce is the power to prescribe the rule by which it shall be governed, and that "commerce," in the sense in which the word is used in the Constitution, is coextensive in its meaning with "intercourse." In so far as intercourse between two States consists in traffic, a rule prescribing the subjects of that traffic, or dictating the mode in which or the condition on which such traffic must be prosecuted is a commercial regulation. (Carson River Lumbering Co. v. Patterson, 33 Cal. 334, 339.)

"Commerce with foreign nations and among States," strictly considered, consists of intercourse and traffic, including in these terms navigation and the transportation and transit of persons and property, as well as the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities. (Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission of Tennessee (U. S., 19 Fed. 679, 709.)

"Commerce," as used in Constitution, Article I, paragraph 8, providing that Congress shall have power to regulate commerce, etc., embraces all instruments by which commerce may be conducted. (Trade-mark Cases, 100 U. S. 82, 96, 25 L. Ed. 550.)

"Commerce," as used in the Federal Constitution, includes within its scope and meaning interstate passenger travel, and the power vested in Congress to regulate commerce as applied to such travel is so far exclusive in its character that the State may not by any act of legislation impose burdens upon either the carrier or the passenger which would obstruct or hinder the free course of travel. (Fry v. State, 63 Ind. 552, 562, 30 Am. Rep. 238.)

"Commerce," as used in the clause of the Federal Constitution giving Congress exclusive right to regulate interstate commerce, includes passengers traveling into or through a State, and hence a State statute imposing a tax upon persons passing through or beyond its territorial limits is unconstitutional. (Crandall v. State of Nevada, 73 U. S. (6 Wall.) 35, 43; 18 L. Ed. 744, 745.)

Immigration is an ingredient of intercourse and traffic, so that the power to regulate commerce includes the power to regulate immigration; hence a State statute attempting to do so is unconstitutional. (Lin Sing v. Washburn, 20 Calif. 534, 570.)

While there have been times, places, and conditions in the history of our country when and where the doctrine of local self-government was not only sufficient but was and may yet be clearly the most appropriate and best doctrine for the needs of the people, yet now it would seem that in highway building and regulating the bigger and more general governments may function best to give the people what they need to meet the progress and requirements of the times.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired, and the Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purposes of carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, and all acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following additional sums, to be expended according to the provisions of such act as amended:

The sum of $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928.

The sum of $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929.

SEC. 2. For carrying out the provisions of section 23 of the Federal highway act, approved November 9, 1921, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for forest roads and trails, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following additional sums, to be available until expended in accordance with the provisions of said section 23:

The sum of $7,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928.

The sum of $7,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929.

Not later than January 1 next preceding the commencement of each fiscal year the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to apportion among the several States the appropriations heretofore, herein, or hereafter made or authorized to be made as provided in section 23 of the Federal highway act approved November 9, 1921.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, this $7,000,000 means a great deal to such States as Nevada. Nevada has 110,000 square miles, with only 16 per cent on the tax rolls, with 77,000 people, and with forest reserves and Indian reservations within its boundaries. This $7,000,000 will go a great way toward taking off the burden resting upon the State on account of these forest reserves and Indian reservations; a burden that the people of Nevada carry in order to furnish their proportionate share of the money necessary to meet the financing of the Federal highways.

I repeat, this highway construction in Nevada means a great deal. Before the construction of the Federal highways the State of Nevada really presented a gap in the transcontinental road across the western country, with its dry lakes, with its deserts, with its mountainous roads. To-day one will find in crossing the State of Nevada completed highways, with but few gaps in the entire length across the State. In 1927 we shall find the two highways, the Lincoln and the Overland Trail within the State of Nevada completed from the boundary of Utah westward to the boundary of California across the State of Nevada.

At that time I think it can be truly said that the transcontinental highways from Washington, D. C., to the Golden Gate will have been completed, and it seems to me that a fitting celebration should be had on the completion of such a transcontinental highway as either of these roads will be.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. ARENTZ. Indeed I will.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman does not want the United States to enter upon the further expense of celebrating this thing, after having given these roads to the people of the various States?

Mr. ARENTZ. I am glad the gentleman brought that up.

Mr. MADDEN. After all, the State from which the gentleman comes contributes little to the construction of the public roads. We pay more for the construction of roads in Nevada than the State pays to the Government.

Mr. ARENTZ. The State of Nevada pays to the very limit of its capacity to pay. It is well to look into the history of the past of the State of Nevada. There is one little area within our State, that around Virginia City, which has produced in wealth during the time the country most needed it, gold and silver to the extent of $650,000,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Who got it?

Mr. ARENTZ. The Atlantic cable and the Union Pacific Railroad and the Palace Hotel were constructed from this new wealth after it had been deposited in the Treasury of the United States, through the elasticity of which it represented a billion or more of credit.

Mr. MADDEN. They got the money out, but what did they do with it?

Mr. ARENTZ. They did a great deal of good with it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nevada has expired.

Mr. ARENTZ. We intend to celebrate the completion of the transcontinental highway.

Mr. MADDEN. Who? Your State?

Mr. ARENTZ. The United States, with the assistance of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. We have built the road. That is celebration enough.

Mr. ARENTZ. We are going by means of that road to take people over to the State of Utah and the State of California and across to the State of Iowa; take the people out there into Nevada to show them the wonders of the transcontinental highway.

Mr. MADDEN. Who is going to do that?

Mr. ARENTZ. The State of Nevada, with the assistance of the Federal Government, through the courtesy of my friend from Illinois. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. I can assure the gentleman that Nevada will not do it at the expense of the United States if I have anything to say about it. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 3. All acts or parts of acts in any way inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed, and this act shall take effect on its passage.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TINCER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9504) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered.

Mr. DOWELL. I have been requested, Mr. Speaker, to ask unanimous consent that all Members may have the right to extend their remarks in the Record for five legislative days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all Members may have the privilege of extending their remarks on this bill for five legislative days. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was ordered to be laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—FEDERAL AID IN CONSTRUCTION OF ROADS

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to give my support to this bill. We have three great systems of transportation in this country—the highway system, the railroad system, and the waterway system. All are of vital importance to the progress and prosperity of the Nation. Of these systems, none so directly affect and control community life, and through community life national welfare, as our public highways.

Our Federal-aid highway system, while of comparatively recent origin, is the most gigantic national highway system of any country in the world. In its present form it dates from the year 1916, when the Federal Government, recognizing the economic need of the Nation for the improvement of the main public thoroughfares, passed a Federal-aid road act appropriating $75,000,000, to be expended during a five-year period as aid to States contributing at least an equal amount for the improvement of a system of highways under the direction of the Bureau of Public Roads in the Department of Agriculture in conjunction with the State highway departments of the various States desiring to participate in the program.

In 1921 the Federal highway act provided for a limited system of roads amounting to about 200,000 miles, and each State that desired to participate in the Federal funds was given the privilege of designating something like 7 per cent of its highways as Federal aid highways. This system of Federal aid met with such universal favor throughout the country that it has been continued from year to year, and this bill extends the law for an additional two years by authorizing an appropriation of $75,000,000 for each year as a Federal contribution to the States for the construction of highways under the act of 1916 as amended. The expenditure of Federal money for this purpose is an investment rather than a contribution and is reflected in substantial dividends through increase in national wealth, thereby promoting the general welfare of the American people.

In my own State of Illinois, on November 4, 1918, a proposition was submitted to the voters to issue bonds in the sum of $60,000,000 for a system of hard-surfaced highways to be paid solely out of motor-vehicle license fees. Under this issue it was proposed to build something like 4,700 miles of hard-surfaced roadways. All funds available for highway construction under this bond issue, it was found, would be exhausted by the end of 1924 and that the $60,000,000 would not build the mileage proposed. A proposition was submitted to the people in November, 1924, to issue an additional $100,000,000 in bonds payable out of auto license fees to complete the mileage proposed under the bonds already issued and to build 5,100 miles of additional hard-surfaced highways.

This issue was likewise authorized by a vote of an overwhelming majority, and together with Federal contributions, Illinois has to-day completed and has in process of building a hard-surfaced system of highways second to none in any State of the Union. The proposed mileage, with the character of construction employed, can not be built out of the proceeds of the two bond issues, but it will reach far in that direction.

Under this system of Federal aid the Federal funds annually apportioned to the State of Illinois for 1920 and subsequent years are as follows:

1921	4,305,067.91
1922	3,246,281.07
1923	2,164,187.38
1924	2,797,888.59
1925	3,203,867.90
1926	3,220,090.00
1927	3,175,616.00

The apportionment for the year 1927 was made available on December 31, 1925, making a total Federal apportionment to the State for the years named of $26,325,545.18.

I am in favor of continuing this Federal support. All patriotic American citizens are interested in their respective communities and want to see their community grow and prosper and develop along social, economical, and educational lines. They want to see the standards of living in their community on the highest possible plane to the end that peace, happiness, contentment, and prosperity may be theirs to enjoy and transmit to their children and their children's children. As the Nation is a composite of communities and national life reflects community life, national life is raised to a higher standard of peace, happiness, contentment, and prosperity as community life is developed and made better.

While the development of a system of good roads is of inestimable value to all classes and all communities, it is of special benefit to the farming interests of the country. It enables the farmer to get his products to the market with the least possible delay and to take advantage of the prices when they are most advantageous. It is said we are living in a motor age. Marvelous changes have been effected in the economical and social life of America by the advent of the automobile. Motor trucks and motor vehicles have practically supplanted the slow-moving horse-drawn conveyances, and with an improved system of hard-surfaced public highway trunk lines and improved connecting highways the markets and the farmers are brought closer together and a more efficient and economical marketing and distributing system provided at a great saving of time and money. It has to a great extent destroyed the isolation of the farm and the farmer, permitted a notable extension in educational facilities, is an effective aid in medical relief, and is conducive to social intercourse and more friendly relations. It has been a great boon to rural communities and should not be discontinued.

The Federal Government can well afford to aid and assist in working out and building a great national system of trunk-line highways, as it adds to the general welfare of the people and is conducive to peace, contentment, and prosperity of the American people as a whole and cements more firmly the bonds of national fellowship. The $75,000,000 a year which the Federal Government contributes under the Federal aid highway law, and which this bill continues for an additional two years, is less than the users of motor vehicles will pay into the Federal Treasury through the excise tax under the present revenue law, and this tax, collected as it is from the users of the roads, can be put to no better use by the Government than by applying it in conjunction with State highway departments to building and maintaining an effective and efficient system of improved highways.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker, this bill which authorizes the continuation of the road-building program for a period of two years to end January 30, 1928, and June 30, 1929, and which authorizes an appropriation for each year of $75,000,000 is a very worthy measure. It provides for the forest trail roads, carrying the sum of $7,500,000 for the same period as stated above. This is a continuation of the Federal-aid work now being carried on between the Federal Government and the several States.

In my opinion, this division of Federal aid is serving the country much better, by assisting the rural people in their transportation problem, than the Federal aid heretofore granted to railroads.

It is very apparent with the policy of the consolidation of railroads into large systems, which policy is already here, that the public highway must be laid out and constructed looking to the farmers' future transportation route for marketing farm products. The next problem then will be to prevent any attempt to put the highways under a Government licensing system so that the poor man's avenue of transportation will not be burdened with unjust charges; it is the one avenue open to-day that virtually prevents confiscation of the farmers' surplus products.

The unanimity of approval which this bill has met in the House shows the crystallization of sentiment for the present Government road program.

A country is measured by the prosperity and intellectual development of its citizenship. Citizenship builds and develops cities, counties, States, and nations. It is a well-known maxim that the morals and laws of a city, county, or State are not higher than the morals and intelligence of its citizenship.

Emigration and natural developments have drawn us away from this open and free spirit that was the order of things in the early settlement of this country; now the order of development is of things essential, and one of these is a system of highways for transportation and travel. It is largely to this end that the national system of highways has become a milestone in the development of our Nation. Great credit and praise must be given to those who have solved this problem for their ceaseless and untiring efforts to make it a success.

I might pause at this point and put the question "What is the meaning of this road building, which concerns all of the States of the Union, from coast to coast and from Gulf to the Canadian border?"

It means more than national legislation giving aid to the highways. It means the meeting of the minds of men to solve, safeguard, and construct great national highways for travel; not alone for pleasure, and with becoming more acquainted with the real history of our country, but it means also the development of great highways for transportation. It means the bringing of the people more closely in contact with the resources of the different States and communities of our Government.

It means the advertising of the mineral, timber, and other natural resources of regions unknown; that in time will be developed by the attraction of capital to the western States and to all the States that these great highways traverse.

No other form of travel or advertisement is equal to this method; people come directly in contact with the natural resources. It becomes a visual education. It opens up along the line new opportunity to study the country through which these great national roads traverse. It brings the remote western country in direct contact with the citizenship of the more developed and richer communities of the South and East.

It presents to them in delightful travel on their well-built roads, an opportunity to size up, inhale, and enjoy the pure atmosphere, and especially when you reach the mountains where water sparkles and refreshes the traveler; where you can travel at night where the moon shines so brilliantly and lightens the way of the tourist.

The kind and quality of roads should be left to skilled and expert people, always keeping in view the rights and full protection of the citizens, avoiding excessive expenses, and keeping taxation within reasonable bounds.

The building of good highways properly drained and permanent means one of the greatest civilizing influences of development that can be promoted in my State and in the Nation. I want to insert here a fitting poem entitled "The Trade Unionist":

An old man, going a lone highway,
Came at evening, cold and gray,
To a chasm vast and deep and wide.
The old man crossed in the twilight dim;
The sullen stream had no fear of him,

But he turned, when safe on the other side,
And built a bridge to span the tide.
"Old man," said a fellow pilgrim near,
"You are wasting your strength by building here;
Your journey will end with the ending day;
You never again will pass this way.
You've crossed the chasm deep and wide;
Why build you this bridge at evening tide?"
The builder lifted his old gray head.
"Good friend, in the path I have come
There followeth after me to-day," he said,
"A youth whose feet must pass this way.
This chasm, that has been naught to me,
To that fair-haired youth may a pitfall be;
He, too, must cross in the twilight dim.
Good friend, I am building this bridge for him."

Educate our people to the spirit of better roads and it means a superior class of citizenship; build cities nearer to the producer, so the American agriculturist can find a market for his products; build up and procure home consumption wherever possible, so that the middleman and transportation charges will not take the farmers' profit entirely away from them.

The difference in civilization to-day, between our primitive ancestors in following trails through the timber and fording swollen streams over mountains and across the plains, is the knowing how to live and how to travel. Let us make the most of it with our great resources; develop, and in developing let us choose permanency, by the best and most feasible routes.

The fact that we now travel by the automobile and airplane is that our intelligence has thus far advanced. Back of every development there must be knowledge, study, patience, and the knowing how to do the needed thing. In my opinion this can be best accomplished by the continuation of the cooperation of the Federal Government with the States in a uniform development of our highway systems as set forth in the Dowell road bill, H. R. 9504.

The question asked of a Kentucky backwoodsman by a stray tourist where the "road went," volunteered the information that it "didn't go nowhere; it stayed right there," illustrates in a simple manner the permanency of the road if constructed along proper lines, surfaced, drained, and maintained.

The principle of State rights has been encroached upon in many ways, and many contend that the road question should go back to the States. The wealthy States, with their large cities, seem to feel that they are contributing more than their share to the fund. This is not true to my way of thinking, as a great part of their income and wealth is gathered from the four corners of the Nation; this wealth is centered in the commercial and business cities, as Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, Boston, St. Louis, and other large financial centers. The ratio of population to the Federal-aid roads of the Nation forms an important unit in distribution.

This principle is eminently true, that the question of proper highways and the maintenance for the same failed in the majority of the States and no real system of highways was developed until the advent of the automobile and the public education to Federal and State aid was launched forth. It is apparent that the automobile development has been a wonderful factor, creating a spirit for good roads and for the national and State aid maintained roads. Statistics show that there were less than 1,000,000 motor vehicles in the Nation 11 years ago; that the then value was less than $100,000,000. To-day there are 20,000,000 motor vehicles showing a total investment of $16,500,000,000; that we are manufacturing now 4,000,000 vehicles per year; that we are using 7,500,000,000 gallons of gasoline per year; that the motor vehicle has gone to all parts of the country, to the farms, and to the small villages; that it has changed the conditions in cities so that people no longer seek to buy in the densely populated parts of the city, but go to the suburban parts and there buy their homes. In fact, it is not necessary to live in the city to transact business therein. The farmer is brought in close contact with all the matters of the city, even though he lives some distance from the city. He can almost enter into the activities of the city life.

While this has been expensive to the American citizen, it has been a real education in every way, and, in fact, about all there is in this life is the satisfaction there is in living and living properly. The American system of good roads, with gas-propelled automobiles, has been the main factor in bringing this satisfaction to nearly all of the citizens of the Nation.

The State of New Mexico has contributed to Federal-aid projects completed May 1, 1925, a total sum of $4,433,901.97, and there have been constructed under Federal-aid system in the State of New Mexico 1,331.90 miles of roads. These roads have been surfaced in their construction by means of crushed stone, gravel, and concrete. They were built under the supervision and inspection of the Federal engineers, in conjunction with the State highway engineer. The roads are practically permanent.

I quote from articles appearing in the New Mexico Highway Journal of December, 1925:

In view of the question raised in some quarters as to the wisdom of the Federal-aid policy of the Government, here are a few figures that will enable the situation to be viewed from a new angle:

Since 1918 motorists as a class have paid the Federal Government in the form of excise taxes on automobiles and parts the sum total of $779,385,339. Since the beginning of the Federal aid the Government has actually expended $276,305,407 as its share for the construction of Federal-aid highways, according to figures compiled by the American Automobile Association.

This means that the Government has expended less than 36 per cent of the amount of motor-vehicle revenue paid by the motorists as a class into the coffers of the Treasury Department. At this rate the Government still owes the motorists some $503,079,932. With this balance sheet there can be little doubt that they will line up 17,000,000 strong for continuation of the Federal-aid policy.

They have already footed the bill.—The Denver Post.

I quote another article appearing in the same issue of the New Mexico Highway Journal:

In a recent attack on Federal aid for highways Governor Ritchie, of Maryland, contended that those States paying heavy income taxes receive back a smaller percentage in Federal aid than do States whose income taxes are smaller. That is quite true, but it is based upon a sound American principle that has made a strong union of the States possible, that has been the foundation of our wonderful system of public schools, and has, in fact, contributed to the general development and progress of the entire country.

The policy of Federal aid is here to remain as long as the excise taxes on automobiles go into the Federal Treasury. The necessity of a uniform system of public highways, regardless of State boundaries, is here to stay. It has assumed an importance far in excess of navigable streams, which are conceded to be under Government control, and such control not in conflict with State rights.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WOOD, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, submitted for printing under the rule a conference report and accompanying statement on the bill (H. R. 9341) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent boards, commissions, bureaus, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes.

APPROPRIATION BILL FOR THE STATE, JUSTICE, COMMERCE, AND LABOR DEPARTMENTS

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 9795) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up the conference report on the bill H. R. 9795, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9795) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9795) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 11, 13, 14, 15, 18, 19, and 47.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 8, 9, 10, 16, 17, 20, 21, 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 34, 35, 36, 37, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 45, 46, and 49, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$583,529"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$620,440"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: "Including expenses of attendance upon meetings of technical and professional societies when required in connection with standardization, testing, or other official work of the bureau when incurred on the written authority of the Secretary"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That not exceeding $5,000 shall be expended for the acquisition of land"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named insert: "$2,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "in such amounts as may be determined by the President"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: "Appropriations herein made for the Children's Bureau shall be available for expenses of attendance at meetings for the promotion of child welfare and/or the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy when incurred on the written authority of the Secretary"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference has not agreed on amendments numbered 7 and 12.

The committee of conference has not agreed on amendments Nos. 7 and 12.

MILTON W. SHREVE,
GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM,
W. B. OLIVER,

Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 7. On page 10, after line 12, insert: "The Secretary of State may hereafter lease or rent, for periods not exceeding 10 years, such buildings and grounds for offices for the Foreign Service as may be necessary; and he may hereafter, in accordance with existing practice without cost to them, and within the limit of any appropriation made by Congress, continue to furnish the chief diplomatic representatives and their minor employees in foreign countries and officers and employees in the Foreign Service in China, Japan, and Turkey with living quarters, heat, light, and household equipment in Government-owned buildings and in buildings rented for use as offices at places where, in his judgment, it would be in the public interest to do so, notwithstanding the provisions of section 1765 of the Revised Statutes, and appropriations for 'Contingent expenses, foreign missions,' and 'Contingent expenses, consulates,' are hereby made available for such purposes; and he is also authorized, in his discretion, to furnish living quarters in such buildings to other officers and employees not herein provided for at rates to be determined by him."

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, this amendment is made necessary by reason of a ruling of the Comptroller General. The Secretary appeared before the committee and called our attention to this fact: It seems that in various sections we are renting buildings for a short time. I believe the law requires that they must not be rented for more than a year, and this amendment is merely to extend the time and is really in conformity with the practice that now exists in the State Department. It is recommended by the Secretary, and I move that the House recede and concur.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I understand that the legislative committee of the House has requested that this be done.

Mr. SHREVE. I thank the gentleman. That is a correct statement.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman know just how much this amendment would cost the Government of the United States?

Mr. SHREVE. It will not cost the Government anything in addition to the money that is already being expended.

Mr. BLANTON. There is a clause that has been added which goes further than any practice that has ever been carried on by our State Department, and that is they may furnish any officer or employee of the Government with their quarters and their light, heat, and furniture; and by inserting the word "hereafter" in two places makes this permanent law, which requires legislative enactment to change, and that is further than we have ever gone before. There is no limitation and no restriction on it whatever, and we ought not to pass such very important legislation with a little handful of Members present and without any consideration by the House.

Mr. SHREVE. I think the gentleman is mistaken in his understanding.

Mr. BLANTON. It is very plain, and I suggest the gentleman let the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations read it. He surely does not mean to agree to let it go by default?

Mr. SHREVE. If the gentleman will read the bill, he will see there is no new departure.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, the Comptroller General has held there is no law for it now and has stopped it, and they are trying to get around the Comptroller General. That is exactly what they are trying to do. It ought to go back to the committee for consideration, and we ought not to let it pass now.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, if this is to be pressed now I shall make a point of no quorum.

Mr. SHREVE. Perhaps if I read the letter from the Secretary it might explain the matter so that the gentleman will be satisfied.

Mr. BLANTON. I can understand the English language when I read it. I know what it means. It ought to be given full consideration.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman wish to inconvenience Members by calling them back after they have gone to their offices to sign their mail and attend to other business?

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman want to let this clause go in by default, with only a handful of Members present and when they do not know what it means?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Was this unanimously recommended by the legislative committee?

Mr. SHREVE. It was recommended by the legislative committee; it was recommended by the State Department and it has been passed by the Senate.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. There was no opposition anywhere?

Mr. SHREVE. No.

Mr. BLANTON. It is not good and sound legislation and it ought not to pass. This amendment was put in elsewhere with only a few knowing about it. And not 10 Members of this House know anything about it. It is important legislation, which because of the use of the word "hereafter" becomes permanent law whenever we pass this conference report. I know just exactly how such a provision is put into the bill elsewhere, and I know just exactly how the five members on this subcommittee and our conferees let it go in without protest. I also know that this provision is going to cost this Government hundreds of thousands of dollars annually more than our Foreign Service has been costing, and it is my sworn duty to stop it here and now if I can.

Mr. TILSON. Are the conferees on the part of the House agreed as to this?

Mr. SHREVE. Absolutely.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I will say to the gentleman, in the first place the language is so drawn as to show that it is not intended to do anything more than what has been done in the past, and the legislative committee of the House, as I was informed, requested the Senate to put this on, and made the request of the chairman of this subcommittee that he accept it.

Mr. MADDEN. This is just what has been done in the past?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. That is all.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Clerk again read the amendment, if there is no objection, and I want the Members present to notice exactly how it is worded.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. This is just for offices.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield me five minutes on this?

Mr. MADDEN. Let me explain it to the gentleman before he gets the five minutes. I was rather inclined to think this was intended to pay the rent of the domicile of the representative, but it is not. It is for the offices and, of course, the offices belong to the Government and the rent ought to be paid.

Mr. SHREVE. Permit me to read a few words from this letter. This is from the Secretary:

At a few places in the service, particularly in China and Japan, where suitable buildings are almost impossible to obtain for consular purposes, and where customs impose peculiar responsibilities it has been the practice where consuls have rented buildings at Government expense for consular offices, to permit them to occupy for residence purposes without charge such portions of the building as were not required for offices. This has not been done merely in the interest of the consul but in the interest of the Government and of the prestige, and therefore the effectiveness, of the Consular Service.

That is the whole story.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield me five minutes?

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman allow me to make a statement before he obtains his five minutes? I happen to be on the Foreign Affairs Committee, and we held long hearings on the bill which has been passed authorizing an appropriation of $2,000,000 for the purpose of buying offices.

Mr. MADDEN. That was for the purchase of embassies.

Mr. BEGG. Yes; embassies or any kind of foreign building. Just a moment ago when the clerk first read the amendment I was of the same impression as the gentleman, but a careful reading of the amendment will disclose that it is exactly what we are doing now, and this is the reason for the provision of 10 years. To-day if you were the representative in London—I will use that just as one place—and wanted to rent quarters, you have to sign the lease yourself. I will say that in Spain I know that has been true. Ambassador Moore is to-day obligated on a lease for two years, although he is no longer the ambassador. This is not fair to the representatives, and the reason for it is not on this side, but when you go to that country or almost any other country they refuse to lease unless you will lease for a period of three or five years, when under our own laws we can not lease but for one year. This amendment does not add an additional charge of one nickel, but simply authorizes the State Department to make a lease for 10 years, and I think if the gentleman is careful in his reading of the amendment he will find that is an accurate statement of it.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield me five minutes?

Mr. SHREVE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this shows just how careless we are in passing legislation. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] thinks this only applies to offices. The gentleman is mistaken. It applies to living quarters for every single employee. That is exactly what it means. The letter from the Secretary which the chairman of the subcommittee read shows that. You are making this permanent law on an appropriation bill, because the word "hereafter," that is put in here in two places, makes it permanent law, and the gentleman will not deny it.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman permit me—

Mr. BLANTON. I have heard the gentleman and I now want him to hear me.

Mr. BEGG. I want to ask the gentleman what he thinks this means—

Mr. BLANTON. I will tell the gentleman what it means. It applies to their offices and also to their living quarters, and the Secretary may lease same for a 10-year period and furnish to our consular employees and to all other employees their living quarters, light, heat, and furniture. I know something about Government employees buying furniture.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman let me read two lines right there to explain that matter?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. I know something about this furniture buying. You will remember the bill over here at Norfolk, Va., where officers of the Navy bought for their residences mahogany chiffoniers at $200 apiece, mahogany chifferettes at $200 apiece, mahogany beds at $200 apiece, mahogany tables at $200 apiece, and mahogany chairs at $100 apiece and wanted the Government to pay for them. We fought that bill here for three years and finally killed it and never let it pass. And it was Comptroller General McCarl who first stopped the payment. They exceeded their authority, and you are now giving this blanket authority here for them to buy anything they want, and then there would be no way to stop it, because the word "hereafter" makes it permanent law.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McKEOWN. If it does not mean living quarters, why do they say living quarters and household equipment?

Mr. BLANTON. The letter which the chairman of the subcommittee read shows it is for living quarters. The Secretary mentions them as living quarters. And I know it is for living quarters.

Mr. SHREVE. Living quarters within the offices or within the building rented as an office.

Mr. BLANTON. Of course, they are living quarters just as much as if they were somewhere else. There is no question about it and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] was mistaken about its being confined to offices.

Mr. MADDEN. That is true only in China, Japan, and Turkey.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a suggestion?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. That provision relates only to China, Japan, and Turkey. The other provisions refer to the Foreign Service generally and refer to offices only. Countries in which living conditions are intolerable are picked out for the purpose mentioned in the other part of the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. I know; but this is not the proper way to pass such legislation—in a conference report on an appropriation bill. There are now only a handful of Members present, and our absent colleagues have a right to know what important legislation we are permitting the Committee on Appropriations to place in a supply bill in conference. After we pass this bill with the word "hereafter" used, it becomes permanent law, and if we should find out in the future that the department is spending millions of dollars annually in furnishing quarters, heat, light, and furniture to all of our employees abroad, we could not stop it until we were able to have the proper legislative committee bring in and pass legislation to stop it. We ought not to permit the Committee on Appropriations to do it. It ought to come from the legislative committee.

We Members have a right to take up a bill from the legislative committee and properly discuss it. You can not do it at this hour in the evening on a conference report. You ought not to make this important law on a conference report. The gentleman from Connecticut knows that I am sound in my position, but expediency prompts him to want to get this conference report through. We are not in a hurry. The conference report ought to be considered more carefully. I hope the gentleman will wait, because I am going to ask for a record vote on this amendment. If you want to bring the Membership in here, all right.

Mr. BEGG. Before the gentleman commits himself to do anything, will he permit me to have five minutes to make a statement?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; 20 minutes, if the gentleman wants it.

Mr. BEGG. I do not want more than three.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I have done my duty; I have called the attention of the House to this proposition.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG].

Mr. BEGG. I want to talk to the gentleman from Texas more than anybody else.

Mr. RANKIN. Does the gentleman desire the rest of us to leave? [Laughter.]

Mr. BEGG. Well, I will be satisfied for the rest to leave the room. There are two things in this amendment, and as I said, the Committee on Foreign Affairs has considered them, and I think I know what they are. The two things in the amendment are granting authority to the State Department to make a 10-year lease instead of a one-year lease, and the other proposition is to provide housing accommodations in Tokyo and Yokohama in particular. Now, I happened to be in Tokyo and Yokohama last summer.

Mr. BLANTON. That is why the gentleman is in favor of this proposition.

Mr. BEGG. No; but you can not rent a house in Yokohama if you had a million dollars, because the house is not there. When we send the consular agent over there, and by the way I will say that we have a good one—he is from Tennessee; if he is not permitted to live in a Government building he is not permitted to live in Yokohama.

In Tokyo, the whole city destroyed, with all the buildings of the United States—wherein are we damaged when we have appropriated money to build for him these very accommodations?

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is very frank, he admits that this embraces living quarters.

Mr. BEGG. They are doing it now.

Mr. BLANTON. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations did not know it, and he is the man that furnishes the money.

Mr. BEGG. If the gentleman will wait a minute, this does not permit living quarters in any other place in the world except where they are getting them now.

Mr. BLANTON. Without any law?

Mr. BEGG. Without any law.

Mr. BLANTON. And you want to make this permanent law on an appropriation bill, in conference, with a handful of Members present?

Mr. BEGG. No; this is living quarters in offices where they rent the buildings anyhow.

Mr. MADDEN. It only applies to Turkey, Japan, and China.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The conferees were informed that the legislative committee had given consideration to this.

Mr. BEGG. Absolutely.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. May I ask attention to this language which qualifies all in the section: "He may hereafter in accordance with existing practice," within the appropriation carried by Congress.

Mr. BEGG. Yes; and it will not cost a nickel.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. There are two limits to the power—it must conform to existing practice, and it must be within the appropriation which Congress provides.

Mr. TILSON. And can only be in the three places enumerated?

Mr. BEGG. Yes; now I want to make a statement. The gentleman from Texas would not willingly say to a foreign representative you must lease property and be responsible for the payment of it for the United States because of limitations that you can only lease it one year, would he?

Mr. BLANTON. I would say this: I have found that every member of the Foreign Affairs Committee who travels abroad and comes in contact with this Foreign Service and is treated nicely over there comes back and holds up the Congress to get these bills through.

Mr. BEGG. I was not treated courteously or nicely by the foreign representatives, and I came back sore at the most of them, but business is business. All this will do will be to grant the authority of the United States to lease for 10 years instead of 1.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I think that instead of moving to recede and concur in the Senate amendment we ought to recede and concur with an amendment. The word "hereafter" appears in two places in the Senate amendment. That makes this permanent law. If we move to recede and concur, striking out the word "hereafter" wherever it occurs, that will be for this year only, and I think then that we can legislate upon it.

Mr. BEGG. That is satisfactory.

Mr. MADDEN. That is what we are going to do.

Mr. BLANTON. That is all right.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment striking out in line 13 the word "hereafter" and also in line 16 by striking out the word "hereafter."

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Speaker, I hope that will solve the difficulty. The situation actually is that this House has passed a bill providing for construction in Japan of buildings that will furnish permanent quarters for all of the employees of the Diplomatic and Consular Service in Tokyo, and even if we limit it to one year I hope this will provide for them in the interval between the passage of the bill and the construction of those buildings.

Mr. McKEOWN. What other "officers and employees" are referred to in line 5, page 11, that the Secretary of State would permit to occupy these buildings?

Mr. SHREVE. Those were other officers in the foreign service. That refers to commercial and agricultural attachés.

Mr. BEGG. These Department of Commerce and Department of Agriculture attachés—foreign representatives.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 12: Page 34, in line 18, strike out the figures and words "$108,186; in all, $239,186" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and who may be employed and assigned by the Chief Justice to any office or work of the court, including an additional assistant to the reporter of the court, if the court deems one necessary, to enable the reporter to expedite the publication of its reports, $106,046; in all, $237,046."

Mr. McKEOWN. Was not that covered in some legislation recently passed in the House?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes. This is merely to give the Chief Justice a chance to take on an additional assistant to the reporter of the court.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Does not that reduce the amount from $108,000 to $106,000?

Mr. SHREVE. That is accounted for by a transfer that was brought about by the recommendation of the Budget Bureau, from one service to another. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

THE VOLSTEAD ACT

Mr. HALL of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by printing a letter received by me in respect to proposed amendments to the Volstead Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALL of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks I insert the following letter:

MARION, IND., April 10, 1926.

HON. ALBERT R. HALL, M. C.

DEAR SIR: I don't believe that our Congressmen and United States Senators are so green that they will fall for the dope handed them by the so-called labor leaders who recently appeared before them and gave evidence (?) upon the booze conditions of the country.

No officer of any organization that I ever heard of has the right to commit the membership on any proposition other than that for which they are banded together, and President Green, of the American Federation of Labor, has absolutely no right to say that I or any other member of the Federation is against the prohibition law as it now stands.

The fact of the matter is that members of labor organizations are of different opinions on the booze question, the same as they are on religious and political questions, and these questions are taboo in labor organizations.

I have been a member of the Typographical Union for over 34 years and an organizer for the Federation for a number of years, besides secretary of our local trades council for a number of years, and wish to state that I am not in favor of any modification of the present law whatever.

In fact, conditions are so much better since the eighteenth amendment that I have come to the conclusion that the people advocating modification or repeal are doing so simply because they are drinkers themselves and can't get it in satisfactory doses under the present law.

The stories of dissatisfaction with the present law haven't shown up in Marion yet, and the only croakers we hear are people who voted wet when they had the chance and would do so again.

If any change is made, the law should be made stronger.

Yours truly,

FRANK BARR.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by including with the remarks the report of the Southern Appalachian National Park Commission on national parks in the East, recently made.

Mr. BEGG. Reserving the right to object, how large is that report?

Mr. THATCHER. It is several pages. I do not recall the number of pages.

Mr. BEGG. Did they not make a report to the Congress in the form of a printed report?

Mr. THATCHER. It has not been printed. It ought to go into the Record as a matter of information.

Mr. TILSON. Should it not be printed as a House document?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that it has already been ordered printed as a document.

Mr. TILSON. Is it available to Members in the form of a report?

Mr. THATCHER. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. BEGG. Will not the gentleman withhold that request until to-morrow or Monday, so that we may look into the matter?

Mr. THATCHER. Yes. The only thing is that there is legislation pending on the subject and Members ought to have the information embraced within the report, and they can get it better in the Record than in any other form.

Mr. TILSON. I regret to see long reports printed in the fine 6-point type in the Record, which is very difficult to read anyway. If it is going to be used, it ought to be in the form of a document.

Mr. THATCHER. I will withhold the request for the present, Mr. Speaker.

MODIFICATION OF THE VOLSTEAD ACT

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the bills looking to a modification of the Volstead Act.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, in order to ascertain what purpose was to be accomplished, what mischief was to be remedied, what habit was to be changed, what manner was to be altered, what institution was to be suppressed, what new viewpoint on the part of the American people was to be secured through the submission and the subsequent ratification of the eighteenth amendment, let us read section 1 of that article:

After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all Territories subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

Keep in mind that the purpose of the American people, as far as that purpose can be learned and evidenced through this section 1, and the prior development of a prohibition sentiment throughout the country to the extent that it was registered by State laws all clearly and unmistakably show that the consummation wished for was the suppression of the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes. What did the people mean by beverage purpose? What did they understand by that phrase? What did they think the effect of ratification would be? The American people were justified in believing that beverage purposes meant the drinking of liquors of whatever alcoholic content in public places, under a license system with the State as partner, and for no other purpose in the world than to indulge in and bring on the intoxication to a more or less extent that follows unrestrained drinking of liquor under such circumstances and the other reactions that necessarily follow a high degree of mental and physical stimulation.

The purpose of the American people was to change and alter and prevent the operation of this habit which lead John Doe to invite Richard Roe to have a drink, long before dinner time, which invitation was accepted and followed by a reciprocal attitude on the part of the invitee, who in turn became the inviter. It was intended to do away with the baneful habit which was known as treating and which meant that Smith asked Jones to have a drink in a public house which paid a license for the privilege of doing business and which offer to treat received something of an elaboration when Smith and Jones found Brown, Black, and White and others at the bar, who insisted that the newcomers have a drink with them that were already there, and which in accordance with the custom necessitated reciprocal action and to such an extent that it made for an abuse of the one drink that might have been beneficially stimulating. In other words, it was the custom of drinking in public houses at so much per drink and the treating habit that the American people intended to abolish, and not the use of beer, such as is contemplated by this bill, for food purposes at home, on one's own table and as a part of one's meal, just as tea or coffee is used by thousands of people who feel that it is a necessary concomitant of the breakfast, dinner, or supper to which they sit down. It was never intended by the common-sense people of this country to prevent men and women from drinking in their own homes white or claret wine with their meals and for the food value that lies in those wines. Whoever saw men in our country drinking white or claret wine as a beverage in order to get intoxicated in a public place? Who on earth can contemplate any man willfully sitting down and drinking 2.75 per cent beer to such an extent that it would overstimulate him any more than you can contemplate that same man gorging himself with rich and tasteful food merely to satisfy and gratify the sense of his palate and stomach.

Mr. Speaker, it would be just as ridiculous for a man to destroy his house because it presented an unsightly appearance as a result of projections lacking in architectural beauty and painted in such a way as to be wanting in an appeal to an artistic eye instead of changing the unsightly appearance by a few alterations and a new coat of paint as to act upon the belief that the proper thing to do would be to prohibit entirely the use of liquor instead of legislating against the abuses of a trade that sprang up in connection with what should be a reasonable demand for a nourishing and stimulating liquid with food value. The Congress, in my respectful judgment, misinterpreted the eighteenth amendment when it enacted the Volstead Act and prohibited the rational use of that produced by the forces of nature, for as long as fermentation is a part of the great natural or physical law that governs all things of a vegetable nature, a part of which is sugar, will you have alcohol, statutes to the contrary notwithstanding.

After all, what is deemed an abuse may by correction be made a desirable use, and I am going to illustrate by telling a story. Before doing so, however, let me say that the purpose of article 18 is to prevent the use of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes and not to prevent their use for food purposes and medicinal purposes, or for what might be termed home domestic use. The great purpose that was in the minds of millions was to annihilate the barroom and thereby get rid of the treating habit, and not to prevent men and women from using at home for food and nourishment that which had been used from the sunrise of history. In order to get my views into the Record with regard to the failure of Congress to consider the psychology and the purpose of the eighteenth amendment and a total misconception, in my judgment, of human impulse, which are the besetting faults of our national legislation upon prohibition, I will read into it the remarks I delivered some time since on the floor of the House in connection with empowering the Coast Guard to function along enforcement lines. But I will tell my story and then extend these remarks with the address I have just referred to.

The story was related to me by a grand old civil lawyer in Louisiana years ago. A fine old gentleman who played out a distinguished part in the legal and martial history of Louisiana. He was a great actor in the drama of life, and I hope he is rendering a greater service in celestial spheres than he ever could perform on this terrestrial globe. The old gentleman was fond of saying that in ancient times a mother went to the temple to consult the high priestess about the future of her sons. She asked the priestess to do that which it is extremely unwise to try to do under any circumstances. She asked the priestess to throw her supernatural vision into the future and speak oracularly of what was to be. The priestess, after meditating a few moments, said to the anxious lady:

The outlook is extremely forbidding and may be wet with tears. One of your sons is doomed to be afflicted with the blood lust and may become an assassin, a killer of men; another is doomed to be a prevaricator, or in harsher language a professional liar; another is to become a mendicant, a beggar; another is to become a thief, who will steal lands and other possessions; and still another is to fall into the despicable attitude of sneak thief and pickpocket; and another a disturber of the peace.

The old lady tore her hair and rent her garments and shrieked aloud in her anguish and sorrow at the terrible future that lay ahead for the sons that she had brought into existence. Softened by her plight, the priestess said:

But remember there is no condition on earth that can not be altered and no disposition tending to abuse that can not be converted into one of use and benefaction, for good and evil are convertible terms to some extent, and that which is evil may become good and that which is good may become evil. We are going to change, modify, alter by education the habits of your children which if left unrestrained would lead them to ruin. By education we will make them ornaments to society. Educate the son who is afflicted with the blood lust to be a surgeon; educate the one that would become the professional prevaricator in the law and make him a lawyer; make an uplifter of the heathen out of the one who would become a mendicant; make a great soldier out of the robber by a similar process; make a sleight-of-hand performer and juggler out of him who would become a pickpocket; and make a rhetorician out of him who would become a disturber of the peace.

Prohibition has many sons of an evil nature who are bent upon destroying that which should be an orderly existence. By modification you will change some and bring about a far better condition than the unbearable situation that obtains to-day which is growing to be a menace to our national life.

No amount of money, however prodigious the appropriation, will bring about in the way of enforcement the results that the enthusiastic and fanatical advocates of prohibition desire. I use these words in their proper meaning, as I do not wish to be offensive to anyone. If I can not make my attitude clear and convincingly set forth my viewpoint by reason and argument without acrimony or vehemence, I certainly will fall if I resort to abuse or villification. I am absolutely certain that a wise, regulatory measure would secure the results desired by the sagacious advocates of temperance to greater advantage and more efficaciously, efficiently, and effectively than by an attempt at total restriction and prohibition. There are many good men and women who insist that the best way to repeal a bad law is to enforce it regardless of the cost. This assumption, though popular from its oft-repeated expression, will not stand the test of reason or experience; but admitting merely for the purpose of disposing of the suggestion from a practical standpoint that enforcement can be secured with a sufficiently large appropriation and the tremendously large police establishment, anyone can see that such an attitude has its limitations and might under certain circumstances become illogical and unwise to the point of absurdity, for if it ever becomes necessary, in order to make a pretense at prohibition enforcement, to require an annual appropriation that would run to upward of $2,000,000,000, the amount arrived at by the simple calculation involved in finding the result after being informed what fractional enforcement is secured on present appropriations, the American Government would find it indispensable to increase taxation to the point of confiscation, and thereby the entire fabric of the Constitution, by trying to vindicate one article, would be involved in the general ruin that would follow such a monstrous expenditure in a fatuous and hopeless attempt to enforce an impossible law. The attempt at enforcement of prohibition might become almost intolerable in the burdens it would impose, and so conclusively show its lack of policy or wisdom and of understanding of human nature as to render it nugatory, when it would fall into "innocuous desuetude." As a matter of fact, it must be clear to him who reads as he runs that there are millions in this country that believe that prohibition is a failure because it is fundamentally unsound, and that our appropriation for its enforcement is nothing more nor less than an extravagant and useless expenditure of public money, and in the minds of many its only result is negative and breeds corruption in prohibition enforcement circles. Of course it is known of all men that the columns of the great newspapers in all of the big cities daily contain stories showing that it is regarded almost as a duty to infract the Volstead Act.

I do not think that the general violation of this act is any longer disputed. I understand that at a convention of the American Federation of Labor, held, I believe, in Portland, Oreg., three years ago, it was put into the proceedings that there were more whisky glasses being manufactured, or blown, if that is the term, than ever before in the history of the country. I represent a constituency the majority of whom, as I said before, look upon prohibition as ill-advised and doomed to failure and necessarily they look upon the expenditure of any money for the enforcement of it as money absolutely thrown away.

They can not see any wisdom in it, but, on the contrary, view it as unmitigated folly, and although their unalterable opposition to what they deem to be an unwarrantable invasion of their liberty may appear to be fantastic and absurd to some of our citizens who somewhat superciliously arrogate to themselves all of the virtues and patriotism in this country, still those people are sincere in their attitude of deep-seated hostility and antagonism to what they bitterly resent as oppression from a tyrannical minority organized in such a manner as to make for the congressional imposition of their views on the unorganized and helpless masses. And these constituents of mine are patriotic and wise in their ways. They are an educated people and have inherited and evidenced a splendid culture. They are not easily misled by sophistry. They can not understand why we should believe there is so much merit in prohibition when they thoroughly comprehend that the world long before prohibition had come to us gave to posterity the greatest poets, the greatest astronomers, the greatest industrialists, the greatest inventors and writers, under a system that made for more or less drinking, while the nondrinking countries of the Orient were steeped in ignorance, venality, and corruption, and had made absolutely no progress.

I have no faith in prohibition fundamentally. Regulation would produce infinitely better results. One thing is certain and fixed as the stars in their courses. Prohibition must show better results or the conclusion will be irresistible that it is a failure. That sort of failure would not be an unmixed evil even. On the contrary it would prove a blessing. Then the American people would approach the liquor question and traffic in a tolerant and wiser way, and secure through a regulatory process far greater and more lasting and beneficial results than the present system under the most favorable conditions and circumstances can yield. I speak more in sorrow than in anger at the bacchanalian orgies of drunkenness in all of our towns resulting from "white lightning," conveniently carried in stylish flasks, in big pockets, of the graft stories in our newspapers, of the sinister and menacing corruption existing in that part of the official life charged with enforcement. Of course there are—there must be—many honest, virtuous men connected with that service, but the people are undoubtedly correct in assuming that there are many vulnerable spots, and you know it is human for the most benevolent to judge the whole by a part of the system.

Only a short time ago Police Commissioner Enright, of New York, made a statement of such a startling nature that the Associated Press and other great news agencies carried it from ocean to ocean—as we love to express the vastness, the magnitude of our territorial empire, as it extends from east to west, from the rising to the setting sun. The commissioner declared, as I remember it, that every phase of society in the United States refused to respect and observe the Volstead Act and infringed it with the same savoir faire, serenity, composure, and tranquility that they would a statute that expressed a totally fallacious economic principle, a physical impossibility, or a physiological absurdity or other parliamentary and governmental aberration. And right here in Washington, Capital of the Nation, denominated by Admiral Plunkett, according to press accounts, as the wettest city in the Union, we find a number of persons who deny the soft impeachment and insist that there are a number of cities that are wetter. I heard some one say that if the dissenters are correct the other cities must be inundated, and that it is time to order the rafts. Prohibitionists to be convincing must try to prove that all of the great men who adorned and glorified the civilizations of ancient Greece and the magnificent Roman Empire, the heroes and geniuses of the Middle Ages, and the mighty men of the modern world were mythological characters, were never existent because it, from their viewpoint, was impossible for talent, culture, ambition, virtue, or patriotism to exist until the day of "reformers" arrived, who constructed by statute a prohibition fountain, whose miraculous waters made for a realization by them in the coming years of what was only a dream on our part of historically renowned men and women of the past.

That there were great men before Agamemnon they say is a historical idiosyncrasy. There were none. There were great men after, yes, but not before prohibition, the eighteenth amendment, as interpreted by Congress and through the Volstead Act. That the eighteenth amendment is susceptible to more than one interpretation and construction is, I think, admitted by thoughtful legalists. Is the prohibition therein expressed applicable to the States and the people thereof only, or does it also include the United States Government? Can the United States legally through Congress enact a law making grocery keepers or grocers, if you will, agents for the Government for the sale of beer and wine not to be consumed on the premises but in the homes of the people? If it can and will do this, the greatest social economic problem of the country will be solved along sane and temperate lines. I commend this suggestion to your thoughtful consideration.

The quantity that one could buy of wine or beer or both could be determined by rule and regulation. Instead of the bootleggers, lawlessness, graft, and corruption that have followed in the wake of the Volstead Act, we would have a lawful agency supplying the reasonable wants of the people whose demands in all probability would become less and less for that which could be purchased like ham and eggs or salt and pepper. The man who desires to further the cause of real temperance I hope will favor and get behind this or a similar proposition. It is time to prohibit bootlegging, hijacking, corruption, and lawlessness by an enactment "within the law." The unholy alliance between the rum runner and the honest and sincere but misguided preacher must end. The coalition between the puritan and the blackleg must be broken. The silver handle must be removed from the wooden pitcher. Let the rule of reason prevail. Keep in mind the wonderful lesson conveyed by the beautiful story of the Garden of Eden and the prohibition "And the Lord God commanded the man, saying, of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat, but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat."

Do not arouse the human curiosity of weak flesh and blood by prohibiting man from eating or drinking of the fruits and juices of the trees around him, lest you arouse a desire which he will find irresistible and which he will gratify.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, April 17, 1926, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. TILSON submitted the following tentative list of committee hearings scheduled for April 17, 1926, as reported to the floor leader by the clerks of the several committees:

COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS

(10 a. m.)

To revise the boundaries of Yellowstone National Park in the States of Idaho, Wyoming, and Montana (H. R. 9017).

COMMITTEE ON WORLD WAR VETERANS' LEGISLATION

(10.30 a. m.)

Proposed bill amending the World War veterans' act with reference to the appointment of guardians.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

449. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from the Chief of Engineers on preliminary examination and survey of Umpqua Harbor and River, Oreg. (H. Doc. No. 320); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with accompanying papers.

450. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill, "To authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

451. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a report on a claim of one Willie Perry Conway for amounts believed to have accrued while serving in the Navy; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department.

452. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting deficiency estimates of appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal years 1914 to 1924, inclusive, $260,275.59, and supplemental estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926, $63,249.28, pertaining to the payment of balances due foreign countries; in all, $323,524.87 (H. Doc. No. 322); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD: Committee on Revision of the Laws. H. R. 10000. A bill to consolidate, codify, and reenact the general and permanent laws of the United States in force

December 7, 1925; without amendment (Rept. No. 900). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT: Committee on Military Affairs. S. J. Res. 91. A joint resolution directing the Secretary of War to allot war trophies to the American Legion Museum; without amendment (Rept. No. 906). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. VAILE: Committee on Foreign Affairs. H. R. 9872. A bill to carry into effect provisions of the convention between the United States and Great Britain to regulate the level of Lake of the Woods, concluded on the 24th day of February, 1925; with amendment (Rept. No. 908). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PORTER: Committee on Foreign Affairs. H. R. 11308. A bill authorizing the payment of an indemnity to Great Britain on account of the death of Daniel Shaw Williamson, a British subject who was killed at East St. Louis, Ill., on July 1, 1921; without amendment (Rept. No. 909). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD: Committee on Revision of the Laws. H. R. 11318. A bill to provide for the publication of the Code of the Laws of the United States with index, reference tables, appendix, etc.; without amendment (Rept. No. 910). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ROBINSON of Iowa: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. S. 481. An act to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1906, amended August 23, 1912, March 3, 1913, and July 24, 1919; with amendment (Rept. No. 911). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. BOIES: Committee on the Judiciary. H. R. 5564. A bill to authorize the appointment of stenographers in the courts of the United States and to fix their duties and compensation; with amendment (Rept. No. 924). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT: Committee on Military Affairs. S. 2124. A bill for the relief of Philip Hertz; without amendment (Rept. No. 907). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. WALTERS: Committee on Claims. S. 726. An act for the relief of Hilbert Edison and Ralph R. Walton; without amendment (Rept. No. 912). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SEARS of Nebraska: Committee on Claims. S. 1208. An act providing reimbursement to J. M. LaCalle for services as instructor at the United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., from October 1, 1914, to October 19, 1914; without amendment (Rept. No. 913). The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9795) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 12 to the said bill, and concurred therein; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 7 and agreed thereto with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill and concurrent resolution of the following titles, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 9504. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes; and

H. Con. Res. 22. Concurrent resolution providing for the appointment of a joint committee to represent Congress at the celebration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of the Virginia bill of rights.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 7455) to legalize the submarine cable laid in the St. Louis River at the Spirit Lake Transfer Railway drawbridge, between New Duluth, Minn., and Oliver, Wis., and used for the lighting of the village of Oliver, Wis., and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

THE PHILIPPINES

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have heretofore upon two occasions presented a total of 96 resolutions adopted by provincial boards, municipal boards and councils, and Filipino organizations in favor of measures which I introduced and which are now pending before the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions, providing for immediate independence of the Filipinos and for the withdrawal of American troops from the Philippine Islands.

Fourteen additional resolutions have been received since I presented a number on April 9. The resolutions which I now present favoring Philippine independence, with accompanying statements, have been adopted by provincial and municipal boards and councils in the Philippine Islands, and I ask that they be noted in the Record and referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is so ordered.

Under the order the resolutions of the following provincial and municipal boards were referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions:

PROTECTION OF MIGRATORY BIRDS

Mr. KING submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2607) for the purpose of more effectively meeting the obligations of the existing migratory bird treaty with Great Britain by the establishment of migratory bird refuges to furnish in perpetuity homes for migratory birds, the provision of funds for establishing such areas, and the furnishing of adequate protection of migratory birds, for the establishment of public shooting grounds to preserve the American system of free shooting, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 9504) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE STATE AND OTHER DEPARTMENTS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives receding from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 12 to the bill (H. R. 9795) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes, and receding from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 7 and agreeing to the same with an amendment, in line 1 of the amendment of the Senate to strike out the word "hereafter" and in line 4 of the amendment to strike out the word "hereafter."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate No. 7, wherein provision was made by the Senate for permanent legislation by inserting the word "hereafter." The House leaves out the word "hereafter" and continues it as before. I therefore move that the Senate concur in the action of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9341) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes; and that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 5 and agreed to the same with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. SMOOT submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6707) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5, 7, 9, 10, 12, 13, 20, 28, 35, 45, 49, 55, and 56.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 8, 11, 14, 15, 18, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 30, 32, 34, 37, 38, 39, 42, 44, 47, 51, 52, 53, 54, 57, 58, 59, 60, and 63, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$810,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "four hundred and seventy-five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$106,875"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$3,025,000, exclusive of tribal funds"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For the employment of special counsel to assist State and Federal authorities in the prosecution of the person or persons implicated in the crimes resulting in the murder of Osage Indians and for expenses incident to such prosecution, $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, to be paid from funds held by the United States in trust for said Indians, to be expended with the approval of, and under the supervision of, the Secretary of the Interior."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the matter inserted by said amendment add the following: ", to be immediately available"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$72,000, and no part of this amount shall be available for maintenance and operation of the Glasgow division after December 31, 1926, unless a contract or contracts in form approved by the Secretary of the Interior shall have been made with an irrigation district or with irrigation districts organized under State law providing for payment of construction and operation and maintenance charges for such district or districts"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"continuation of construction, and incidental operations, $40,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert: "$7,431,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 50: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For investigations to be made by the Secretary of the Interior through the Bureau of Reclamation to obtain necessary information to determine how arid and semiarid, swamp, and cut-over timberlands in any of the States of the United States may be best developed, as authorized by subsection R, section 4, second deficiency act, fiscal year 1924, approved December 5, 1924 (43 Stat. p. 704), including the general objects of expenditure enumerated and permitted under the second paragraph in this act under the caption "Bureau of Reclamation," and including mileage for motor cycles and automobiles at the rates and under the conditions authorized herein in connection with reclamation projects, $15,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 61: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert: "$1,819,440"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 67: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Sec. 2. Appropriations herein made for field work under the General Land Office, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Bureau of Reclamation, the Geological Survey, and the National Park Service shall be available for the hire, with or without personal services, of work animals and animal-drawn and motor-propelled vehicles and equipment."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendments numbered 26, 31, 46, 62, 64, 65, and 66.

C. D. CARTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, before the report is acted on by the Senate I want to make sure that there is no misunderstanding. I am informed that the item of $450,000, which was put in the bill by the Senate for the construction of the Coolidge Dam, has been stricken out in conference by the conferees. I would like to ask the Senator from Utah the reason why that item was stricken from the bill and also would like to know if there is any likelihood, or if he can make any promise to the Senators from Arizona, that this item will be included in the next deficiency appropriation bill? We care not which bill carries the needed money, but we want to be sure about this matter.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Arizona that the House conferees were not opposed to the item of $450,000 provided for the Coolidge Dam, but they insisted that they did not want to agree to the item in the conference report until after there had been an agreement between the Department of the Interior and the railroad company as to the amount of expense involved for removing the railroad and changing its course.

The chairman of the Public Lands Committee of the House has assured me that he would see that the item is in the next deficiency appropriation bill, it having been estimated for. I want to assure the Senator from Arizona now, so far as I can possibly assure him or the Senate, that that intention will be carried out in the House. If it shall not be carried out in the other House, I am going to ask the Senate unanimously to put the item into the bill. However, I will say to the Senator that I have not the least doubt the House will include the item in the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. FERNALD obtained the floor.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine yield to me?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, I merely desire to take a moment of the Senate's time. I realize how very important the bill making appropriations for the Interior Department is, and I also realize that many Senators are deeply interested in the adoption of the conference report. I feel that the item providing for an appropriation for $450,000 for the Coolidge Dam was legitimately placed in this bill by the Senate Committee on Appropriations and by the Senate. It was approved by the Budget Bureau. I can not understand wherein there is any difference between making an appropriation of $450,000 in the bill now before the Senate and inserting it in a deficiency appropriation bill. The action of the committee of conference, it seems to me, is not justifiable nor well founded in fact; but I have a feeling for my fellow Senators and I wish them to know, rather than argue the question at length at this time, rather than assume the attitude of obstruction on this question, on the assurance of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who has had this bill in charge and has been the chairman of the conferees on the part of the Senate, that this needed money will be given in the next deficiency bill at this session, and the delay because of recent developments is not serious, I shall take one more chance in the matter and see if these Indians are going to be any longer misled. I sincerely hope that will not be the case.

I hold in my hand a telegram which I have just received from the chief of the Pima Indians. I send it to the desk and ask to have it read as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

CASA GRANDE, ARIZ., April 16, 1926.

Hon. RALPH H. CAMERON,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Nearly two years have passed since President Coolidge signed Cameron bill. There has not a single thing been done to start construction work on dam. My people are still waiting for it to begin. We are waiting for it so patiently. Some of my people are very poor. To wait some of them are not getting enough things to eat. Some of them get sick, for they are not eating the right kind of food. No money to buy.

ANTONIO B. JUAN,
Pima Indian Chief.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, I wish also to state that I feel there has been no real reason for juggling this appropriation around, as has been done. The excuse given in the first instance for nonaction was that there had been no settlement with the Southern Pacific Railroad Co. for their crossing the Pima Indian Reservation or the San Carlos Reservation. The Southern Pacific Railroad Co. is one of the greatest, if not the greatest, railroads in the West. There was never any reason why there could not have been a settlement with that railroad company at least a year and a half ago; there was no excuse for the delay; but that situation was used as a camouflage or something of that nature to delay this appropriation. I am sorry to see such methods used in the Halls of Congress; but I am glad to say now, before this conference report shall be adopted, that there has been a settlement made with the Southern Pacific Railroad Co. which is agreeable both to the railroad company and the Department of the Interior. So the only obstacle which it seems is standing in the way has been removed, and there is now no reason on earth for anyone to object to this appropriation of $450,000 as it was carried in the bill and as it will be included in the deficiency appropriation bill, which is soon to be passed. A bird in hand is worth about three in the bush, and in permitting the conference report to be adopted without including this item I am aware that we are taking chances. Notwithstanding that, however, because of the importance of the bill and in view of the parliamentary situation of all important legislation and the nearness of adjournment, and because of my regard for my fellow Senators, who, I know, are very much interested in its passage, I am willing at this time to forego making further objection and will consent that the conference report may be adopted by the Senate.

I have here, Mr. President, a statement covering the situation so far as the Southern Pacific Railroad is concerned, and I ask unanimous consent to have it inserted in the Record as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The matter referred to is as follows:

STATUS OF GRANT TO ARIZONA EASTERN RAILWAY
(Successor to Gila Valley, Globe & Northern Railway)

By special act of Congress, effective February 18, 1895 (28 Stat. 655), the Gila Valley, Globe & Northern Railway was granted a right of way through the San Carlos Indian Reservation in the Territory of Arizona. The grant provided for the extension of the railroad right of way "through the San Carlos Indian Reservation * * * entering the reservation on the south side of the Gila River, about 7 miles below Fort Thomas, continuing down said Gila River in a general northwesterly direction, crossing the same at or near the San Carlos Indian Agency; thence running up or near the San Carlos River in a generally northerly direction to or near Alliso Creek; thence along or near Alliso Creek in a general westerly or northwesterly direction to the town of Globe, in Gila County, Ariz., by such route as shall be deemed advisable by the company."

Section 6 of the act provides "that Congress shall have at all times power to alter, amend, or repeal this act and revoke all rights hereunder." Thus under the terms of this act Congress retains the power to revoke the grant of the right of way to this railroad.

The above act provided that the railroad should be built in three years, but the construction of the railroad was not finished in that time. By act of June 13, 1898 (30 Stat. 227), the time for construction was extended until and including the year 1899. Before the expiration of the time limit the railroad was constructed. A general act authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to grant rights of way for railroad companies through Indian Reservations, and on Indian lands and Indian allotments, and was passed on March 2, 1899 (30 Stat. 990). This act authorizes the Secretary of Interior to grant rights of way under certain conditions set forth in the act. Section 8 thereof provides "that Congress reserves the right at any time to alter, amend, or repeal this act or any portion thereof." There is no provision in this act similar to that in the special act of February 18, 1895, authorizing Congress to "revoke all rights hereunder." Under this act Congress probably could not constitutionally revoke a right of way without compensating a grant of a right of way made pursuant to this act without compensating the railroad for the value of its right of way.

The part of the railroad that will be affected by the construction of the Coolidge Dam and Reservoir is based partly on the grant of February 18, 1895, and partly under a grant made pursuant to the authority of the act of March 2, 1899. All of the railroad was first constructed under the prior grant, but thereafter a portion of the roadbed was washed out by the river, and it became necessary for the railroad to reconstruct its roadbed. Instead of building this section of the roadbed in the same section it had been built before, the railroad applied for a grant of a new right of way under act of March 2, 1899. The application was granted.

Congress could by act at the present time constitutionally revoke the grant of any portion of the right of way of the Gila Valley, Globe & Northern Railway Co. that would be flooded in the event the Coolidge Dam is built. A portion of the right of way affected could not constitutionally be revoked without compensation to the railroad company. The portion, however, that could be revoked would render the portion that could not be revoked useless.

The exact location of the portion of the right of way coming under the act of March 2, 1899, can be ascertained by examination of the files of the Interior Department. The right of way was not described in the act, but can be found only in the grant made by the Secretary of the Interior.

Excerpts from the act of February 18, 1895, and the act of March 2, 1899, material to a consideration of this subject matter are herewith attached.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to assure the Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON] that the chairman of the Public Lands Committee of the House of Representatives is in favor of the reclamation project covered by the item which he has been discussing. I can not say any more than I have already said—that I am sure we will see that the item goes into the next deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senate passed a bill providing for a complete survey of the Columbia Basin project in the State of Washington. The bill was also passed by the House of Representatives and it was signed by the President on the 13th of this month. The Senate inserted an amendment in the pending bill providing the money for completing that survey. Will the Senator from Utah advise me what action was taken by the conference committee on the Senate amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the conference committee agreed that that item, as every other item authorizing an appropriation, should go into the deficiency appropriation bill, where such items are covered by bills which have passed both Houses of Congress. The chairman of the committee of conference on the part of the House of Representatives thought that a precedent would be established by inserting such an item in this bill without any estimate having been made for it. All it will be necessary for the Senator from Washington to do will be to get an estimate for the appropriation, now that Congress has authorized it to be made and the President has signed the bill for that purpose. The item will then go into the next deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I thank the Senator from Utah. His statement is very satisfactory, although I should rather have had the appropriation included in the pending bill.

Mr. SMOOT. If I had had my way about the matter, the appropriation would have been included in this bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I knew the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] long before either of us came to the Senate, and when he gives the assurance which he has, I am content. I have had in bygone days some acrimonious disputes with the Senator from Utah over politics, but when his word is given it is a bond so far as I am concerned, because I have found him to be a man who lives up to what he says.

A word concerning the Coolidge Dam on the Gila River in Arizona. The Pima Indians, whose water rights are to be protected and conserved by the construction of this project, form a tribe of Indians which has never been at war with the United States. No Pima Indian ever killed an American. Congress should and I believe will provide for the completion of the Coolidge Dam on the San Carlos project.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the Senator might add that the Pima Indians were self-supporting until the Government interfered with their water rights.

Mr. ASHURST. That is quite true.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

LABOR CONDITIONS IN COTTON TEXTILE INDUSTRY

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine yield to me?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, in to-day's press I notice that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has urged the Committee on Manufactures to consider as soon as possible the resolution heretofore submitted providing for an investigation of the strike going on at Passaic, N. J. I understand that there has been some opposition to the proposed investigation on account of the question as to whether the Federal Government should go into a matter of this sort. That question I do not intend to discuss, but I do think that if the Committee on Manufactures should consider the resolution and authorize and conduct such an investigation, it ought to enlarge its scope and not limit it to one manufacturing corporation, but have it apply to the entire cotton-textile industry.

For example, last year in Connecticut the employees of the American Thread Co., of Willimantic, which, I understand, is a British corporation, commenced a very serious strike. The company reduced wages 10 per cent in January, although I am informed they paid something like a 10 per cent dividend on their capitalization from profits made during the previous year, and, not only that, but they also added much over a million dollars to their surplus. The strike involved something like 2,500 men, many of whom were ejected from the company's tenements. There can be no question raised in the Willimantic case that the workers are communists, because they are members of the United States Textile Workers of America, which organization is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

I am merely suggesting that if the resolution now pending before the Committee on Manufactures shall be taken up its scope should be extended, and provision should be made for an investigation of the entire industry. I think that would be the only sound way in which to proceed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6559) to provide for the construction of certain public buildings, and for other purposes.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President—

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. I offer an amendment to the pending bill and ask that it may be read and printed and lie on the table, to be taken up at the proper time.

There being no objection, the amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. COUZENS was read, ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed, as follows:

On page 3, after line 8, insert a new paragraph to read as follows:

"The Secretary of the Treasury shall take into consideration the effect which may be exerted by governmental construction policy upon general employment and industrial activity and shall report to Congress with recommendations whenever the volume of construction in the United States during any period falls one-third below the volume of the corresponding period of 1923."

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, at the conclusion of the business of the Senate yesterday an order had been entered for the reading of the bill and the amendments, with the suggestion that committee amendments be considered first. During the consideration of the bill, as Senators know, I was somewhat interrupted by inquiries which were all proper and legitimate, and I was glad to answer such questions honestly, if not intelligently, to the best of my ability. One or two features which were suggested in the many interruptions I fear I did not sufficiently clear up in the minds of Senators.

It is not strange that Senators desire to know all about this public buildings bill. It is a new method of authorizing public buildings, and the amount carried in the bill is much larger than the amounts carried in the bills which we passed some 15 years ago. In the 13 years that have intervened since we had a public buildings bill we have, of course, fallen far behind in our building, and at the same time the country and its business have continued to grow to a marvelous extent. The business in the District of Columbia has almost doubled in 13 years. The business of the Post Office Department has increased 160 per cent. Where we were formerly doing a business of $250,000,000 or $260,000,000 in the Post Office Department, in the year 1925 that had increased to $599,000,000—almost doubled—and yet no appropriations have been made for the purposes specified in the pending bill.

Another matter which I wish to make clear to Senators relates to a question which I think was suggested by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], as to whether there had been a list made out by the Treasury Department of places where emergencies existed, and whether those emergencies were to be taken care of first. I desire to say to Senators that no such list exists; no such list has been made, and we are starting out with a clear field. As to the post offices and other public buildings that will be erected under this bill, outside of Document 28 there is a clear field, and they will be built only where emergencies exist.

We are now so far behind in the business of constructing public buildings that it would be simply impossible to make the appropriations and authorizations under the old system. During this Congress nearly 1,100 bills for public buildings were introduced in the House and Senate, and of course no consideration could be given to those bills; and even more than that number doubtless would have been introduced except for the fact that we had advised Senators and Members of the House of Representatives that these special bills would not be considered.

I do not intend to consume any of the time of the Senate to-day. In my interrupted remarks of yesterday I perhaps gave as much information as I would have given if I had been allowed to go ahead in a connected way. Nearly every phase of the bill was discussed, and I am going to content myself now with starting where we left off yesterday.

I hope Senators will be willing, now that the bill shall be read for amendment, that the committee amendments shall be first considered, and then that the bill shall be left open for amendments from the different Senators.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, before that is done will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. FERNALD. Very gladly.

Mr. WILLIS. I was interested in what the Senator said about this list that it was said had been framed. The report has gone out all over the country that there is such a list, and that certain places are included and others excluded. In order that we may get specific information about that, I turn to page 7440 of the RECORD, which includes a portion of the Senator's remarks of yesterday. In the course of his remarks he placed in the RECORD a certain list. For example, here is Michigan. Following that is the name "Wyandotte." Does that mean that Wyandotte, Mich., is the only place that is specifically provided for in this bill, and that it is so provided because work has already been in progress there or an appropriation made? What does that mean?

Mr. FERNALD. Wyandotte, Mich., is under the $15,000,000 appropriation. It means that that building was authorized under the act of 1913 and that it will be completed under this bill.

Mr. WILLIS. Now, coming to my own State, for example, the State of Ohio, following the name "Ohio" on page 7441 in the list are the names Akron, Fremont, and Wilmington. What does that mean?

Mr. FERNALD. It means just the same thing—that those three towns will have public buildings.

Mr. WILLIS. Why?

Mr. FERNALD. Because they were authorized under the act of 1913.

Mr. WILLIS. Because they are already authorized; and with the exception of those three that are already authorized the slate is absolutely clean?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIS. And if this bill shall pass, it is a matter then to be determined by the department, taking into consideration the necessities of the service?

Mr. FERNALD. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. WILLIS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. And it will be taken out of the appropriation of $100,000,000.

Mr. WILLIS. I so understood.

Mr. FERNALD. Now I ask that the bill be read.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERNALD. I am very glad to yield.

Mr. McNARY. I desire at this time to propound an inquiry to the Senator from Maine. In answer to a question propounded by the Senator from Ohio, I understood the Senator to say that this $100,000,000 will be used to complete the projects authorized in 1913.

Mr. FERNALD. No; that is the $15,000,000.

Mr. McNARY. Then I desire to know if any of the amount of $100,000,000 will be used for that purpose?

Mr. FERNALD. Not for that purpose; no; not for the completion of those projects which are authorized.

Mr. McNARY. Then have the Treasury Department, the Supervising Architect, or the Post Office Department submitted to the Senate committee or to the House committee any list of projects that they intend to construct under this authority?

Mr. FERNALD. They have not; no. As the Senator from Ohio says, there is a clean slate. I have no idea what buildings will be constructed, and no projects have been submitted to the committee.

Mr. McNARY. Then I am clear on the proposition about which I think there was a good deal of confusion yesterday in the minds of Members of the Senate, that no part of the $100,000,000 will be used to complete the projects authorized in 1913?

Mr. FERNALD. The Senator is correct. I am very glad that Senators have taken up that matter, because I feared that there might be some confusion about it.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President—

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. HARRELD. Is it not true that a representative of the Treasury Department appeared before the House committee when it was considering this bill, and submitted reports which had already been recommended by the Treasury Department, and which would more than consume the $100,000,000?

Mr. FERNALD. In 1924 the House passed a resolution asking the Treasury Department to submit a list of towns where emergencies existed. They did that, but that has nothing to do with this matter. Many of those projects have been cared for. For instance, St. Paul, Minn., was included in that list. Since that time a building has been leased there at a rental of $120,000, and many of the other projects have been taken care of. In others, the emergency does not exist now; so that that list has nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. HARRELD. Who made up that list?

Mr. FERNALD. I presume the Treasury Department made it up. I think a resolution was sent to the Treasury Department.

Mr. HARRELD. Then are we not in the attitude of appropriating $100,000,000 here and allowing the places where buildings are to be erected to be determined by the head of a department who has already prejudged the case, who has already determined in his own mind, if he has not put it of record, just where this money shall be spent? Are we not going before a jury that is already committed as to where this money should be spent?

Mr. FERNALD. You are going before the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HARRELD. And he has already reported that certain places are entitled to have this money spent there.

Mr. FERNALD. Oh, no; not at all. The emergency existed at that time; but, as I say, many of those matters have since been cared for, and in others the emergency does not exist.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President—

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Section 4 of the bill requires the Secretary of the Treasury to report in detailed form to the Budget Bureau.

The Budget Bureau then sends its estimate covering those items to the Appropriations Committee of the House. It has to go through that committee, meet the approval of the House, come over here, go to our committee, and meet the approval of the Senate. It seems to me that that amply safeguards the matter.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, I shall be perfectly willing to risk the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, or whoever is delegated for that purpose in the Treasury Department, if he has not already prejudged the case. What I am objecting to is that this $100,000,000 shall be put at the disposal of a man who is already predisposed to spend it on certain projects that have already been adopted by him. If that is true, then we ought to let this matter go to an unbiased board who could hear the proof de novo and determine where this money should be spent in each particular case. I do not want it to go to a jury that has already expressed itself as to where the money should be spent. It seems to me that these reports show that the Secretary of the Treasury, or the subordinate under him who would have charge of it, has already committed himself to the use of this money for certain projects.

Mr. FERNALD. The Senator is wrong about that, as I stated in the first place. Acting on the resolution of the House, they did bring forward this list; but that list has nothing at all to do with this bill, and a very great many of those projects have been cared for, while in the case of others the emergencies no longer exist. There is a change every year. They were acting under the resolution which was passed; but that list has nothing at all to do with this bill.

Mr. BRUCE, Mr. FLETCHER, and other Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. FERNALD. One at a time, please.

Mr. HARRELD. I should like to get through with this colloquy.

Mr. FERNALD. Go on.

Mr. HARRELD. Does the Senator know what officer of the Treasury Department made up that list?

Mr. FERNALD. No; I do not.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think I can satisfy the Senator from Oklahoma on the point that he has in mind. It is perfectly well known, of course—it is a matter of record—that Congress, under the act of 1913, appropriated certain funds for certain buildings and sites, and that when the Government officials went to let the contracts for those buildings they found that they could not be constructed for the amount appropriated, and nothing has been done since. Now it is found that more money is needed to carry on the work which was authorized by Congress in 1913, and for which a partial appropriation has been made. That list, of course, is perfectly well known, and it is perfectly proper to deal with it here.

Mr. HARRELD. It is intended to cover that by the $15,000,000?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes.

Mr. HARRELD. I understand that; but I understand, further than that, that it was brought out in the hearings before the House committee that the Treasury Department is already committed to a list of other cities where there were exigencies existing.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know about that.

Mr. FERNALD. There is no such list.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I simply desire to suggest to the Senator from Maine that it might be just as well to allow me to make a few observations on the amendment I have offered to this bill before the bill is read as an entirety, because the amendment I have offered is an amendment of a very radical nature, and has a very important bearing not only on the bill as a whole but also perhaps on some, if not all, of the proposed committee amendments.

Mr. FERNALD. If the Senator would be willing, it seems to me that the bill ought to be read first. It never has been read yet.

Mr. BRUCE. I thought the Senator had completed his speech and that he was suggesting now that the bill be read as a whole.

Mr. FERNALD. Yes; and I say I should like to have the bill read. It is a very short bill. Then the Senator, of course, could offer his amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course the Senator from Maryland can make his speech on the first amendment that is reached.

Mr. BRUCE. Yes; I know, but part of the suggestion of the Senator from Maine was that the committee amendments be taken up first. I say I think it would be a mistake to do that in advance of my amendment being disposed of, because my amendment will have a very important bearing, doubtless, upon the committee amendment as well as upon the bill as a whole.

If my amendment is dealt with adversely by the Senate, that would clear the pathway of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FERNALD. I am perfectly willing to have the Senator from Maryland proceed.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes.

Mr. BRUCE. I have the floor, I think.

Mr. WILLIS. I thought the Senator from Maine had the floor.

Mr. BRUCE. I thought the Senator from Maine had surrendered the floor.

Mr. FERNALD. I had yielded to the Senator from Maryland, but will the Senator permit me to answer this question?

Mr. BRUCE. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIS. I think it is of the essence of this matter to have it cleared up with reference to this list about which the Senator from Oklahoma has spoken. If there is such a list, if this thing is all cut and dried and arranged beforehand, none of us would be in favor of the bill.

Is not this the fact, that some of these emergencies which were referred to in this list, which was issued in 1924, have already been provided for as the Senator has clearly stated? In other cases, in other cities, other emergencies have arisen.

Mr. FERNALD. Absolutely.

Mr. WILLIS. So that when it comes to disposing of this $100,000,000 the Treasury Department begins ab initio, and considers every case upon its merits. Is not that the fact?

Mr. FERNALD. The Senator from Ohio is correct. Let me say, in answer to that, that this is similar to the list in Document No. 28. I thought I had answered that in my answer to the question asked by the Senator from North Carolina yesterday, and cleared that situation all up. The other list that is referred to here in Document No. 28 was confusing to Senators, because 62 of the buildings mentioned in that list have been built since the list was issued. The Senator from Ohio has cleared that up.

Now the Senator from Maryland may proceed. I thank him for yielding to me.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I have nothing to say in relation to the parts of this bill which deal with local improvement projects. The amendment which I have offered does not affect them in any way. What I propose to say I shall say entirely with reference to the portions of this bill which provide for the acquisition of sites for public buildings or for the erection of public buildings or for the purchase of existing buildings in the District of Columbia.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to ask a question?

Mr. BRUCE. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator propose to confine his remarks to buildings to be put up on the south side of Pennsylvania Avenue?

Mr. BRUCE. Yes; I do. That is what I wish to explain.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am in agreement with the Senator in that matter.

Mr. BRUCE. I wish to explain it. I think that when my amendment is brought to the attention of Senators it will probably receive a very considerable, if not a preponderant, support from them.

Some poet spoke of a city as "the city of the dreadful night." It seems to me that it can be truly said of Washington that it is the city of lost artistic opportunities. I imagine that very few Members of the Senate have given sufficient study to the subject to realize how all but hopelessly the original plan of the designers of the city of Washington—who were no less persons than the famous French engineer and architect, L'Enfant, and George Washington—have miscarried as time has gone on.

The plan of L'Enfant was that the National Capitol should be at the east end of a west and east line running through a point near the present Washington Monument, and that the White House should be at the north end of a south and north line running through the same point, and that all in the way of beauty, architectural and otherwise, that could be lavished by human skill, ingenuity, and genius should be lavished upon the Mall, the parks, the avenues, and the public buildings that were to be laid out and erected in association with those two lines or axes.

The plan of L'Enfant was such that no less than 16 avenues in this city were to open up vistas revealing the National Capitol, and that other avenues in the same way were to open up vistas revealing in the same artistic manner the White House, or the President's House, as it was called. The Mall, which was to be laid out for a distance of a mile and a half from the National Capitol to a point near the present site of the Washington Monument, was to be no less than 400 feet wide, and on each side of it there was to be a park 600 feet wide. Flanking these parks were to be erected the public edifices of the city, and the Mall, parks, and avenues were to be adorned with monuments and statuary and other artistic objects.

No grander conception was ever formed in the cells of the human brain for the purpose of producing a splendid artistic result, and, as we all know, the pecuniary resources of the country have proved entirely adequate for the complete development of the L'Enfant plan and the entire fulfillment of his glorious, radiant vision.

Yet how completely have all the hopes involved in that plan been falsified by lack of vision, imagination, breadth of view, and, in some cases, of an unselfish spirit. Real-estate agents have had far more to do with the development of this city than any architect, engineer, artist, or technical expert of any sort has had. Grateful, indeed, should we be that at least a part of the L'Enfant plan should have been carried into effect. We have this superb edifice, the National Capitol, one of the chief architectural ornaments of this country, seated here upon this lofty hill and commanding one of the most beautiful, physical settings with which nature has ever blessed any city. And we have at the end of Pennsylvania Avenue the "President's House," of the L'Enfant plan. Moreover, perhaps here and there we have some shattered vestiges of that plan, but in the main the plan has gone to shipwreck.

At the present time the public side of Washington seems to be developing without any comprehensive plan of any sort. North of Pennsylvania Avenue are no less than 190 buildings used by the Government for public purposes. Some of these buildings are owned by it and some are only rented by it. The Agricultural Department, for instance, is housed in no less than 45 scattered buildings, and other departments of the Federal Government are housed in more than one building.

Buildings have been erected or have been purchased by the Government without reference to any real considerations of general convenience, comfort, or utility. We find one away off to the northeast, another away off to the southwest. Tenements of one sort or another occupied by the Government are strewn over the surface of a large part of the city of Washington.

Some of these buildings, of course, have no pretensions whatsoever to architectural beauty.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRUCE. Certainly.

Mr. KENDRICK. In connection with the subject the Senator is discussing, I want to call his attention to section 2 of the pending bill, which would seem to place a further premium on proceeding without regard to order or artistic development. This section of the bill reads as follows:

SEC. 2. (a) The work of preparing designs and other drawings, estimates, specifications, and awarding of contracts, as well as the supervision of the work authorized under the provisions of this act, shall be performed by the Office of the Supervising Architect, Treasury Department, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, except as otherwise provided in this act, but in designing and constructing buildings under the provisions of this act preference shall be given, so far as practicable, to standardized types, and in other cases where possible and appropriate to commercial types modified to meet governmental requirements, rather than to buildings of monumental character.

Mr. BRUCE. Exactly, and I propose to offer another amendment, which will doubtless be highly gratifying to the Senator from Wyoming, striking those words out of the bill. Just think of it, after this long lapse of time we have reached the point where it is gravely proposed that the public edifices of this city to be built in the future shall be standardized as though they were so many monstrous dry-goods boxes. I recall the fact that many years ago an English clergyman, who was a visitor to my father's home in southern Virginia, expressed on one occasion the opinion, after his attention had been called to the quadrangular, barnlike structures which constituted the Presbyterian churches of that part of the world, that all the misfortunes which the Civil War brought upon the South were due to divine resentment excited by the character of its ecclesiastical architecture. That is the kind of architecture which the Committee on Public Buildings proposes in the bill which is now before us to inflict upon the city of Washington.

Mr. KENDRICK. I desire to ask the Senator if he does not believe that the provision which I have quoted from the bill suggests that after 100 years we still are without vision as to the future of this city?

Mr. BRUCE. Indeed it does, may I say to the Senator. Nothing else in the bill gave me such a shock as those words that the Senator from Wyoming has read. Never, it seems to me, has the plan of L'Enfant run so completely into the ground as it did when these provisions were conceived and embodied in the bill. But it has other features that might be freely commented on, too.

Mr. KENDRICK. In connection with this statement I take occasion to say that one finds upon a visit to most of our school buildings a condition that is not only shocking but actually discreditable. In almost every instance there is an entire absence of playgrounds around these great buildings. Every single bit of physical exercise that the children of the city take while at school must be taken under a roof and indoors. It seems to me that if we are ever going to nationalize our Capital we ought to proceed with at least a suggestion of the necessity of providing finally that it shall be the most beautiful city on the face of the earth.

Mr. BRUCE. I agree absolutely with the Senator from Wyoming. Nowhere in Washington do we see any evidence of any such thing as wise and comprehensive planning. No sort of proper attention is paid to futurity or even to the present. Why should such a state of things exist when we remember that this country at the present time is the wealthiest and most powerful country in the whole wide world, and entirely capable, almost at any time that it pleases, of having a collection of public buildings in the city of Washington that would far exceed in beauty and splendor the public edifices of ancient Rome or Athens or of modern Paris or Vienna; for the finest results of even the artistic culture of ancient Athens and Rome are available to the modern architect? I might add that, as I remember at this moment, the L'Enfant plan was not only originally formed by L'Enfant, one of the most remarkable engineers of modern times, with the aid of George Washington, but afterwards met with the approval of Thomas Jefferson, too; and only a few years ago I had the pleasure of hearing a distinguished professor of architecture at the University of Virginia, a Harvard man, say that, in his opinion, Thomas Jefferson, though he did not pretend to be a professional architect at all, was the greatest architect ever produced by the United States until the time of Stanford White and Ralph Adams Cram. And yet, apparently, we are unwilling to accept the ideas of these great men, and prefer to leave the future planning of our city to realtors and routine officials of the Government.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an observation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EDWARDS in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BRUCE. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator's amendment provides that, with the exception of land that may be taken for increasing the size of the Government Printing Office, no additional land shall be acquired in the District of Columbia north of Pennsylvania Avenue or north of New York Avenue. I do not see that the amendment, if adopted, would interfere with the general provisions of the bill at all. I do not see that it proposes any new policy or any new principle. It is a mere limitation.

Mr. BRUCE. That is the point.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am inclined to think that the Senator's position is correct. In other words, the view is that south of Pennsylvania Avenue and south of New York Avenue abundant area already exists for the Government to use in putting up the structures it needs, and there is no occasion to go north thereof, and therefore that field ought not to be invaded by the Government.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator has grasped my point precisely.

Mr. FLETCHER. It seems to me the Senator is correct about that, but the amendment, if incorporated in the bill, would not in any wise affect the general provisions of the character of the bill.

Mr. BRUCE. Not in the slightest.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not sure whether we can find a sufficient area south of Pennsylvania Avenue and New York Avenue, but it seems on the face of it that the lands already owned by the Government in that area are sufficient, and possibly we would not have to acquire any new sites.

Mr. BRUCE. At the present time, of course, the Government owns 5 acres west of Seventeenth Street and south of New York Avenue and 5 acres east of Fifteenth Street and south of Pennsylvania Avenue. As I understand it, the Government also owns land along the Mall, and a very large amount of it—the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] can correct me if I am wrong—and then there is along the south side of Pennsylvania Avenue, between the Treasury Building and the Capitol, other land which could be acquired and made subservient to the L'Enfant plan.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BRUCE. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think this is a very important matter. My mind goes back to about 15 years ago when we had a fight on the floor of the Senate on an amendment introduced, I think, by former Senator Heyburn, of Idaho, carrying out the idea which the Senator from Maryland has in mind and exactly the idea of L'Enfant, and that was to buy all the property on the south side of the Avenue and get rid of those old buildings there. We had an estimate then of what it would cost. It would have cost then only $13,000,000. Now it would cost $100,000,000 or more.

Mr. BRUCE. Very well; suppose it does?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not care how much it would cost. It was a short-sighted policy of the Congress, when we had those plans of the architects and landscape gardeners from L'Enfant on down through the years, that we did not follow out their plans completely. We should have adopted that policy and established it completely 20 years ago, but here we are now 20 years later and no further along in the development of the city. I hope the Senator's amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BRUCE. There is nothing original about my suggestions, nothing in the world. They are simply suggestions that I have caught up from others; but it seems to me that the present is a very timely occasion for asserting them; and if I thought that all the Members of the Senate were as disposed to adopt them as are the Senator from Wyoming, the Senator from Florida, and the Senator from North Carolina, I would spare the Senate the tedium of hearing anything further from me on the subject. However, as I do not know how the Senate as a whole feels about them, I proceed to submit just a few additional observations.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me again?

Mr. BRUCE. With pleasure.

Mr. KENDRICK. In view of the fact that we now seem to be embarking upon something like a comprehensive plan of building, I desire to ask the Senator whether or not he finds in the provisions of the bill any conditions providing for the orderly location of the departmental buildings, with due regard and due relationship of the one to the other, rather than having them promiscuously scattered all over the District?

Mr. BRUCE. Nothing whatsoever. The buildings can be erected in any part of the District of Columbia where it suits the will of the authorities mentioned in the bill to erect them.

Mr. KENDRICK. Does the Senator by his amendment intend to correct that condition?

Mr. BRUCE. No. My idea is that if we limit the Government in the purchase of sites to the territory south of New York Avenue and Pennsylvania Avenue, it will be compelled, by the very cogency of the limitation, to carry out the original plan for the development of Washington.

Mr. KENDRICK. The Senator realizes that even in the far-away interior of the country, in our small country towns, there is now a strong public sentiment favoring what is known as civic centers and plans for the harmonious construction of buildings that will satisfy the eye as well as serve the purposes of business or the other objects for which they are constructed.

Mr. BRUCE. Indeed I do. Nothing has made more marked progress in our country during my lifetime than the artistic spirit of the country. Look at New York City and consider what a marvelous transfiguration it has undergone in point of architectural beauty in the last 25 or 30 years.

Mr. KENDRICK. In view of the fact that we are now, as the Senator said, initiating a program of permanent construction, let me ask in that connection if we might not at this time well say that we can not afford to do things that do not provide for or have in contemplation the future ornamentation and the future beautifying of the National Capital?

Mr. BRUCE. Absolutely. The Senator is unquestionably correct.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BRUCE. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH. Does not the Senator think, in addition to the fight he is making, that he should observe the desire for the artistic construction and beautifying of our public buildings and those that are to be built hereafter, to the extent that we ought to have regard to the affairs of the Nation and the Nation's representatives, and have the department so related to the Capitol that one does not have to meander all over town even when he is trying to transact a little business with only one department? Our Navy Department is partly down on Pennsylvania Avenue and partly down on the Mall. The same is true of all the other departments. They are scattered all over town, and there is no correlation either in time or in the geographical location of the departments, or even within the departments themselves.

Mr. BRUCE. None at all. These buildings have sprung up, so far as I can see, practically without any reference to considerations of utility or convenience or comfort.

Mr. SMITH. It is the duty of the Senator from Maryland, as it is the duty of every other Senator, to visit the departments from time to time, and he knows what a great loss is involved not only of time from his office but time from the Senate itself, and that it is practically impossible for him, within the time allotted in a day during which he can be absent from the Senate and his office, to reach the departments and accomplish what he seeks to do in view of the nondescript way in which we have permitted the construction of our Government buildings.

Mr. BRUCE. I have already called attention to the fact that the Agricultural Department is housed in no less than 45 different scattered buildings.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, perhaps a moment ago when I indorsed the Senator's amendment it escaped me that New York Avenue after it crosses Pennsylvania Avenue then leads off into an area where the Government now owns property. I am afraid that a provision limiting the buildings to the south of New York Avenue will be too great a restriction. Would not the Senator prefer to strike out the provision relative to New York Avenue and just retain the provision as to Pennsylvania Avenue? I think north of New York Avenue, west of Seventeenth Street, there may be an area where it might be entirely proper to have Government buildings erected.

Mr. SMOOT. I think if the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Bruce] will wait until I get a diagram of the streets of the city of Washington and show him just where New York Avenue runs he will admit that it would be very unwise policy to prohibit the purchase of land for the location of Government buildings north of New York Avenue.

Mr. BRUCE. What property would be cut out should we prohibit the purchase of land north of New York Avenue?

Mr. SMOOT. New York Avenue runs to Pennsylvania Avenue at Fifteenth Street and begins again at Seventeenth Street south of Pennsylvania Avenue.

Mr. BRUCE. Yes; and then it continues right on down toward the Potomac River.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it seems to me if we are going to provide for any kind of a building program, unless we shall adopt the old building program referred to by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], making the south side of Pennsylvania Avenue the location for buildings, beginning at the foot of the Capitol and carrying our building program up to the Treasury Department, we shall have to use some of the ground north of New York Avenue in order to make it convenient to get from one department to another. I have no objection to a prohibition of the purchase of land north of Pennsylvania Avenue, but I think it would be a mistake should we prohibit the acquisition of land north of New York Avenue. I think if the Senator from Maryland will give the matter a little more attention he will agree to that.

I have given a great deal of study to this question. A program involving the expenditure of $20,000,000 was mapped out here 16 years ago, as I recall, by former Senator Heyburn, of Idaho. We then had a large map showing exactly where it was proposed to erect buildings, their surroundings, the beautification of the grounds, and providing for the elevation of the ground on Pennsylvania Avenue so that it would be a magnificent street. There would be, I suppose, nothing like it in the world.

The ground to which I refer at that time would have cost the Government only $20,000,000. For that sum we could have bought every piece of ground from the foot of the Capitol which was not owned by the Government up to the Treasury Department.

Mr. BRUCE. Does the Senator from Utah refer to the land on the north side or the south side of Pennsylvania Avenue?

Mr. SMOOT. I refer to the land on the south side of Pennsylvania Avenue.

Mr. BRUCE. The land on the south side of the Avenue from the foot of the Capitol to the Treasury Department?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; on the south side of Pennsylvania Avenue all the way to the Treasury Department. The same land would cost $100,000,000 now.

Mr. BRUCE. It would cost more than double the former price?

Mr. SMOOT. It would cost more than double the price for which we then could have acquired it, I will say to the Senator. I know that fact because I myself know of property there which is worth four or five times the amount it formerly was. That, however, would not make any difference.

Mr. BRUCE. That is a small matter so far as the Government is concerned.

Mr. SMOOT. It is a small matter in the life of a nation.

Mr. BRUCE. Let me ask the Senator—for I do not know—when was the ground which is now owned by the Government and embraces the Botanic Garden purchased? Was it since or before the time to which the Senator from Utah refers?

Mr. SMOOT. That land was purchased by the Government many years before the time of which I speak, perhaps as long ago as 100 years.

Mr. BRUCE. And that tract of land did not enter into the calculation?

Mr. SMOOT. That land has been owned by the Government for nearly 100 years.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield to me?

Mr. BRUCE. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. On the diagram which has been referred to by the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] was one of the most beautiful pictures of public buildings I ever saw. I wish the Senator from Maryland would incorporate in his amendment one thing which has occurred to me, that these buildings shall be ornamental and monumental. We do not want ordinary office buildings put up. We want monumental buildings which will properly exhibit to future generations what this great country is, and if we do not have some such provision in the bill that policy will not be carried out.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. BRUCE. This bill specifically provides that in designing and constructing buildings under the bill preference shall be given, so far as practicable, to standardized types, and in other cases, where possible and appropriate, to commercial types modified to meet governmental requirements rather than to buildings of monumental character.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am opposed to that.

Mr. BRUCE. But that is not all. The bill actually proposes to submit to the officials who are to occupy the different buildings the question as to whether they are or are not the right sort of buildings to be erected by the Government. It is simply incredible that any man who had any vision, any imagination, any sense of beauty, anything that lifts him above the level of the earth could have drafted such a bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. That provision applies to buildings outside the District of Columbia?

Mr. FESS. Of course.

Mr. SMOOT. It applies to buildings outside the District of Columbia. Of course, it ought not to apply to buildings in the District of Columbia.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield to me?

Mr. BRUCE. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, can the Senator from Utah inform us whether or not it is planned to locate such departmental buildings as may be provided for in this bill according to the plan suggested by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Overman]?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that there has been no definite decision arrived at by anyone of whom I know as to that matter. Of course, it will be under the Public Buildings Commission if the bill passes as it is, and I can assure the Senator that commission has not given one moment's consideration to the matter, because they thought it was an unwise thing to do, at least until the appropriation should have been made.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, perhaps I know a little more about that, although that is hardly conceivable, because the Senator from Utah seems to know all that is to be known about everything that relates to the affairs of the Government—

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am chairman of the Public Buildings Commission, and I think I ought to know about these questions.

Mr. BRUCE. I am not criticizing the Senator from Utah; I admire the extent of his knowledge on such subjects. He has, of course, a very extraordinary degree of familiarity with whatever relates to the Government; but I do happen, I think, to know a little about the particular matter under discussion he does not.

The purpose, as I am informed, is to use a large part—indeed, it may be that the whole will have to be used—of this money in acquiring the ground or most of the ground around Lafayette Square for the purpose of erecting Government buildings there. That fact has been communicated to us by no less a person than Maj. U. S. Grant, 3d.

Mr. SMOOT. Maj. U. S. Grant is merely a member of that commission; he is not chairman of it.

Mr. BRUCE. I understand that; but he is and deservedly so, a very influential member of that commission.

Mr. SMOOT. When I call a meeting of the commission, Major Grant will be there; but I say again to the Senator that the commission has never expressed an opinion by vote or even considered where the money appropriated by this bill shall be expended in the District of Columbia if the bill shall become a law.

Mr. BRUCE. I want to narrow the latitude of discretion about that; that is exactly what I wish to do.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, is it not true that the newspapers have contained very definite statements about the plan for a civic center near the White House?

Mr. BRUCE. I think so; I know that is contemplated.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not care what the newspapers say.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator this question: Is it not true that some ground has already been bought for the purpose of making improvements in that neighborhood?

Mr. SMOOT. No. I will say to the Senate that Congress has not made an appropriation for the purchase of any land in the District of Columbia, with the exception of the land which we had to buy in order to retain certain temporary buildings. The Government had no place in the world where it could house the employees who were in those buildings if their occupancy had been denied to the Government. So we made an appropriation of $1,500,000 for the purchase of that land.

Mr. KENDRICK. What land?

Mr. SMOOT. The land on B Street just north of the new Army and Navy Buildings on B Street. For nearly a year and a half or two years we quietly had agents at work securing prices on that land. The House said that it could not be purchased for the amount of money which I have named, but we secured contracts for its purchase, and we purchased it for a little less than the $1,500,000.

The buildings on that property as a habitation for employees are not only a disgrace to the Government, but would be a disgrace to any city in the United States. I want the money provided in this bill to be appropriated in order to replace those buildings, and I am quite sure that a portion of the money proposed to be appropriated will be used under the building program for the erection of buildings on that land.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I wish to be understood as not opposing the appropriation.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I understand that.

Mr. KENDRICK. My desire in this particular case is, even though more than a hundred years have elapsed since the inauguration of the original plan, that in the great building program now contemplated for the city of Washington we shall proceed with some degree of discretion.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that I have stood upon the floor of the Senate for five long years calling attention to the conditions which exist here in regard to the necessity for Government buildings. I have told the Senate time and time again that we were compelled to provide for the erection of buildings in the District.

I even have gone so far as to introduce a bill for the purchase of a piece of land on which to erect an archives building. At the time that would have cost us about $750,000, but three years have passed, and we have lost in the rentals alone which the Government has had to pay nearly $2,000,000, because we failed to make that appropriation.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I think it unfair to interrupt the Senator from Maryland further.

Mr. BRUCE. No; not at all; I am glad to yield.

Mr. KENDRICK. But I merely wish to make my point clear on this question. I would be content, so far as my vote and influence go, to continue to pay rent for 25 years more and to appropriate all the money that we are now planning to appropriate to buy sites, if they may be bought in the right places, rather than to locate buildings where they should never be located.

Mr. BRUCE. That is the point. It is a fact that the intent is entertained to purchase almost all the property surrounding Lafayette Square with the money provided for by this bill. That statement has been made to me indirectly by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] himself, who offered one of the amendments that has been offered to this bill or its Senate counterpart; it has come to me indirectly from Maj. U. S. Grant, 3d; it has come to me from other sources upon which I have every right to rely. That being the case, what is the ability of the Government to buy that property with the amount of this appropriation? I have obtained the assessed value of all of it, and the total assessed value amounts to upwards of $13,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Government were to buy it now, it would have to pay more than that.

Mr. BRUCE. I am not entering into mere conjecture about the matter, because, judging from the price that property in that immediate locality has brought recently, that assessment total does not really represent more than one-half of the total value.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think it represents one-half of the present value.

Mr. BRUCE. It does not. I was making the statement as conservatively as possible. Perhaps it does not represent more than one-third what it would cost the Government to acquire it.

Mr. SMOOT. That is more like it.

Mr. BRUCE. In other words, the greater part, if not all, of the $50,000,000 appropriated by this bill for the District would be consumed in purchasing that land around Lafayette Square.

Mr. SMOOT. I assure the Senator, if I continue to be chairman of that commission, that will never be done.

Mr. BRUCE. This is a matter in which the Senator's assurance is valuable to me, just as valuable as any assurance could be under the circumstances, but I am not disposed to take any chances. He might not be able to control the situation.

Mr. SMOOT. I say if I could prevent it. One reason why I have been urging this appropriation—and this is the first time that Congress has shown any disposition whatever to make any kind of improvements here—is in order to get rid of the shacks to which I have referred. I can take the Senator down to some of the temporary buildings and show him where the floors have sunken 7 inches. I can take him to buildings where the partitions have bulged out 6 inches, and at some time or other—and we shall be fortunate if it does not come quickly—if we are not able to get the employees out of those buildings, there is going to be either a fire or a collapse that is going to cost the lives of I can not tell how many, and I want to keep my skirts clear of every responsibility in case such a thing should happen.

Mr. BRUCE. I share the Senator's feelings on that subject. Some of those buildings are disintegrating. Others involve the danger of fire at any time. There is no question about that; but that is no reason why this bill should not proceed along the proper lines.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. BRUCE. There is no reason why we should lose the opportunity that we have now of doing something of real importance for the purpose of promoting a comprehensive plan for the development of Washington.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRUCE. Yes; certainly.

Mr. FESS. I have great sympathy with what the Senator has been saying about standardized buildings. If there is anything that appeals to me in the Capital City it is that we should observe the tenets of art and of the right sort of buildings here in the Capital. The provision to which the Senator has called attention, however, is not mandatory, and it applies to post-office buildings out in the country where heretofore we have built some magnificent, monumental buildings away beyond the needs of the city and entirely out of proportion to conditions around the place. That is why that provision was put in.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator, if I am not mistaken, is referring to another part of the bill.

Mr. FESS. This is the standardized provision to which the Senator from Maryland referred.

Mr. SMOOT. That applies only outside of the District of Columbia.

Mr. FESS. I am in thorough sympathy with what the Senator wants to do. Is not the Interior Department Building north of New York Avenue?

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, right in that connection I want to say that the Interior Department Building is entirely separate and apart in its location from other Government buildings in the city; and I do not think it is too much to say that the most startling thing to the visitor who comes here from the interior of this country is the lack of any relationship between the location of one Government building and that of another.

Mr. FESS. That is true.

Mr. KENDRICK. In that connection I want to say that I have no objection to having a civic center built around Lafayette Square, but the buildings ought to have some relationship in their location as Government buildings.

Mr. FESS. That could be done without doing it about Lafayette Square.

Mr. BRUCE. Let me say to the Senator from Ohio that I think he is mistaken in the view that he takes of the language of the bill. That provision—

Preference shall be given so far as practicable to standardized types, and in other cases where possible and appropriate to commercial types modified to meet governmental requirements, rather than to buildings of monumental character—is not limited to buildings erected for post-office purposes.

Mr. FESS. I would support an amendment that any Senator would offer that would provide that the monumental character of buildings should be preserved here in the city of Washington.

Mr. BRUCE. I am glad to hear the Senator say so. I propose to offer an amendment to that effect; and it does seem to me that it would be peculiarly timely now, when we recall what very beautiful effects have been worked by the recent monumental structures erected south of Pennsylvania Avenue.

Mr. FESS. If the Senator will permit me, it is a great tonic to me to hear a Senator express himself on the floor of the Senate in favor of the element of art, instead of confining everything to the utilitarian point of view, because the latter is nearly always the ruling element in legislation. In this particular bit of legislation where we are dealing with the Capital City, as the Senator says, I join him in thinking that it ought to be the most beautiful city in all the world, and ought to be a model in every respect, so that the individual from any section of the country could come here to see the best and the last thing in the way of accomplishment. I join him in all that he says about maintaining the art effect here in the city.

I have been recently looking up the matter of art, if the Senator will permit me, here in the Capitol.

Mr. BRUCE. Certainly; I am listening with the greatest pleasure to the Senator.

Mr. FESS. I find that there have been lost articles of art of great value. We have been trying to trace them. For a specific example, the portraits of Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette were the gifts of those rulers to this Government as early as 1784. We can trace them to some extent. They were at New York while the Capital was there, then in Philadelphia, and then they were brought here.

They have hung in the Senate Chamber—not this Chamber, because this Chamber was not built, I understand, until about Civil War time, but in the old Senate Chamber. There is a description of the portraits in existence, from which we know that they were 13 feet high and very valuable. There is now no trace of them. We have been trying to locate them.

Mr. Charles Warren, the famous author of the work on the Constitution, wrote me recently about this matter and sent me an article that he had contributed to the Massachusetts Historical Association. He thinks that it is a proper function of the Congress, in the collection we are going to make in manuscript form of the history of the various art objects, both sculpture and paintings, here in the Capitol, to find where those portraits are. I have ascertained from the curator of the Capitol that his judgment is that they were burned in the fire of 1814, when the British set fire to the Capitol. Mr. Warren says, however, that they were mentioned in certain newspapers as late as 1842.

Some very valuable pieces of sculpture also have been lost. Some of them have been lost by fire. The fire in 1825 burned all but 25,000 volumes of the famous 55,000-volume library of Thomas Jefferson, and a lot of art objects also were destroyed in that fire. Then there was another fire in 1851.

It is pleasing to me to have a Senator see the value of the art collection here, especially with reference to what the city in its entirety is to be, and I join him; but I think this provision has reference to the post-office buildings out in the country at large.

Mr. BRUCE. I do not think so. I will look at the language more closely, but I do not agree with the Senator.

Mr. FESS. If it does not, then I suggest that the Senator offer an amendment to cover it.

Mr. BRUCE. It is of general application.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I do not believe the Senator would come to that conclusion if he looked at the Interior Department Building. It is a wonderfully efficient building, and I think all of us will agree that we should not sacrifice the efficiency of a building even for its beauty; but—

Mr. FESS. The two could go together.

Mr. KENDRICK. They could be combined safely.

The Senator referred a moment ago to getting the best artistic effect consistently possible. I want to ask him if he believes it will be possible for us to proceed to erect the proposed departmental buildings, that are to be on an extensive scale and perhaps as durable as material can make them, and get the best results obtainable without some grouping and orderly location of the buildings?

Mr. FESS. Does not the Senator think it is a good start to make this authorization?

Mr. KENDRICK. This is a good time to make a start, but I do not believe that the bill contains provisions that would require that.

Mr. BRUCE. I call the attention of the Senator to this fact, however: A few days ago we passed the park and planning commission bill, with amendments. That bill was a House bill and was amended here, and now the two Houses are in conference over the amendments. The bill in all probability will become a law shortly. It provides for a planning commission the duty of which would be to adopt a comprehensive plan as regards parks and playgrounds and street layouts and also as respects public buildings in the city of Washington.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] proposes to offer an amendment subjecting the provisions of this bill to the authority conferred by that bill on the commissioners created by it. I think that that is a good idea, though I do not care much for the nature of commissioners provided for by the bill.

Mr. FESS. I should like to have the Senator's view on what ought to be done with this northeast section—the part north of Pennsylvania Avenue running up to Fourth or Sixth Streets. Does not the Senator think that ought to be included in the Capitol Park by the removal of buildings that it appears to me are not at all in accord with the surroundings of the Capitol?

Mr. BRUCE. Indeed I do, Mr. President. I think if we do nothing else, we ought to provide for the acquisition of all the property on each side of Pennsylvania Avenue up to Louisiana Avenue. It is, as we all know, very inferior property of comparatively little value. On the south side, of course, the land where the Botanical Gardens are, is owned by the Government already. All the property up to Louisiana Avenue not owned by the Government should be acquired by it, either by purchase or by condemnation. That much we ought to do, anyhow; but my idea for the present is that if we by this amendment should limit the acquisition of property by the Government to the territory south of New York Avenue and Pennsylvania Avenue, then the Government, so to speak, would be forced back upon the L'Enfant plan.

I am extremely gratified by the prompt response that so many Senators have made to the suggestions of my amendment, and I want to point out to Senators just how this bill might work out practically.

Under its provisions the purchasing authorities of the Government could buy land for the purposes of the bill anywhere in the District of Columbia, north, south, east, or west. Such is the latitude of discretion reposed in them so far as the purchase of sites is concerned.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. In recent years, when buildings have been constructed in this city, have not the authorities done that very thing?

Mr. BRUCE. They have.

Mr. SIMMONS. Have they not scattered them about over the city without any reference to coordinating the public buildings in any particular locality?

Mr. BRUCE. Absolutely; and they are about to do it again.

Mr. SIMMONS. And will they not do it again?

Mr. BRUCE. Under this bill, in my opinion, they will make a worse botch of it even than they have made of it in the past. The truth of the matter is that the selection of sites for the Government in Washington has been largely determined by real-estate activities.

Mr. SIMMONS. Exactly.

Mr. BRUCE. The real-estate men come to the Government officials and offer them property and bid against each other; and the result is finally that the Government, because it can get a piece of property here a little cheaper than it can somewhere else, acquires it and erects a building on it without regard to general considerations of public convenience, comfort, or utility.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, about the only building we have constructed here in recent years is the Interior Department Building, outside of those buildings that were constructed during the war period. The Senator knows that at that time it was a question of getting those buildings up just as quickly as possible, and getting the space as quickly as possible.

Mr. BRUCE. Oh, of course. I am not speaking of those buildings; but I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that I think that it would be a good idea for the Government to raze every one of them to the ground, to wipe every one of them out of existence.

Mr. SMOOT. We can not do that all at once.

Mr. BRUCE. Of course we can not; but I look on those structures as mere temporary structures.

Mr. SMOOT. They are temporary.

Mr. BRUCE. They are structures that arose, of course, out of the special exigencies of the war; and I think they ought to be gradually demolished, and supplanted by new public buildings adequate in every respect to the needs of the Government.

Let me proceed with my analysis of the bill. Not only could any land anywhere in the District of Columbia be purchased for its purposes with part of the $50,000,000, but the persons who have the authority to purchase under this bill need not purchase any sites at all for building purposes. They could buy existing buildings, used for existing private purposes, and they could purchase such buildings and remodel or reconstruct them so as to answer governmental purposes.

Mr. SIMMONS. For instance, they could buy the building now rented by the Government for the Department of Justice.

Mr. BRUCE. That is true.

Mr. SIMMONS. They could buy the building that is now rented by the Government for the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. BRUCE. That is true.

Mr. SIMMONS. They probably would do that very thing.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no, Senator; there is no such intention.

Mr. BRUCE. If I may say so without disrespect, judging by the low standards of artistic aspiration evidenced by this bill, I think that is just exactly what they would do.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator had been put in my position and held responsible for finding space for the employees—

Mr. BRUCE. I am not criticizing the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Who increased in number from 37,000 to 117,000—

Mr. BRUCE. The Government has no more useful servant than the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BRUCE. That is my honest and sincere belief, and the Senator knows, I hope, that I never express anything but my honest and sincere beliefs. But the Senator can be the victim of circumstances himself.

Mr. SMOOT. I have had a good many responsibilities since I have been in Washington, and I say to the Senator that the most difficult one I have ever had placed upon me was the assigning of space to the different departments of the Government for their employees. The accommodations we have been able to furnish have been a disgrace, and I have been saying that now for four or five years.

Mr. BRUCE. I am going to help the Senator to get away from that, if the Senator will only help me to have my amendment adopted. But what I have stated would probably result, the Senator from North Carolina will understand. The Secretary of the Treasury, or whoever was the proper authority under the circumstances, would purchase a site and have a new building erected on it, or he would purchase some existing building and have it remodeled and reconstructed, or purchase some existing building that did not call for remodeling or reconstructing, or enlarge some existing public building; and our last estate would be worse than our first. After we had gone through those processes, it could then be said of the Capital, even more aptly than I said of it yesterday, that it is simply "a mighty maze without a plan."

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me just a moment—

Mr. BRUCE. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. Ever since I have been a Member of this body I have heard discussed the very suggestion which the Senator has made, and I have been impressed with the sentiment in the Congress in favor of some systematic scheme for the location of public buildings in the city of Washington.

The project which the Senator has suggested, to acquire the property on either side of Pennsylvania Avenue, has been one which has been freely discussed in recent years; but we have done nothing about it. The sentiment in favor of having a portion of the city segregated for the purpose of erecting public buildings has been much discussed.

Mr. BRUCE. That is the purpose of my amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Now, we have an opportunity, through this bill, to do something effective along that line. If this bill shall pass as it came from the other body of the Congress, we will delegate to two officials of the Government the sole and exclusive right of locating these buildings. The real-estate people of this city, always active, will get very busy, and inducements of all sorts will be offered to the Government to purchase buildings already used by the Government, and to locate other buildings at different places in the city, without any regard whatever for convenience or intercourse between the several departments here in Washington.

I think that is a matter which ought to be definitely determined and settled in this bill. I am very glad the Senator has raised the question. I hope the discussion will be continued, and I hope we will reach some conclusion along that line. It is discreditable to the Government, it is contrary, as I understand it, to the system adopted by all other governments, that of congregating the official buildings in some segregated portion of the Capital, with a view to efficiency and convenience. It is remarkable to me that we have not given attention to that matter heretofore.

The Senator has raised another question in which I am profoundly interested; that is, as to the type of the public buildings which are to be erected in this city. I am utterly opposed to the plan provided in this bill, of constructing these buildings upon some standardized form. The bill as now written undoubtedly applies to buildings erected in this city, as well as to those erected outside of this city. It is required that they be built, as far as possible, of standardized material. That means that they will be built with these low-pitched ceilings, as I understand it, such as are used in new apartment houses and hotels being constructed here in the city. That does not contribute to efficiency or to health. With these low-pitched ceilings a larger amount of surface is required for one man than would be required if the ceilings were higher. It is very important, to my mind, that a building in which a great many people are to be housed, probably a large number in one room, should have ceilings adequately pitched. You can not secure that by these standardized methods. That is important from the standpoint of efficiency and from the standpoint of health.

The other suggestion which the Senator makes is, to my mind, of more importance—that is, that the public buildings hereafter to be erected in the Capital of the country ought to be of the monumental character of those erected by our forefathers. It would be out of harmony if we should construct these great public buildings, which we have to build here in Washington City, upon a standardized plan, and we should not rely upon any agency with respect to that matter. We ought to write it in the bill, and write it so that that provision with reference to standardization shall apply not to buildings erected in the city of Washington but only to buildings erected outside of the city of Washington.

Mr. BRUCE. I ask the Senator to reflect upon the wonderful results which would have been achieved if the money spent on those 190 buildings, of one sort or another, owned or rented by the Government, north of Pennsylvania Avenue, had been expended south of Pennsylvania Avenue, in accordance with the original plan of L'Enfant. As it is, the whole thing has been left, as I have said, to purely haphazard influences, and mainly to the importunities of real-estate operators and agents.

If it were thought fit, a site might not be purchased for a building at all under this bill, and no really fine private building might be purchased for public purposes, but only a building which was run down in a greater or less degree. The bill expressly provides for the purchase of existing private buildings and their rehabilitation by the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. The only building, I think, to which that may apply, or which was in the minds of those who drew the bill, was the building the Agricultural Department had erected for its own purposes. Congress virtually instructed that that building be erected, as the Department of Agriculture wanted it for cotton purposes. That building has been built, and within the next few days a contract will be signed for the lease of that building, in which provision is made to purchase it.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator can read all sorts of things between the lines of this bill, but I am taking the bill as it is and what it is possible to do under it.

Mr. SIMMONS. The apprehension I have is that if the bill is passed in its present loose form these gentlemen may say that the Government is so much in need of these buildings right now that it will be better to purchase such buildings as the Department of Justice Building, the Interstate Commerce Building, or the Commerce Department Building, now rented by the Government; that it will be better to purchase buildings like that than to delay the matter.

Mr. BRUCE. That is just what they would say.

Mr. SMOOT. I am quite sure they will not say that as far as I am concerned.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am opposed to that.

Mr. SMOOT. So am I.

Mr. SIMMONS. Those buildings are not of the character we need here for the Government in the city of Washington; and if we must have them for the present, let us rent them until we can erect other buildings upon proper architectural plans.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill provides that your commission, Members of the House and Members of the Senate, together with the Architect of the Treasury and the Architect of the Capitol, shall assign all space in rented buildings.

Mr. SIMMONS. Take the building the Senator spoke of a little while ago, which was erected during the war and is so dilapidated, in which I think most of the records of the income-tax section are kept.

Mr. SMOOT. Those buildings belong to the Government.

Mr. SIMMONS. They belong to the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. They were built during the war and for war purposes.

Mr. SIMMONS. But they can not be used in their present condition with safety.

Mr. SMOOT. They should not be used.

Mr. SIMMONS. I would very much fear that this commission, composed of the Secretary and of the Postmaster General, would go out and buy some building to take the place of those, instead of tearing them down and erecting other buildings there.

Mr. SMOOT. This has nothing whatever to do with that. The provision in the bill relating to the Postmaster General applies to activities outside of the District of Columbia. That does not relate to buildings in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SIMMONS. But the Secretary of the Treasury has to do with the buildings inside the District.

Mr. BRUCE. He is to buy sites.

Mr. SIMMONS. He is to buy the sites, he is to select the locations, determine upon the character of the buildings to be erected, and fix the cost of the buildings, all the things which Congress has heretofore fixed in its legislation on the subject. We have had a good deal of controversy about that in the committee.

Mr. BRUCE. I am sorely afraid that if this bill goes through the Senator from Utah, and the others who are responsible for it, will incur the opprobrium that the English architect Vanbrugh incurred because of the many unsightly and monstrous buildings of one sort or another that he designed for the city of London. I have jotted down, as Senators were talking, some lines that were suggested as a proper epitaph for him. They were to this effect:

Lie lightly on him Earth for he Laid many heavy loads on thee.

I am afraid that is what the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Maine, who have allowed themselves to be committed to this bill, are going to do.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not even a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate. The interest I have in the bill is the $50,000,000 that is to be expended in the District of Columbia. That would be under the direction of the building commission, as provided by the act of June 30, 1920. Let me call the Senator's attention to section 6 of the act, which says that the act of 1920—relating to the assignment of space in public buildings in the District of Columbia, shall apply to all buildings constructed, extended, or enlarged under the provisions of this act in the District of Columbia, and no land for sites or enlargement of sites therefor shall be acquired or land belonging to the United States be taken for sites or enlargement of sites therefor without prior approval of the commission created by said act of March 1, 1919.

Mr. BRUCE. It is also provided that all sketches and plans and estimates for buildings "shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury and the head"—think of this—"the head of each executive department who will have officials located in such building."

Mr. SMOOT. But that relates to buildings outside of the District of Columbia. I am afraid the Senator has not studied the bill.

Mr. BRUCE. I am using that by way of illustrating the general character of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. That relates to buildings outside of the District of Columbia, and that will be just as it has always been.

Mr. BRUCE. But it ought not to be that way.

Mr. SMOOT. Every post-office building in my State that was built during the war has the name of the Secretary of the Treasury on the corner stone, which I have always thought was wrong.

Mr. McKELLAR. On page 3 it is provided that—

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to carry on the construction work herein authorized by contract, or otherwise, as he deems most advantageous to the United States, and, in case appropriations for projects are made in part only, to enter into contracts for the completion in full of each of said projects.

Mr. SMOOT. That does not apply to the District.

Mr. McKELLAR. It does not limit it.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; the $100,000,000 appropriated by the bill is in a section which does limit it.

Mr. McKELLAR. This provision confers power on him entirely and completely?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; as to those buildings. There is no doubt about that. He has always had it.

Mr. McKELLAR. If he has it, why put it in this bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Because of the fact that this is not an appropriation bill. Every appropriation bill that was ever passed appropriating money for public buildings outside of the District of Columbia has had those very words in it. The Secretary always purchases the land.

Mr. McKELLAR. Suppose the Secretary of the Treasury were to build a big office building of modern style, like we have in New York or Cleveland or Pittsburgh or Salt Lake City or Memphis, an unornamented, plain office building, on one of the best sites that we have in the city—would the Senator approve of that?

Mr. SMOOT. If he did such a thing, I would not approve of it, of course.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then why give him the authority to do it, so that he can do it regardless of whether the Senate or the Congress or the people approve of it or not? I do not think we ought to do it. I think the Senator from Maryland is exactly right about this thing. I think we ought to erect buildings in the city of Washington, and I think the Congress ought to designate the nature of the buildings and arrange that they shall be not only useful but ornamental to the city, and that they shall be built for all time.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the Senator does not want to go that far. Here is a little town of two or three thousand people. He does not want—

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; I am talking about the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMOOT. The Secretary of the Treasury has nothing to do with that. The commission created by law does that work.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator a question if the Senator from Maryland will yield?

Mr. BRUCE. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. Would not the Secretary of the Treasury, under the authority of that bill, be able to buy the Department of Justice building to-morrow?

Mr. SMOOT. No, he can not in the District of Columbia. He can buy any building outside of the District.

Mr. SIMMONS. Why can he not do that?

Mr. SMOOT. Because there is no authority for him to do it.

Mr. BRUCE. But there is a question about that.

Mr. SIMMONS. I disagree with the Senator from Utah about that.

Mr. SMOOT. The commission created by the act of March, 1919, has control of that matter.

Mr. SIMMONS. The authority to buy buildings is not confined to buildings outside of the city of Washington.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I certainly have a right to make a few remarks during the course of my own speech, though, of course, I am glad to yield to the Senators if they desire to interrupt me.

Mr. SMOOT. I certainly beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BRUCE. I am only too glad to be interrupted. I am not asking the Senator to cease his interruptions, but I want to interpolate just an observation or two.

The Senator does not wish to create the impression that the Secretary of the Treasury has more limited powers under this bill than he really has. I ask Senators to turn to the first provision of the bill, where it is provided:

Be it enacted, etc., That, to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to provide suitable accommodations in the District of Columbia for the *executive departments, * * * he is hereby authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, such sites and additions to sites as he may deem necessary, and to cause to be constructed thereon, and upon lands belonging to the Government conveniently located and available for the purpose (but exclusive of military or naval reservations), adequate and suitable buildings for any of the foregoing purposes—*

Any of the foregoing purposes—

giving preference, where he considers conditions justify such action, to cases where sites for public buildings have heretofore been acquired or authorized to be acquired, and to enlarge, remodel, and extend existing public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department, and to purchase buildings, if found to be adequate, adaptable, and suitable for the purposes of this act, together with the sites thereof, and to remodel, enlarge, or extend such buildings and provide proper approaches and other necessary improvements to the sites thereof.

How could power be more plenary?

Mr. SMOOT. That power he has had all the time in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BRUCE. I am not saying that he has not had it.

Mr. SMOOT. But section 6 limits him.

Mr. BRUCE. But I am not willing for that degree of discretion to be reposed in any officer of the Government whatsoever by the terms of this, taking the view that I do of its expediency. Does the Senator desire to ask me another question?

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with the Senator so far as that provision is concerned in the matter of purchasing sites outside of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BRUCE. But the powers conferred upon him are too great to suit my views of the bill, and they relate to the District of Columbia as well as to the country outside of the District. I ask the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Maine whether they do not think that this bill might be recommitment to the committee so as to be reduced to a shape that will take care of the proper future planning of public buildings in the city of Washington?

Mr. SMOOT. I am not even a member of the committee. The interest I have in the thing is the $50,000,000 for the erection of buildings in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BRUCE. Let me say further that I think that it would be a most lamentable thing for the Government to proceed to buy land around Lafayette Square north of Pennsylvania Avenue, as is proposed to be done. That is what the real-estate agents of this city have, as I am informed, been working to accomplish for many years, and that is apparently what they are on the eve of accomplishing. To acquire that property would completely or all but completely absorb the entire $50,000,000. The Senator knows perfectly well that drawings have been made of proposed public buildings that are to be erected around that square.

Mr. SMOOT. They can buy certain real estate, but not buy any officially for the Government of the United States.

Mr. BRUCE. Oh, the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want to appear captious in the matter, but under section 6 of the bill as it is now before the Senate I tell the Senator now, and I tell the Senate, that there has not been a single, solitary word said about the purchase of land anywhere in the District of Columbia for the establishment of these buildings, not one word. I have no thought as chairman of the commission of ever putting one where the Senator has suggested.

Mr. BRUCE. The information to which I am giving utterance has come to me indirectly from the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and from Maj. U. S. Grant and others who are in a position to know pretty well what is proposed to be done under the provisions of this bill. The Senator says that he is not a member of the committee?

Mr. SMOOT. I am a member of the commission which is to handle the matter under section 6 of the bill. I am not a member of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

Mr. BRUCE. I have seen drawings of buildings which I have been told are proposed to be erected around Lafayette Square. A Governor of Maryland, Governor Ligon, once became very indignant when something was repeatedly denied, and finally turned upon the person who made the denials and said, "My God, is there no such thing as fact?" I am beginning to feel that way about this project of buying all the land around Lafayette Square.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. BRUCE. But others do. I thought that when it came to the operations of the Government the Senator from Utah was almost omniscient.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know on what the Senator from Alabama based any such statement as that. The Senator from Alabama has never appeared before the commission. He has never said one word to me about it. Major Grant, who was appointed in Colonel Sherrill's place, since he has been in the position which he now occupies and as a member of that commission, has never said one word about it, and there has not been a syllable uttered by him or any other member of the commission as to where the buildings will be erected. All of the time when Colonel Sherrill was a member of that commission and when this proposition was first thought of and first talked of by the commission, and when I introduced the first bill for this purpose, the commission itself agreed that it would never discuss where any building for any department would be located in the District, and so far as I am concerned I have followed out that agreement to the very letter. If Major Grant makes that statement—and I have not any doubt but what he did—

Mr. BRUCE. It did not come to me directly from Major Grant. It came through another person, but I have every reason to believe that this other person is perfectly trustworthy. I am told that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] went so far as to obtain the assessed value of the property around Lafayette Square, with a view to supporting his amendment to the proposition contained in this bill, or its Senate companion piece, providing that the Government should not be authorized to buy any new land.

Mr. SMOOT. I want the Senator to take my word for it, as far as the commission is concerned. Every time I have made a statement on the floor here about the conditions existing in the District, with reference to the Government employees being located in temporary buildings and the necessity for this appropriation, within the succeeding 10 days or two weeks I have had many, many letters—I can not tell the Senator the number of letters, but many of them—from real estate agents with all sorts of propositions. That, of course, is as natural as anything could be.

Mr. BRUCE. They have been so successful in the past in coercing the location of Government buildings that it is not surprising that they should follow their success up in this case.

Mr. SMOOT. Not since I have been here. Will the Senator tell where there is one single place—

Mr. BRUCE. There are 190 buildings north of Pennsylvania Avenue scattered here and there—

Mr. SMOOT. All rented.

Mr. BRUCE. No, not all rented.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, the Government did, prior to the war and during the war, acquire a few buildings. They bought a hotel.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator makes the statement that all Government buildings north of Pennsylvania Avenue are rented by the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I did not say that, or did not intend to say it.

Mr. BRUCE. I have the official information. Among the Federal buildings north of Pennsylvania Avenue owned by the Federal Government are the Bureau of Standards, the Arlington Hotel, Treasury Annex No. 1, Government Printing Office power-house, Government Printing Office annex, the Atlantic Building, the city post office, the General Land Office, the Patent Office, the Pension Office, the Courthouse, and so forth. That is only some of them.

Mr. SMOOT. So far as I can speak as chairman of the commission, I am going to insist on the use of every foot of space in those buildings that we can utilize.

Mr. BRUCE. Among the buildings that the Government is renting, and the total rentals amount to upward of a million dollars a year, for office purposes—

Mr. SMOOT. I have called attention to that fact.

Mr. BRUCE. Among the buildings rented by the Government are the Department of Justice, the Department of Commerce, the Emory Building, the Globe Building, and others. It also rents space in different private office buildings, as in the Investment Building, the Denrike Building, the Earle Building, the Merchants Transfer and Storage Building, and so on; in other words, in the housing arrangements of the Government there is no consistency of purpose, no coherence of plan.

Mr. SMOOT. I am aware of that; but does the Senator complain that the Government of the United States is renting this space? I do not think he does.

Mr. BRUCE. I am absolutely opposed to renting any space or erecting any structure for Government housing except in accordance with some definite, fixed plan.

Mr. SMOOT. But what would the Senator do? Would he turn the employees of the Government departments out on the street?

Mr. BRUCE. No; we must hold on to temporary buildings, just as until a small town is able to erect a brick schoolhouse it has to put up with portable frame school buildings.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield to me?

Mr. BRUCE. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. This bill, instead of fixing any plan or aiding in any plan or system or arrangement by which buildings may be erected in the future, proposes to turn the matter over to one man to buy or to alter or to change or to add to or to arrange just exactly as it suits himself, and nobody else has anything in the world to do with it. It seems to me that the Senator from Maryland is exactly right in his contention that we ought to see that proper buildings are erected here in the city of Washington that will be useful and convenient for the Government and not merely useful and convenient to the citizens of Washington.

Mr. BRUCE. Especially will it not do to buy property or to erect any buildings around Lafayette Square, because a part of L'Enfant's plan was to give architectural dominance to the White House. That is the reason why the Treasury Department is on a lower terrestrial plane than is the White House; and that is the reason also for the excavation on Pennsylvania Avenue in front of the State, War, and Navy Building. The idea has been, though it has not been completely carried out in fact, to preserve the conspicuous prominence of the White House, the "President's House," as it was called by L'Enfant. Of course the idea of purchasing land around Lafayette Square and erecting public edifices there would tend to overshadow and dwarf the architectural distinction of the White House and would tend to make it a comparatively inconspicuous object. Then, moreover, as I see it, a fatal objection to that idea is, as I have shown from the assessment rolls of the city of Washington, that the purchase of the property around Lafayette Square would absorb or all but absorb the full sum of $50,000,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me for an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BRUCE. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] was clearly wrong a little while ago when he said that under section 6 of the pending bill the commission created by the act of 1919 would have to give approval before the purchase could be made. As a matter of fact, that approval which is required of the commission created under the act of March 1, 1919, is in express terms limited to the construction of buildings and the remodeling of the same and the purchase of sites. It does not apply to the purchase of buildings. The first section read by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE] not only applies to the purchase of buildings, but it applies likewise to the construction of buildings and the purchase of sites. This is the provision to which I refer as a part of section 1 of the bill:

and to purchase buildings, if found to be adequate, adaptable, and suitable for the purposes of this act—

"For the purposes of this act"; not of this section, but "of this act."

Section 6, to which the Senator referred, provides specifically for their consent or concurrence in the purchase of a site or in the construction of a building, but it does not provide for their concurrence in the case of the purchase of a building. There is where I apprehend the most danger.

Mr. BRUCE. I think that the purchases of sites by the Government under this bill ought to be limited not only to the area south of Pennsylvania Avenue but also to the area south of New York Avenue. If that were done, there would be ample space there for all the buildings that the Government is likely to erect for years to come. As I have pointed out, the Government already has five squares west of Seventeenth Street and five squares east of Fifteenth Street which it owns. Then, of course, there is the other property embracing large areas which it owns south of Pennsylvania Avenue and west of the National Capitol. There is no reason why the Government should not acquire every foot of land on the south side of Pennsylvania Avenue for the purposes of this bill if the appropriation should suffice. Anyway, it could purchase as much as the amount appropriated would allow.

So Senators will see that my proposition is to limit the Government in acquiring land under this bill to the area south of New York Avenue and Pennsylvania Avenue. As I have said, there is ample space south of those two avenues for all the building purposes of the Government. Above all, the effect of my amendment, if adopted, would be to force the Government to abandon the course which it has been pursuing in the past of purchasing building sites or buildings and erecting buildings in a perfectly haphazard, random way. In other words, it would force the Government, substantially, at any rate, to adhere to the plan of L'Enfant in the future development of the city of Washington.

I believe that that completes all that I have to say about this bill at this time, unless I may be allowed to declare, in conclusion, that I hope that my friend, the Senator from Maine, and the other members of the committee, may, in view of what has been said here this morning—not simply by me but by so many other Members of the Senate—give their assent to the modification of this bill in such a manner as not to defeat its general object but to bring it into harmony with some true, proper plan for the future public-building growth of Washington City.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. WARREN. I present a conference report on House bill 9341, being the independent offices appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9341) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendment numbered 5.

F. E. WARREN,
REED SMOOT,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WILL R. WOOD,
EDWARD H. WASON,
JOHN N. SANDLIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WARREN. I move the adoption of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives in regard to Senate amendment No. 5.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives receding from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 5 and agreeing thereto with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: " : Provided, That the act approved February 24, 1925, shall be construed as authorizing the expenditure, with the specific approval of the Arlington Memorial Bridge Commission, of such portion as said commission shall determine, of this or any other appropriation heretofore or hereafter made to carry out said project, for the employment, on such terms as said commission shall decide, of expert consultants, engineers, architects, sculptors or artists, or firms, partnerships, or associations thereof, including the facilities, service, travel, and other expenses of their respective organizations so far as employed upon this project, in accordance with the usual customs of their several professions, without regard to the restrictions of law governing the employment, salaries, or traveling expenses of regular employees of the United States: Provided further, That under the authority contained in the preceding proviso the aggregate amount to be expended in connection with the entire project shall not exceed $250,000, and any payments in reimbursement of actual expenses incurred for subsistence shall not exceed the rate of $10 per day and any payments for per diem allowances for subsistence shall not exceed the rate of $8 per day."

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate No. 5.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6559) to provide for the construction of certain public buildings, and for other purposes.

Mr. FERNALD. It is Saturday afternoon; most of the Members of the Senate are absent from the Chamber; and I have agreed with those opposing the bill that no vote on the bill should be taken; but I should like to have the order which was made yesterday carried out so that the text of the bill may be complete and the measure may be taken up in that form on Monday. After that shall have been done, I will be quite ready to have the Senate adjourn. I now ask that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with and that the bill may be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator's request applies merely to amendments of the committee, as I understand?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes; it applies to the amendments of the Senate committee.

Mr. BRUCE. Let me ask the Senator a question. No amendments other than committee amendments will be taken up until Monday?

Mr. FERNALD. I have two amendments to offer on behalf of the committee, but no other amendments will be acted on. The Senator from Maryland will be protected.

Mr. BRUCE. It may be that some of the committee amendments will clash with my amendments.

Mr. FERNALD. They do not do so at all.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question?

Mr. FERNALD. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH. As I understand, the Senator proposes to act upon the committee amendments which are in the bill, with two additional ones?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes; and then the bill will be complete in its text to take up on Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the bill.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was, in section 1, page 2, line 7, after the word "purposes," to insert "giving preference, where he considers conditions justify such action, to cases where sites for public buildings have heretofore been acquired or authorized to be acquired," so as to read:

That, to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to provide suitable accommodations in the District of Columbia for the executive departments and independent establishments of the Government not under any executive department, and for courthouses, post offices, immigration stations, customhouses, marine hospitals, quarantine stations, and other public buildings of the classes under the control of the Treasury Department in the States, Territories, and possessions of the United States, he is hereby authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, such sites and additions to sites as he may deem necessary, and to cause to be constructed thereon, and upon lands belonging to the Government conveniently located and available for the purpose (but exclusive of military or naval reservations), adequate and suitable buildings for any of the foregoing purposes, giving preference, where he considers conditions justify such action, to cases where sites for public buildings have heretofore been acquired or authorized to be acquired—

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I ask that that amendment be passed over. I am preparing a substitute for it.

Mr. FERNALD. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, in section 1, page 3, line 5, after the word "therein," to insert:

Provided further, That all sketches, plans, and estimates for buildings shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury and the head of each executive department who will have officials located in such building.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 4, line 4, after the word "Department," to insert "under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury," so as to read:

SEC. 2. (a) The work of preparing designs and other drawings, estimates, specifications, and awarding of contracts, as well as the supervision of the work authorized under the provisions of this act, shall be performed by the Office of the Supervising Architect, Treasury Department, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, except as otherwise provided in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 7, after line 22, to insert:

Provided further, That expenditures outside the District of Columbia under the provisions of this section shall not exceed the sum of $5,000,000 annually in any one of the States, Territories, or possessions of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection—

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I do not want to be precluded from offering an amendment to that amendment. Under the agreement, as I understand, after the committee amendments shall have been disposed of I can offer an amendment to that amendment?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to move to strike out the word "annually" before the vote on the bill.

Mr. FESS. Does the Senator wish to move an amendment to the committee amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to amend the committee amendment, and I want to have an understanding that I may do so.

Mr. FESS. Then we had better not act upon the amendment now.

Mr. FERNALD. Very well, Mr. President, let the amendment be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over on request of the Senator from Mississippi.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. FERNALD. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, line 12, after "(b)," it is proposed to strike out "The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, in his discretion, (1) to procure advisory assistance when deemed advantageous in special cases involving design or engineering features," and to insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, in his discretion, when deemed by him advantageous in special cases, (1) to procure by contract the floor plans and designs of buildings developed sufficiently to serve as guides for the preparation of working drawings and specifications, or to employ advisory assistance involving design or engineering features.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERNALD. I also offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 10, line 4, after the word "receipts," it is proposed to insert a comma and the words "and to charge against the total sum of $150,000,000 hereinbefore authorized only the respective net excess cost, if any, over and above the proceeds of such sales, of providing such new sites and buildings."

Mr. HARRISON. As I understand, these amendments are merely being offered to be printed now, not to be acted upon.

Mr. FERNALD. No; they are being acted upon.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask, then, that the amendment be read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will restate the amendment.

The Chief Clerk restated the amendment.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, the effect of that amendment is—

Mr. HARRISON. That is all right.

Mr. FERNALD. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 19, 1926, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, April 17, 1926

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Dr. W. A. Lambeth, Mount Vernon Place M. E. Church South, offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we believe that our work will abide and not have to be undone by others if it is done according to Thy wishes and Thy will. We believe that Thou art eternally wishing and willing the things that ought to be in this world. In Thy presence it is easier to believe that whatever ought to be will be some day. Give to us an increased spiritual ability to ascertain Thy wishes and Thy will. Then give to us the strength of mind and body and soul to help Thee bring in the things that ought to be, and may there be joy in the hearts of each one of us as each one of us labors toward that end. These things we pray in the spirit of the Master Worker, Thy Son, Our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ACCIDENTS AT HIGHWAY GRADE CROSSINGS

Mr. TAYLOR of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. BEGG. On what subject?

Mr. TAYLOR of West Virginia. Simply for the purpose of making an announcement which will be of interest to all the Members of House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAYLOR of West Virginia. Last year 2,156 persons were killed and 6,466 persons were injured at railway grade crossings throughout the United States. These figures show a decided increase over the previous year, and we have every reason to believe that even more startling figures will be presented for the current year unless something is done to safeguard the lives of those who are compelled to cross railway tracks.

In the caucus room of the House Office Building there will be on exhibition all next week a complete model of a railway safety gate, invented by a West Virginian. The universal use of this automatic safety gate would greatly reduce, if not entirely eliminate, the needless loss of life at grade crossings, and this model has been brought here for the purpose of showing to the Members of Congress and others interested its practicability as a life-saver. The model will be on exhibition every day this next week, and on behalf of the inventor, Mr. W. T. Ferguson, I cordially invite every Member of Congress to make a personal inspection of this wonderful invention.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to prefer a unanimous-consent request. I have a certificate from the auditor of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia showing that since the war started in 1917 he has paid Frederick A. Fenning $98,909.18 as his fees and commissions as guardian and committee in lunacy cases, and that this runs as high as 50 per cent in one case. It runs 12, 20, 30, 40, 46, and even 50 per cent in some cases. I ask unanimous consent to put this certificate from the auditor of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in the Record showing the cases—

Mr. SNELL. Does this refer to the same matter the gentleman referred to the other day?

Mr. BLANTON. It shows each veteran's case, specifying the amount and the years, showing exactly what was paid each year in each case, and the per cent. This, I think, will be interesting, because I think yesterday Mr. Fenning claimed that his $109,000 fees ran back to 1903 and that he only got 5 per cent. This shows exactly what he got and the years in which he got it. There will be nothing inserted in the Record except the certificate from the auditor of the Supreme Court of the District. I will put in no remarks of my own.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does not the gentleman think that a matter of this kind should be ordered printed for the information of the particular committee—

Mr. BLANTON. What committee? They are all balking and holding back and breaking quorums and will not have a hearing of any kind. I would like for the membership of the House to know something about this.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It will be printed as a pamphlet for the information of the committee—

Mr. BLANTON. Some one would object to that. Every committee will get the benefit of it if it is put in the Record. It is information which gentlemen ought to know. This is information which each one of your districts ought to know, and they are asking for this information by letter every day, and I can not write a letter to every one of them, as my time is too much occupied, my desk is now piled with such mail, and I would put in this certificate of the auditor of the Supreme Court of the District so as to let the people of the country have this information.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. If I have the floor.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I wish the gentleman would not make that request now.

Mr. BLANTON. I want the steering committee of the House to know what the facts are so they will take action on this matter sometime. It is something that the country is entitled to, and you all ought to know it. I am not asking to put in any argument, but simply the certificate from the auditor of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and nothing else.

Mr. TILSON. I do not think the steering committee or anybody else reads the fine-print stuff which the gentleman puts in the Record. I think it simply encumbers the Record and accomplishes no purpose whatever.

Mr. BLANTON. It is important.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BLANTON. Do not be afraid, if you want to object.

Mr. TILSON. I am not afraid.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BEGG. Well, Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to say this—

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order. If they are going to object, let them object. I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is the question. "Is there objection?"

Mr. SNELL. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill H. R. 6707, the Interior Department appropriation bill, for printing under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan submits a conference report on the Interior Department appropriation bill. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6707) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the independent offices appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana calls up the conference report on the independent offices appropriation bill. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9341) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report. The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9341) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendment numbered 5.

WILL R. WOOD,
EDWARD H. WASON,
JOHN N. SANDLIN,

Managers on the part of the House.

F. E. WARREN,
REED SMOOT,
LEE S. OVERMAN,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on amendments Nos. 1 and 5 of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9341) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

On No. 1: Strikes out the language proposed by the Senate fixing the compensation of the Alien Property Custodian at $10,000 per annum beginning July 1, 1926.

The committee of conference have not agreed on Senate amendment numbered 5, relating to expenditures by the Arlington Memorial Bridge Commission for professional and technical services without reference to existing law.

WILL R. WOOD,
EDWARD H. WASON,
JOHN N. SANDLIN,

Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BYRNS. This is the final report, with the exception of the Senate amendment No. 5, which asked for an additional appropriation?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. Has the gentleman tabulated the full amount carried by this bill as passed and agreed upon by the conferees; and if so, what is that amount?

Mr. WOOD. In round numbers, $512,000,000. The exact figures are $512,928,376.64.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the outstanding amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 5: Mr. WOOD moves to recede and concur with an amendment. In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Provided, That the act approved February 24, 1925, shall be construed as authorizing the expenditure, with the specific approval of the Arlington Memorial Bridge Commission, of such portion as said commission shall determine, of this or any other appropriation heretofore or hereafter made to carry out said project, for the employment, on such terms as said commission shall decide, of expert consultants, engineers, architects, sculptors, or artists, or firms, partnerships, or associations thereof, including the facilities, service, travel, and other expenses of their respective organizations so far as employed upon this project, in accordance with the usual customs of their several professions, without regard to the restrictions of law governing the employment, salaries, or traveling expenses of regular employees of the United States: Provided further, That under the authority contained in the preceding proviso the aggregate amount to be expended in connection with the entire project shall not exceed $250,000 and any payments in reimbursement of actual expenses incurred for subsistence shall not exceed the rate of $10 per day and any payments for per diem allowances for subsistence shall not exceed the rate of $8 per day."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves to recede and concur with an amendment.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. MADDEN. I just want to say a word to the House. This is the item that was before the House on day before yesterday and sent back to conference. As the item stood then there was no limitation on the amount that could be expended on architect's fees, or engineers, or for experts, and no limitation on the amount that could be expended for travel or for per diem expense. If the ordinary practice in connection with the employment of architects and engineers were to be pursued and a commission paid for the services they might render it would cost $900,000 to do what this amendment limits to $250,000, and in accordance with the plan submitted before there would have been authority for the expenditure of $12 a day flat, without limitation of any kind, for travel allowance and per diem expense.

This amendment now, as it goes back, limits the per diem expense to $8 a day, and under no circumstances to exceed $10 a day.

This would indicate that we have saved at least $650,000 in what would have been expended if the amendment that was before us the other day had been adopted.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. AYRES. Does the amendment also put a limitation on the number of experts?

Mr. MADDEN. No. We can not do that, because these men are not employed in the ordinary way. They are called in for consultation. It puts a limit on the total amount that can be expended.

Mr. BYRNS. I understand the work will take about five years?

Mr. MADDEN. It will be a period of over five years for the expenditure of this $250,000.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

The motion was agreed to.

ADEQUATE BUT ECONOMICAL DEFENSE POLICIES—SOME DANGEROUS NATIONAL TENDENCIES—HOW THE ESSENTIAL SPIRIT OF AMERICA MUST DOMINATE MERE MATERIAL POWER

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record on some matters relating to the national defense and related questions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his own remarks on certain matters relating to the national defense. Is there objection? There was no objection.

MEMBER MILITARY AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I did not seek membership on the Committee on Military Affairs, as I preferred either the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce or the Judiciary, since these two last-named committees would have permitted me to aid legislation that comes very directly in touch with the people in peace times. But a new Member of Congress can not have his own choice of committees, and the Democratic members of the Committee on Ways and Means, who constitute a committee on committees, placed me on the Committee on Military Affairs. Of course, I claim no special experience in or knowledge of military matters, but since I was put on the committee I considered it my duty to study carefully all legislation coming before that committee and to seek to promote the interests of the people and of the taxpayers, and at the same time promote efficiency and economy in the military service.

MUSCLE SHOALS AND THE FARMER

Of course, during my service on said committee the matter of the Muscle Shoals proposition has been constantly before us, and this has a very direct relation to the everyday affairs of our people, both industrially and agriculturally. Muscle Shoals is a great source of power, and it has been my constant effort while on said committee to insure the use of a reasonable and fair part of that power for the manufacture of nitrates for use as fertilizers, so that the nitrogen-fixing equipment may be kept in constant use, and therefore we may be insured of an ample supply of nitrogen for explosives in the event of war. Otherwise, as our sole source of nitrates would be the deposits in Chile, on the west coast of South America, we would be dependent upon ocean transportation through the Panama Canal for the nitrates necessary to produce explosives in time of war. If an enemy fleet should drive our own fleet from the seas so that we could not protect transports carrying nitrates from Chile, or if an enemy air fleet should destroy the Panama Canal by blowing up the locks of said canal, we should be cut off from that source of nitrate supplies. At the same time before war, nitrates can be used with enormous advantages to agriculture during the time of peace and can be produced and sold with reasonable profit at Muscle Shoals and at much less than the cost of importing Chilean nitrates. The inevitable result, therefore, will be to enable the farmer to obtain more fertilizers and at less money than now possible.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. Speaker, gentlemen of the House and readers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD must not conclude that I am militaristic or a believer in war, or unaware of spiritual forces, merely because I have spoken frequently during the session on national defense. By no choice of mine, I happened to be placed on the committee dealing with this subject. But I am not blind to the fact that war, foolish and wasteful and often wicked as it is, has not yet been banished from earth. Just as every man, even in a civilized and Christian community, locks his home door at night, and usually keeps a rifle, shotgun, or pistol in his home, so perhaps for generations yet nations must be prepared for national defense. I welcome every reasonable and sensible plan for peace and friendship among nations, yet history teaches us how frail is the structure of peace at best. All reasonable men must approve a sane policy of national defense, based on economy and efficiency. We must remember that national defense does not begin nor end with the mere shore line. Our commerce upon the seas is a vital part of our national life. Invasion of our rights upon the seas has brought on every war, save one, which we have had with other nations since our independence. Even 114 years ago we declared war against Great Britain because she violated our rights at sea. So the Spanish War and the World War. We could barely live if international commerce were cut off; but cotton would go to 4 or 5 cents a pound and industry would be stagnant. Such a peace would be dishonorable. We have equal rights on the seas, and we should and will maintain them.

AGRICULTURAL DECLINE

Mr. Speaker, I recognize the fact that agriculture is on the decline in this Nation, and that in our part of the country it is in a desperate condition. I am deeply interested in the subject by necessity and by choice. I recognize that the prosperity of the Nation depends upon its agricultural resources in the last analysis. I recognize that agriculture is the only really creative industry. All other industries take created wealth, such as raw cotton or lumber or iron and convert this material into other forms for the use and convenience of the people, but agriculture takes the God-given soil and sunshine and rain and human labor and from this combination brings into existence new things. It gives life for the first time to the grains of corn and wheat to produce the bread of mankind. It gives form and texture for the first time to cotton and wool, from which man produces clothing and covering for his comfort and pleasure. Agriculture takes the grass and grain of the field and by feeding them to the livestock and by breeding the livestock produces milk and butter and meat to supply strength to human bodies.

ECONOMIC TREND FAVORS INDUSTRY AGAINST AGRICULTURE

But the whole economic trend of the time is toward more industrialism. Within a generation the population has so shifted that now practically two-thirds of all the people live in cities and towns and are engaged in commercial, financial, and industrial occupations. It is true that improved methods of agriculture and wonderful agricultural implements make it possible for one-third of the people to produce more than that third and the other two-thirds can consume. Hence we are compelled to find foreign markets for our overproduction of cotton, of wheat, and of meat, and yet, in spite of a world market and a huge city demand, agriculture languishes.

Intelligent and honorable men by the tens of thousands have devoted their best energies for a lifetime to their farms and find themselves still in debt and barely able to have a few of the conveniences of life and with meager educational opportunities for their children. Why should the basic industry of the Nation be the least remunerative of all? Without the farm producing these raw materials and especially the meat and bread for the industrial population gathered in town and city, life in our great cities and centers of population would be impossible. Those who transport by rail and truck the things from the farm for the city folks to eat are reasonably well paid, and railroad stocks for the first time in history are now paying dividends. Those that labor as distributors and accountants in the great wholesale distributing agencies are reasonably well paid when compared with the farmer. Those who finance the transactions of commerce and industry are well paid, and the interest rate of money continues high. During the last two years stocks and securities in the financial centers of New York and Boston and Chicago have soared higher than ever before in history.

ONE-SIDED PROSPERITY

To one who considers earnestly and seriously this state of facts it must be manifest that there is a one-sidedness and a lack of balance in our economic structure, and he who loves his country and seeks to make her future sure must seek to learn the cause and offer a reasonable and sane remedy for this disproportion of prosperity.

PROTECTIVE TARIFF AND THE FARMER

Some have imagined that the protective tariff is helping the farmer. If this is true, in what pitiable and indescribable plight would the farmer be without the protective tariff? It is not so long since the eight-year period of Democratic administration—from 1913 to 1921—that we can not remember how conditions were. Yet does anyone recall that then the farmers were, barring the effects and consequences of the World War, in anything like the desperate condition that now confronts them? On the contrary the protective tariff is working to the detriment of the farmer.

As already stated, practically every class of farmer, save the trucker and fruit grower, is producing more than the domestic market can consume, and this surplus must go out into the markets of the world and there must meet products from other climates and produced under labor conditions different from our own. Hence, it is manifest that the protective tariff, which imposes a duty on goods brought into this country, can not stimulate and raise the price of goods produced in this country and exported to other countries. Furthermore, it must be manifest that since the protective tariff increases the price of farm machinery and farm implements and all kinds of clothing and practically every domestic article, from a frying pan to a pair of scissors, from a carving knife to a crosscut saw, being on the duty lists and being increased in price by the tariff, the farmer is compelled to buy what he must have in a protected market where he has not the benefits of competition from other nations, and at the same time, he is compelled to sell the bulk of his production in a free market where he has no protection, and where he must meet competition from products produced in other climates and under other labor conditions.

FARM COOPERATION

What the farmer needs above all is a revision of the protective tariff so that we may have a tariff for revenue, with schedules so adjusted as to protect the differential between the price of American labor and foreign labor, but not unduly to bring about the watering of the stocks of American factories, nor make them neglect economy and business efficiency, nor to overlook the cheap raw materials that are at hand in America, the cheap land and cheap power at the disposition of the American manufacturer. But the American farmer needs a nation-wide organization of every group of producers on the cooperative basis, and national legislation properly to coordinate and combine these groups is essential to the ultimate prosperity of agriculture. Of course, the farmer must build up his own soil and must use intelligence in diversifying his crops and in preparing his produce neatly and prudently for the market and he must be a wise and shrewd merchant of everything that he produces. These things no legislation can do for him.

TAX EXEMPTION FOR EXPENSE OF SICKNESS, FUNERAL, OR EDUCATION

When the tax reduction bill was under consideration I offered amendments to allow the taxpayer, head of a family, a special deduction for special expense in case of medical or hospital charges or funeral expenses or school expenses for any member of his family. The Republican machine voted it down. The law now allows credit in the tax return for bad debts, losses by fire or storm, or worn-out machinery, or religious and charitable contributions. How much more reasonable it would be to allow credit for the unexpected and burdensome expense of sickness, surgical operation, or death?

ECONOMY MUST PRECEDE TAX REDUCTION

The taxpayer is grateful for the tax reduction made this session, but he also is concerned in our practicing the strictest economy so that other reductions may be made. Indications are that the recent cuts were not deep enough. It would be a good thing for us to face a deficiency now and then. Nations, like individuals, are safer when some impulses to extravagance and waste must be restrained.

AVIATION EFFICIENT AND ECONOMICAL DEFENSE

Another matter before the Military Affairs Committee during my tenure of office has been the matter of aviation, both military and civil, and I early took an advanced position on that question. I have labored continuously and zealously to bring about legislation that will encourage young men of talent, with a spirit of adventure, to go into aviation, either in the Army or in the civil service of the Post Office or in the private transportation business by air. I soon realized that there was a mental inhospitality among the high command of both the Army and the Navy toward progressive aviation. Very many of the aviators in the Army and the Navy came in as a result of their war-time service, and did not enter the Army and the Navy through the ordinary channels, and these former civilians, now former emergency officers, have not been any too generously welcomed by the regular old line officer personnel. Furthermore, the peculiar hazards of the air, the death rate being 10 in the Air Service to 1 in the Infantry or Artillery or Cavalry in peace times, justified not only an increase in pay for pilots that frequently and regularly are required to make flights in the air, but also justified concessions of other kinds to encourage the best of human material in sufficient numbers to come into the Air Service and to protect their families and loved ones in the event of death or permanent and total disability. I have therefore worked unceasingly to remedy the adverse conditions making against the necessary and inevitable progress of aviation.

EFFORT TO PRODUCE ECONOMY AND EFFICIENCY IN THE ARMY

I early became convinced that there is not only a lack of proper coordination and cooperation between the Army and the Navy but there is a certain feeling of jealousy, more than mere rivalry, between these two branches of the defense forces. Relying upon the opinions of experienced legislators and students of public affairs, and confirmed by my own limited observation and experience and study, I became convinced that it would be possible to save at least $100,000,000 a year out of the total annual Budget of nearly $700,000,000 for the support and development of both the Army and the Navy. I could not see any reason whatever in having a set of sea transports for the Army and another set for the Navy. While the Army has its own docks and warehouses and storehouses, at the same time the Navy also has docks and warehouses and storehouses, thus duplicating these facilities. Likewise there is duplication in the coast defenses and in the landing fields and in the training schools and in the recruiting services. Furthermore, there is unnecessary competition between these two branches of service in the purchase of supplies, such as coal, oil, gasoline, uniforms, rations, and numerous other articles used by both services, and all could be included in the same contract of purchase. One hundred million dollars a year saved is worth while. It would pay the total annual budget of the State of South Carolina for 10 years. It is true that it would pay the present interest obligation of the United States Government for only about 30 days. The Federal Treasury measures dollars not in thousands, not in millions, but in billions.

COMPETITION IN BIDDING THE SAFEGUARD TO HONESTY AND ECONOMY

But I was not so blindly enthusiastic over the subject of aviation as not to discriminate between what is supported by reason and common sense and what is opposed to good business experience and everyday judgment. Therefore, when two committees, one a committee from the House of Representatives, known as the Lampert committee, and another committee known as the President's Aircraft Committee, or the Morrow committee, both instructed to study what is wrong with our aviation, and to make suggestions as to how to remedy it, recommended that, among other things, the laws requiring competitive bidding in the letting of contracts for the purchase of airplanes be amended and changed so as to permit a Government official to sign a contract with the manufacturer of airplanes without having advertised for bids, and without having submitted the proposition to a number of other manufacturers and merely to rely upon his own judgment, whether good or bad, whether based upon business principles or common sense or not, providing for the purchase at a stipulated price of a certain number of airplanes, I realized there was danger in this suggestion, and I immediately began to oppose it energetically on all occasions and at every opportunity. I spoke against it in private conversation with Members and on the floor of the House, and especially in the Committee on Military Affairs almost daily during the period of nearly 90 days I waged an uncompromising and deliberate fight against letting down the bars and letting out contracts without the safeguards of competition. The first vote in the Committee on Military Affairs stood against me 11 to 10, but I never gave up the fight and gave notice that upon the floor of the House I would oppose the bill and would move to strike out the provision that eliminates competitive bidding and to insert other provisions that would strengthen the existing law which requires competitive bidding, and also to insert a provision imposing criminal penalties upon any person or persons that should conspire and collude to prevent free, open, and unrestricted competition in bidding for the purchase or manufacture of airplanes. At the very last those favoring the idea realized the impossibility of securing the indorsement of the House of Representatives with the committee itself so evenly divided on such a fundamental question, and therefore they surrendered the fight, and the bill went out of the committee without the objectionable clause above mentioned.

MANY MILLIONS SAVED BY SAVING COMPETITION

I have tried to estimate how much will be saved to the Nation's Treasury by preserving the principle of competitive bidding in aircraft. It is manifest that the Army and the Navy will spend in the next five years at least $150,000,000 on aircraft. I estimate that without competitive bidding the manufacturers would take at least one-third of this sum in the form of unreasonable and unnecessary and unconscionable profits. Therefore I feel that those of us who have made the fight to preserve and protect competitive bidding have saved to the Treasury at least $50,000,000 for the next five years. But that is not all. Other departments will also be buying airplanes, and at the end of five years the air progress will largely expand, so that the more airplanes that shall be built the more profits the manufacturers would have made, and therefore the more money we have saved by saving the law which saves the Treasury against the exploitation of the shrewd and skillful manufacturer that is bound to take advantage of the inexperience of the Army and Navy officers. These gentlemen are just as honorable on the average as bank cashiers, or county commissioners, or city aldermen, or State officials generally. But we know that hundreds of bank cashiers default every year. Not every default is a case of deliberate and sinful wrongdoing. Much of it is the result of inexperience in business and ignorance of the schemes and wiles by which the big business man mesmerizes and befuddles the brain of the public official. So it would be dangerous to the Treasury to permit an Army or Navy officer to sit down on one side of the table with one of these highly trained and shrewd business men on the other side of the table and let them make the figures and draw a contract for the purchase of airplanes and airplane equipment. I venture to say that in 95 per cent of all the cases the Government would get badly stuck and stung and the manufacturers would put countless millions of unnecessary profits in their pockets.

EFFORTS TO SAVE OUR NATIONAL RESOURCES

I have kept my eyes and ears open to save the resources of the Nation in other respects. When a bill was brought forward at the instigation of the War Department to authorize the sale of 48 different parcels of land situated in 14 different States ranging from New York all around to California, I realized that the Government was not adequately protected in providing for the proper appraisal and advertisement and sale by sealed bids first and then by public auction, and I set to work to try to amend the bill and next introduced a bill to regulate the sale of real estate under such conditions. Though it is impossible for said latter bill to become law at this session, yet I conferred with the Assistant Secretary of War and with an officer representing that branch of the service and wrote a very long letter setting forth my ideas as to the best plan of procedure in order to bring the best possible price for this real estate, and I am satisfied that the efforts thus made will result in saving many, many millions of dollars to the Treasury. Furthermore, I have given notice to all parties concerned that at the next session of Congress I will introduce a resolution calling upon the War Department to make a report to Congress of the price that each parcel of real estate brought when sold, so that the War Department now knows that its acts and doings in the premises will be carefully scrutinized in the future, and it is but human and reasonable that this consciousness will lead to a care and precaution in the sale of this real estate that might otherwise not have been exercised. We are all human, and some of us become lax and careless even about our own private business. Therefore, it is not unreasonable and unnatural that Army and Navy officers should be disposed to let them drag and slide and to take the line of least resistance unless they know that there will be a hereafter and that their acts and doings may be brought under the scrutiny of others. This has not been prompted by any unfriendliness toward these Army and Navy officers, and I feel quite sure that those who are sincere and genuinely devoted to the public interest appreciate my efforts to protect the public's interests, as many of these officers have so expressed themselves to me.

THE HOUSING PROGRAM FOR THE ARMY

Then, in another respect, I have been watching after the saving of our national resources. Parcels of real estate heretofore sold brought a total of about $7,000,000, and a building program was brought in authorizing the use of this money in constructing certain barracks and hospitals at various military posts. I insisted that certain amendments be made to the bill itself, and then through a speech on the floor called attention of the War Department to the fact that shrewd and experienced contractors called upon to bid on these various jobs might take advantage of the representatives of our Government in the War Department unless the most scrupulous and painstaking checks should be made. I have become convinced from certain observation made during the war and from observations made in the District of Columbia during my service in Congress that there are many people who regard the Public Treasury as common prey, and do not consider it dishonorable to formulate schemes and execute plans to extract from the Treasury money that is not justly and honorably due. Therefore, I have also notified the War Department by this speech and by my general attitude on the subject that I will call for a report of how this money has been spent, so that I feel sure greater care and precaution will be exercised to insure something more like a reasonable return for the money expended.

HOW ONE ITEM OF $281,440 WAS SAVED AT FORT BLISS, TEX.

I call attention briefly to the fact that by an amendment to a pending bill and by some remarks made in connection therewith there was saved to the Treasury in one transaction $281,440. This was in connection with the purchase of additional land for use at Fort Bliss, Tex.

The Chief of Staff of the Army and the commanding general at Fort Bliss came before the committee urging the report of a bill to buy 3,600 acres of land for about $360,000. The particular tract of land was described, and left no discretion with the War Department as to either the exact land or the price. I realize that an average of $100 per acre for land in the vicinity of El Paso, Tex., is too high. I therefore insisted that the bill be amended so as to authorize an appropriation of such sum of money as might be necessary, not exceeding $300,000, for the purchase of any land situated near Fort Bliss and suitable for use in connection with Fort Bliss, so that the various and numerous landowners in that vicinity might come in and offer their several tracts of land and thus be put to bidding one against the other for the sale of their land to the Government. The result was that the War Department, after such bidding—in that case the bidding taking the form of the lowest price offered for suitable land—bought 4,500 acres at a saving of $281,440. After the result of this was published and came to the attention of the Hon. John C. McKenzie, formerly chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and now in private life and living at his home in Illinois, he wrote me the following letter, which I greatly appreciate and have great pride in calling to the attention of the country. Here is the letter:

Hon. J. J. McSWAIN,

Washington, D. C.

DEAR FRIEND MAC: It is impossible for me to forget my associations with members of the Committee on Military Affairs, and naturally I am interested in following the work of the committee, notwithstanding I am far away. I am especially pleased to note that through your efforts to guard the interest of the Government in the motion you made in connection with the Fort Bliss land bill in the last session has resulted in saving the people of our Government the snug sum of $281,440 and in the acquiring of 4,532 acres, thus giving us 900 acres more than was proposed in the bill submitted to us. Such an achievement is surely worth while, and only demonstrates the necessity of the members of that great committee being ever diligent in protecting the Government's interests. You can feel that in being alert and submitting the proper motion at the time you saved enough to warrant the retaining you in Congress the remainder of your life. I often think of you and all the boys, and I wish you all well and hope that you all will be on guard to head off not only land exploiters but personal exploiters, of which there are many.

With kind personal regards, I am,

Your friend,

JOHN C. MCKENZIE.

TOO MANY DESERTIONS FROM THE ARMY—WHAT IS THE REASON?

But outside of the mere matter of dollars and cents there is a service that can be rendered in this connection. It is a service for promoting the spirit and morale of our military forces. I am bitterly opposed to anything that smacks of Prussianism. I believe in that leadership which is based on character and capacity, and I believe that such leadership should be drawn from every quarter, whether from the Military Academy at West Point or from our numerous high-class military schools or from our universities and colleges that have Reserve Officers Training Corps units or from the rank and file of the Army itself. Some of the best officers that have ever served our Army have risen from the ranks, as attests the example of Gen. James G. Harbord, in whose ability and fine judgment I have great confidence. I believe it will be a serious mistake if our Army authorities reduce the personnel of the warrant officers, such as sergeants and corporals, in order to enable them to maintain a certain number of enlisted men in the Army on the present appropriations. It would be far better, in my humble judgment, to cease recruiting for six months or more and let the enlisted personnel run down, maybe to 100,000 or below, rather than sacrifice the services of those sergeants and corporals that have given many, many years to the service and who should not be discouraged now but should rather be encouraged to believe that their future is secure in the Army. It is a startling fact that during the last year there were 13,000 desertions in the Army. This is more than 10 per cent of the enlisted personnel. There must be something wrong when more than 1 out of every 10 enlisted men take the hazards and chances of severe punishment and disgrace and desert from the Army. Civilian employees do not desert their jobs. Railroad employees do not desert their trains. Textile employees do not desert their factories. Bookkeepers and cashiers and stenographers do not desert their posts. They are all anxious to continue in service. Why is it that 13,000 enlisted men during the last fiscal year subjected their families to humiliation and their own good names to a slur and their bodies and persons to possible punishment by deserting from the Army? There are perhaps many answers, but most of them may be grouped under two general heads: First, the complete lack of natural human sympathy toward the enlisted man among those having authority to command in the Army; and second, the complete lack of any reasonable prospect of promotion in the service.

The spirit of Prussianism has produced these desertions. The spirit of Prussianism will kill the morale of the Army unless those in high command set their faces against it and give their junior officers to understand that they must exercise command as human beings and exercise authority based upon their own inherent personal characters and not only by the mere accident of office and legal authority.

REPUBLICAN ADMINISTRATION SHORTCOMINGS

Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit that this Republican Congress has not only failed to pass adequate measures for the encouragement and aid of agriculture by revising the tariff, by assisting the cooperative movement, and by affording a more adequate credit system, but has neglected its great opportunity to stabilize business conditions generally. What all forms of business and industry need above all else is stability. Nobody but the speculator, manipulator, and gambler profits from fluctuations and sudden changes. How can that desirable stabilization be brought about? By removing some of the causes that operate directly or indirectly to cause price disturbances. What are some of these causes? Quick changes in supply and demand caused by strikes such as a coal strike, by transportation tie-ups, by sudden restriction of credits, and so forth, all affecting in a double way both supply and demand. The Republicans in charge of this Congress have missed a great opportunity and failed in a great duty to legislate to protect the public in the steady supply of coal so necessary to keep the factories open and furnish employment for millions and, in fact, to warm the homes, the churches, and schools of the people and to keep the trains running to carry milk, meat, vegetables, and bread to the many millions in the cities. All our people are interested in cheaper freight rates, but especially are we all interested in the steady continuous flow of coal at a fairly uniform price through the channels of transportation. It is all part of the great problem of stabilization.

COWPENS MILITARY PARK

But it is not waste to mark properly the historic places that inspire patriotism and teach lessons of proper national defense. Hence, I am proud to have had an active part in furthering the project to create a national military park at Cowpens battle field, where the pride and power of British regulars were crushed and broken by raw, backwoods militiamen under Gen. Daniel Morgan. This bill will become law, if not this session, surely the next.

STOP WAR PROFITEERING

But the great cause that has been so close to my heart since the Great War is to provide now in advance that if another war occurs we may be more efficient but incur less expense, and be rid of the riotous profiteers that during the recent war period fed and fattened on the substance of the Government and the people. This legislation must not pave the way for a despot. It must place no hair-trigger power in the hands of the President. It must provide that in war there shall be equal service and equal sacrifice for all and special privileges and profits to none.

TO INSURE HONESTY AND FAIRNESS OF FEDERAL JUDGES

No man can have higher respect for an honest and faithful judge than I have. Twice have I commended the services of that great jurist, Oliver Wendell Holmes, who, though over 85 years old, still serves the Nation as a member of the United States Supreme Court. For this reason did I record on March 31, 1926, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD my tribute to the life service of the late Judge George Williams Gage and my devotion to his memory as a friend. But for this same reason did I vote to impeach Federal Judge George W. English, of Illinois. We must protect the honest and fair judge by purging from the bench every judge who shows himself otherwise.

WHOLESALE POLITICAL PORK BARREL IS PUBLIC BUILDING BILL

I bitterly oppose the manner of suspending all rules and passing this bill by mob rule. We sadly need many public buildings in our part of the country, and several in the district I have the honor and pleasure to represent. But six States and the District of Columbia will get the bulk of that money and the "solid South" will not get taste or smell. On February 15, 1926, I concluded my speech of opposition in this way:

So, Mr. Speaker, I conclude by reminding my colleagues and constituents that in view of the great urgency for public buildings I might have supported the bill if amended so as to provide for some fair and reasonable distribution of these funds among the States. But I would not support a rule to ram this bill, without debate, down the throats of the Members of this House. I would not support such a rule if the Democrats were in power. I would not support such a rule for any purpose or under any circumstances except in the event of war or of a dire national emergency. Because more important than public buildings just now, and more important than any particular legislation in these days of shifting and shuffling and compromising, is the preservation of the pure, unalloyed principles of the American representative government.

PARTIAL CANCELLATION OF ITALIAN DEBT

When the Italian debt funding bill was before the House, on January 15, 1926, I opposed it with all the energy I could command. It was not a party question, but I am proud to say that most of the Democrats voted against it. That irresponsible adventurer, Mussolini, mad with unexpected power, imagines that he has outgeneraled the American Government, but there are a bunch of Congressmen and a bigger lot of American people that he has not fooled. In my speech on January 15, 1926, I used this language:

Gentlemen talk as if this Italian debt were being paid. They say we are giving up three-fourths of the debt in order to get one-fourth. They say that it is like the case of an insolvent debtor who is unable to pay all his debts, and his creditors accept a part rather than nothing. But the analogy falls utterly. In the case of the creditors of a bankrupt debtor the estate is reduced to cash and the actual money is divided amongst the creditors and accepted in full discharge of the debt. Not so here. We are not being paid by Italy. The truth is that we are exchanging an obligation in writing, representing over $2,000,000,000, for an obligation in writing representing only about $500,000,000. It is like the case of a creditor who surrendered a worthless note for $1,000 for another worthless note of $250.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am an optimist in all things, but I hope I am not a mere idealist in anything. I always insist upon keeping my feet upon the solid ground. Therefore I am compelled to believe that this debt will never be paid, and, like it, most of the other debts due to this country will never be paid in full.

The time of settlement is prolonged too far into the future. It is the life of two generations of men. In the 62-year stretch of time ahead of us no man can foresee what will come to pass, but I am compelled to fear and believe that these debts will rise from time to time to plague us, to provoke irritation, and may be the source of very serious trouble.

AMERICAN DIPLOMATS IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES

The extravagance of the Federal Government and departure from that early simplicity and frugality that were the sure foundations of our greatness is a striking tendency of the time. In opposing the measure to buy or build elegant mansions in foreign countries for our ambassadors and ministers and consuls (usually millionaires) to live in, while the rank and file of the men and women who make up this Nation must buy or rent very modest homes for themselves, I said in part on February 16, 1926, these words:

Mr. Speaker, there is a lot of vanity and false pride about our ambassadors making a social show in foreign cities. America has the reputation of being fabulously rich. I expect the commission created by this bill will have to pay two or three times the real value for any property bought or any buildings constructed or any repairs made. This will furnish another indirect method of paying off debts due us.

It seems so easy for our people to forget the fundamental conception of America, which is that simple democracy, that philosophy that "A man's a man for a' that," that sentiment that "Kind hearts are more than coronets and simple faith than Norman blood," that elemental social teaching of the meek and lowly Nazarene that character—simple, sincere character—is the only virtue worth while.

INTERNATIONAL DISARMAMENT

We should be glad to see the competition in building armaments, such as ships and airplanes, stopped, and are glad that some progress has been made, but we must face the solemn fact that we are now spending yearly about $700,000,000 on national defense. That is a per capita charge of nearly $7 per person in the United States, or about $35 on the head of every average family of five persons. However indirect this tax may be imposed, the ultimate burden must and does rest upon those who by labor, manual and mental, by brawn and brain, create and produce and distribute the wealth of the Nation. The need for further disarmament is manifest. The need for us to employ the cheapest and most effective weapons of defense—i. e., aircraft—is self-evident. But substantial disarmament is impossible in the present state of world affairs. We welcome the dove of peace, but demand that every bird appearing as such dove shall be scrutinized lest it prove to be a mere decoy.

ORRIN H. FARR AND DOROTHY E. COLE

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report on House Resolution 176 from the Committee on Accounts. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts presents a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Orrin H. Farr the sum of $275, and to Dorothy E. Cole the sum of $58.33, being the amount received by them per month as clerks to the late Hon. Harry I. Thayer.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the remarks made by Commissioner of Indian Affairs Charles H. Burke before the Committee on Indian Affairs in reply to speeches made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FEAR] attacking the bureau.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the remarks made by Commissioner of Indian Affairs Charles H. Burke before the Committee on Indian Affairs in reply to speeches made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FEAR] attacking the bureau. Is there objection?

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I suggest to the gentleman that the gentleman from Wisconsin is not now present, and I would ask him to withhold his request until he is present.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I do not think the gentleman from Wisconsin would object to the reply going in, because he requested that Commissioner Burke make a reply to what he had stated.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will not the gentleman withhold his request until the gentleman from Wisconsin is on the floor?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I will withhold my request, Mr. Speaker.

SALE OF SHIPS BY SHIPPING BOARD

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I feel there is some information I ought to bring to the attention of this House. Thursday I spoke at some length with reference to the sale of the Oriental Lines by the Shipping Board to the Dollars. I learned this morning there were three bids submitted for those lines—one by the Dollars, one by a man by the name of Alexander, who is connected with the Dollars, and one by a man named Keene. The bid submitted by Mr. Keene—whether or not it was the fault of the mails I do not know—was not received by the president of the Fleet Corporation until too late, under the terms of the advertisement; but the president of the Fleet Corporation, feeling it was his duty to bring all the information he had before the Shipping Board, sent this bid to them.

The board was in session, and the bids had not been opened, but they refused to even consider or open the bid of this man Keene. The Shipping Board sent the Keene bid back to Captain Crowley, the president of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and all he could do was to return it to Mr. Keene. The bid was afterwards opened, and it was found that Keene had offered $600,000 more for these ships than had been offered by the Dollars, whose bid was accepted by the board.

Now, under the advertisement, the Shipping Board had the right to reject any and all bids, which they did in a prior transaction and under the same circumstances.

All of you recall the bid that was made by Mr. Ford. Something transpired by which his bid failed to reach the board until too late. At that time the board set aside all the bids.

Having this information I felt it my duty to bring it to the attention of this House and let the House know that these gentlemen, in my opinion—as I asserted the other day and now reassert—had not in mind the best interests of the American merchant marine in their action.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman does not mean to represent to the House that the Shipping Board has done anything in this matter other than what it was compelled to do under the law, does he?

Mr. WOOD. I mean to assert that they have done everything they ought not to have done under the law. [Applause.]

Mr. DYER and Mr. BLANTON rose.

Mr. WOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DYER. Could they consider a bid which reached them after the time stated in the advertisement?

Mr. WOOD. They could have done this: Under the advertisement for bids they had the right to reject any and all bids. That has been done before when the board received information concerning a bid which arrived late, and had they received the information in this case which the Keene bid contained the board could have rejected all of these bids and resubmitted the matter just as they did 10 days before.

Mr. DYER. Have they rejected them or accepted them or done anything about which the gentleman is complaining?

Mr. WOOD. Here is the basis for my complaint. There were two bids submitted, and only two, which were considered by the board. Those two bids were submitted upon facts furnished by the Dollars themselves, and I know what I am talking about. The man who submitted the second bid was just a stool pigeon of the Dollars, who submitted the other bid. The board had the right to open these bids and reject them, as they did in another case only 10 days before.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. WOOD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BEGG. Is the man who submitted this bid that was not considered a shipper or just some outside fellow who put in a bid and expected the Government to pay his expenses?

Mr. WOOD. I am informed that he is an acknowledged, responsible shipper.

Mr. BEGG. What line?

Mr. WOOD. I do not know what line.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD. And he submitted with his bid a certified check for honesty of performance in the sum of $100,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman had made it known what he was going to talk about, I doubt very seriously whether he would ever have gotten the floor, because somebody would have objected.

Mr. WOOD. Well, nobody ought to object. I do not believe anyone here wants to have anything done that is not right. I have placed before this House, and always will, information relative to transactions which I do not think are right, and there is something wrong with the Shipping Board now, and something wrong in this transaction. [Applause.]

Mr. McDUFFIE and Mr. SABATH rose.

Mr. WOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. McDUFFIE. When the leadership of this House suggests to the Shipping Board that they must sell the ships and get the Government out of business as quickly as possible, and following upon that the House proceeds to cut the money necessary to operate these ships practically half in two, what else do you expect from the Shipping Board? Are you not to blame after all for this transaction?

Mr. WOOD. The Shipping Board knew and had been cognizant of the fact, from the President down to every leader of this House, that there would be no curtailment with reference to their expenses, and that is mere subterfuge and excuse.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. WOOD. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. What I do not understand about this situation is that heretofore the gentleman has had charge of the appropriations for the Shipping Board and I remember the large salaries he permitted and how he praised the Shipping Board, stating what a great institution it was and what great men had hold of it. Now, it seems that somebody is unable to control it and make it do as they say and it is not worth a damn.

Mr. WOOD. Yes; and I will just answer you by saying that by reason of the action of gentlemen like the gentleman from Texas, whose purpose it was to make political capital, they cut down the salaries of the men who were responsible for the operation of the fleet and made it practically impossible to get men big enough to direct this work. And this, I think, is largely responsible for the present situation. We now find ourselves in this predicament. With inferior men on the Shipping Board dominating the activities of the Fleet Corporation, and attempting to direct and forcing the action of the Fleet Corporation, the interests of the country are being sacrificed.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. If the gentleman will yield, who has been in charge of the House of Representatives for the last six years—Democrats or Republicans?

Mr. WOOD. The Republicans; nominally in the last session and now in fact; but I will tell you what you will always find—

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Enough renegades on your side to attend to the business—is that what the gentleman means?

Mr. WOOD. No; but this is what I do mean to say. With practically a solid opposition upon the Democratic side, combined with the opposition of those on this side who are not Republicans but pretend to be, and who are always trying to throw a monkey wrench into the machinery, you have succeeded in doing a thing that will live to haunt you. I want to make this exception to this statement. I believe, and I know, there are some Democrats on your side who are just as sincere and honest as anybody in trying to establish a merchant marine which will be a credit to the station we occupy in the world, but I know there has been demagoguery on the Democratic side, contributed to, perhaps, from the other side, which has been destructive of the thing we all in our hearts should desire to accomplish. It was your section of the Nation that destroyed our once formidable merchant marine. It is your section that should now assist in reestablishing it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas and Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee rose.

Mr. WOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. In referring to the opposition on that side and to those only claiming to be Republicans, the gentleman from Indiana is certainly not referring to the address by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] made a few days ago?

Mr. WOOD. No; I do not refer to the gentleman from Ohio, for he is a Republican all the time, but I do refer to 12 or 14 gentlemen with whom you people tried to form a coalition for the very purpose of destroying the operations of the last Congress, and would have done it again had it been possible. Oh, could we forsake the opportunity for political aggrandizement and look to the interests of our common country in these matters, as we would look to them in our own private concerns, how much better it would be. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

CLAIMANTS UNDER MIXED CLAIMS COMMISSION

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, of course I do not object to the gentleman from New York having this consent. I simply call attention to the fact that there is a special order for to-day. I presume this is agreeable to the gentleman.

Mr. AYRES. Perfectly.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from New York does not intend to follow in the footsteps of the gentleman from Indiana and accuse the demagoguery of the House for being responsible for the mismanagement of affairs in the Government?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, may I say to my colleague that just a moment ago I talked with the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] about the matter he is going to speak about. It is information I gave the gentleman this morning of a personal nature which he desires to convey to the House, and I do hope there will be no objection to his making the statement.

Mr. WINGO. I would not have raised the question if the gentleman from Indiana had not acted as he did. I do not want a repetition of his lecture to us for the misdeeds of the administrative forces of the Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, when I returned to Washington after an absence of one day my friend from Texas [Mr. GARNER] informed me that in looking over the list of claimants who had received awards from the Mixed Claims Commission and whose claims therefore were covered by the bill H. R. 10820, introduced by me, he found there was a company in which I was a director and stockholder. As soon as he called that matter to my attention I telephoned the office of the company in New York and I found that the information of the gentleman from Texas was correct.

That being so, irrespective of any rule of the House but as a matter of what I consider proper conduct on the part of a Representative, I want to say to the House that I do not care, either in the Ways and Means Committee or on the floor of the House, to participate further in the consideration of that particular bill. [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, may I have three minutes in which to make a statement?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, that statement by Mr. Mills is one reason why I called the attention of the House to the hearings and asked Members to get a copy of the hearings, and especially called your attention to sections 3 and 4. I do not doubt but that there are 25 Members in the House of Representatives that, under the rules of the House, would not be permitted to vote on that particular bill.

As quick as I found out from definite information that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] was interested, I felt it my duty to call his attention to it. When I did he expressed surprise and said that he did not know that his company had a claim for an award under the Mixed Claims Commission, and if that was true, he would not take any further action with reference to the bill. I want to commend the gentleman from New York and all other Members of the House who will investigate and recuse themselves if they find that they have a special interest in it.

I do want to make this remark, however. The Secretary of the Treasury, so far as I can ascertain, and I think I have conclusive evidence, is a stockholder in five different corporations which has had an award from the Mixed Claims Commission, the total amounting to something over a million dollars. The Secretary of the Treasury, according to the Record, is the gentleman who made up this bill. He says that the President has examined it and is anxious that it shall become a law.

I mention this to illustrate the situation that I think is characteristic of some gentlemen who occupy seats on the majority side of the House—and that is that the Government can be used to make money for their henchmen. That is what the Secretary of the Treasury seems to think that the Government may be used for the purpose of making money, and that the legalizing of the theft makes it honorable to take the money. I do not think so and I do not think the minority or majority side of the House will come to that conclusion when you examine the case.

Mr. MADDEN. What does this bill do?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. It is to pay the awards of the Mixed Claims Commission, and the Mixed Claims Commission found that Germany owes these firms this amount of money and proposes to take the money out of the Treasury.

Mr. MADDEN. But we have an agreement that Germany shall pay her own debts, and I am in favor of her carrying it out.

Mr. CROWTHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CROWTHER. The gentleman used the words "legalized theft." What is there to show that there is any theft here?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. Under the special order the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. AYRES] is recognized for 15 minutes.

THE TARIFF AND THE FARMER

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, until within the last few years the advocates of a high protective tariff like the present law used the argument it was necessary to have such tariff rates to protect American labor. Owing to the fact American labor as a whole refuses longer to be used as a cat's-paw with which to pull out of the fire the chestnuts of the special interests, these interests are now trying to use the American farmer for the same purpose. They also are constantly playing the farmer against labor, and labor against the farmer, and have been successful up to date. I am inclined to believe that at last the American laborer realizes that for him and his family to be fed and clothed it is necessary for the American farmer to produce the raw material that makes the foodstuffs and clothing; and to enable him to produce such material it is necessary for the farmer to have sufficient remuneration for his efforts. On the other hand, the farmer can see his best customer is American labor, as it constitutes a vast majority of the consumers of the farm products, and that it is necessary for American labor to receive a living wage in order to enable him to consume such products. Their interests are identical in this particular, and yet each has allowed the special interests to play one against the other to a great extent in the past.

Heretofore these special interests have succeeded in getting Congressmen from labor districts in the cities to vote for a law like the present Fordney-McCumber tariff measure under the special plea of protecting American labor and, at the same time, have persuaded Congressmen from agricultural districts to vote for it to get protection for the farmer. With such a persuasive argument used by the representatives of the special interests, apparently it was very easy to pass a tariff law full of graft. At last, both American labor and the American farmer are seeing how they are being used for the benefit of the special interests.

While I favor a tariff sufficient to protect both labor and agriculture, had I been in Congress when the present law was enacted I would have voted against it, for it does not benefit agriculture, neither does it benefit labor, and certainly it does not benefit the great consuming American public. It does not even benefit the honest, legitimate manufacturer.

Jollying the farmer has been a great game played by many statesmen in the past four or five years. I should think it a dangerous game, politically speaking, and I am wondering whether or not it is going to be played as successfully this year as it has been in the past. I believe that some are going to find, when they return home after the adjournment of Congress, that the farmer has learned a little about this game of jollying the farmer. [Laughter.]

I remember well a statement sent out about the time the Fordney-McCumber tariff law was passed to the effect that the agricultural schedule had been so framed that the law added anywhere from $250,000,000 to $300,000,000 annually to the income of the agriculturists of the United States. This law has been in operation ever since September, 1922, or about three and one-half years. Therefore, by this time, there should be over a billion dollars added to the income of the agriculturists of the United States. I am confident the agriculturists of my district and State would like to be informed what has become of their share of this billion dollars.

There may be representatives here from the agricultural Middle West who voted for the Fordney-McCumber tariff act and who are able to tell the farmers of my State and congressional district just how they have received their proportion of that billion dollars that has been added to their income. I must admit that I am unable to do so. Certainly I can not even undertake to do so in view of the statement I received only a few days ago from the Department of Commerce, which was released to the public press on March 10, 1926, giving the farm mortgage debt for the State of Kansas on January 1, 1925, with comparative figures for January 1, 1920. When I received this statement I felt that here was a document which would show just how my farmers had prospered under the Fordney-McCumber tariff, as has been claimed by so many orators on the floor of this House within the past two or three months. This report shows that on January 1, 1920, out of the total number of farms in the State of Kansas there were 65,640 operated by full owners; that the value of the land and buildings amounted to $424,469,454, and that the total mortgage indebtedness reported at that time on such farms was $109,914,464, or the ratio of debt to value was 25.9 per cent. As I say, I naturally supposed I would find that this debt had been materially reduced in the meantime, and especially in view of the many wonderful speeches I had heard in Congress and read in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD lately relating how the present tariff law had brought such great prosperity to the farmers within the past three years of its operation. You can imagine my dismay when I found that instead of this wonderful prosperity having reduced this farm mortgage debt it had increased it, and that instead of it being $109,914,464, or 25.9 per cent of the total value, the report showed that on January 1, 1925, of the total number of farms in Kansas there were 61,697 operated by full owners, and that the value of the land and buildings amounted to $333,575,725, and that the total amount of mortgage indebtedness reported was $130,431,381, or the ratio of mortgage debt to value was 39.1 per cent. Gentlemen, you can imagine my feelings when I saw from this report that the farms of my own State, which were operated by the full owners, during these prosperous times and under the Fordney-McCumber tariff law had decreased in value from $424,469,454 to $333,575,725, or more than $90,000,000, and that at the same time the mortgage indebtedness had increased more than $20,000,000.

While I knew this report was bound to be authentic and showed the true conditions in my State, still I could not help but feel, in view of so much that had been said about this prosperity, that there was somewhere something undoubtedly showing this prosperous condition of the farmer. Knowing that the best evidence of prosperity is shown by the purchasing power of a dollar, I thought here is where I will find it, so I looked into this question, and to be sure that nothing could be put over me when it came to facts, I again relied on the department which could give accurate information of the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar. I got the information given by the late Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace, and then by the present Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Jardine; and again I was disappointed, for here is what it shows the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar to be from the year 1913 to date:

	Cents
1913	100
1914	105
1915	103
1916	97
1917	107
1918	112
1919	112
1920	96
1921	84
1922	89
1923	61.3

I could not understand this, as the present tariff law became effective in the latter part of 1922. Here is a law that was going to add from $250,000,000 to $300,000,000 to the income of the agriculturists of the United States, and it has been in operation for about three and one-half years, and during that time, according to the Department of Commerce, the value of his land in my State of Kansas has decreased over $90,000,000 and his indebtedness has increased over $20,000,000, and the purchasing power of his dollar has steadily declined until now—or, rather, on November last it was only 60.3 cents. I thought certainly there must be some cause for this. What is it? Is it because everything he buys has gone up in price and the produce he sells has gone down?

Well, I found that on the question of farm machinery alone, according to a table put in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by one of my Republican colleagues from Kansas [Mr. STRONG], that a hand corn sheller in 1914 cost $8, while in 1924 it cost $17.50; a walking cultivator in 1914 cost $18, while in 1924 it cost $38; a riding cultivator in 1914 cost $25, while in 1924 it cost $62; a one-row lister in 1914 cost $36, while in 1924 it cost $89.50; a sulkey plow in 1914 cost $40, while in 1924 it cost $75; a three-section harrow in 1914 cost $18, while in 1924 it cost $41; a corn planter in 1914 cost $50, while in 1924 it cost $83.50; a mowing machine in 1914 cost $45, while in 1924 it cost $95; a self-dump hay rake in 1914 cost $28, while in 1924 it cost $55; a wagon box in 1914 cost $16, while in 1924 it cost $36; a farm wagon in 1914 cost $85, while in 1924 it cost $150; a grain drill in 1914 cost $85, while in 1924 it cost $165; a two-row stalk cutter in 1914 cost $45, while in 1924 it cost $110; a grain binder in 1914 cost $150, while in 1924 it cost $225; a two-row corn disk in 1914 cost $38, while in 1924 it cost $95; a 14-inch walking plow in 1914 cost $14, while in 1924 it cost $28; harness per set in 1914 cost $46, while in 1924 it cost $75. I further found that these same producers of farm machinery were exporting the same farm machinery to the extent of millions of dollars to foreign countries and selling it for much less than it was being sold to the farmers of the United States.

No doubt some of you are ready at this minute to jump up and ask me if I do not know that farm machinery is on the free list. Yes; I know it. That is one of the many jokes in the present law. Farm machinery is on the free list, but how about all the material used in making this machinery, such as iron and steel? Is that on the free list? No enthusiast for the present law, so far as I can see, is inclined to say it is. You all know that it is highly protected. Certain grades of harness are on the free list, but the hardware that is used to make the harness is highly protected.

I found further that notwithstanding farm machinery was on the free list, the producers of such machinery in 1925 exported $77,223,000 worth of it, and there was imported into this country only $3,094,000 worth of it. In addition to what I have already called to your attention as a reason why the farmer's dollar has so decreased in purchasing power, I found that under this law he pays for the tariff on articles which he has to purchase and which go into and are a part of his expense as a producer, such as from 21 to 39 per cent on bar iron; from 11 to 20 per cent on wire rods; 21 per cent on iron and steel sheets or plates; from 13 to 25 per cent on structural iron and steel; from 17 to 45 per cent on wire; from 3½ to 24 per cent on nails; from 5¼ to 18½ per cent on bolts, nuts, and rivets; from 78 to 131 per cent on pruning and sheep shears; from 14½ to 49 per cent on files and rasps and such tools; 60 per cent on pliers, pincers, and nippers; 30 per cent on such articles as shovels, scoops, and so forth; 30 per cent on corn knives, scythes, and so forth; 40 per cent on builders' hardware; 50 to 70 per cent on leather gloves; 19½ per cent on salt; 30 per cent on paints and varnishes; and I could go on and mention hundreds of articles which bear a tariff and of which he pays his proportion, like 97 per cent on cheap woollens; 73 per cent on costly woollens; 57 per cent on socks; 55 to 63 per cent on gloves and mittens; 55 to 58 per cent on clothing not knit; 50 to 71 per cent on cotton gloves; 30 per cent on cotton hosiery; 90 per cent on laces; 35 per cent on his shirts; from 60 to 74 per cent on all of the kitchen and household utensils and cutlery of iron or steel; 79 per cent on kitchen and household utensils of aluminum. In fact, there is practically nothing he purchases for house or field but what he has to bear his part of the tariff carried in the present law. It has been well said that the existing tariffs hurt the American farmer by—

- (1) Increasing his costs of production.
- (2) Increasing his costs of living.
- (3) Increasing his transportation rates, both on land and sea.
- (4) Decreasing his foreign markets and exports.

In a speech I made in New York on the 27th day of June, 1924, I said that no longer could there be a highly protected and favored manufacturing East to the detriment and ruin of an unprotected, agricultural West; that there must be equalization. The question now is, How can that equalization be brought about? It has been thoroughly demonstrated that it can not be done by legislating in a circle. That is to say, each time there is a tariff law enacted giving the farmer a little protection, or even a supposed protection on some article produced by him, at the same time it increases the tariff on the many manufactured articles he has to purchase, thus pyramiding until he is crushed by reason of the inequality imposed by such legislation. This certainly can not bring him any relief. It is claimed by some who assume to speak for the American farmer that he demands the same benefit from tariff protection as has long been enjoyed by eastern manufacturers; that is to say, when a large surplus has been produced by him and there is no domestic market he may be permitted to dump his surplus or excess production on a foreign market and thus create a demand at home and thereby create a home market. This, no doubt, has been and is being done by highly protected manufacturing interests in this country. The question is, How can it be done by the agriculturist? He can not control his production. He has no control over the sun and rain. He has no assurance when he plants a crop that he will receive a return even of his seed. The manufacturer can control, absolutely, his output. He can shut down his plant, if need be, and stop his overhead and dispose of his surplus.

The farmer can not do this. Therefore, it seems plain to me that there is but one way to bring about this equalization, in so far as a protective tariff is to be taken into consideration. It is very evident it is impossible to bring agriculture up to the level of the highly protected manufacturer. To do so would compel us to continue in the ruinous system of pyramiding which would have but one result, the complete paralysis of agriculture, which apparently has already been done. So let us bring down the highly protected commodities to somewhere near the level, at least, of that of agriculture and make the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar as great as the purchasing power of the highly protected manufacturer. When we do this and provide for reasonable transportation rates so he can get his produce to market without having to pay to the railroads as much for freight as he receives for his produce—when these things are done—we will solve the difficulty, to a great extent at least, and it will not be a temporary makeshift but a permanent remedy.

As a general and economical proposition I am opposed to subsidies, but in view of the condition we find agriculture in at this time, I feel the Federal Government would be justified in providing for a subsidy to the carriers of farm produce, if necessary, as is done by the Canadian Government, to furnish better facilities and freight rates for agriculture. I am in favor of putting agriculture on a permanent and sound basis, and of making it prosperous in reality and not prosperous theoretically only.

AMERICAN LABOR AND THE TARIFF

As I said at the beginning, the special interests which are constantly clamoring for a tariff full of graft, use the argument that it is necessary in order to protect American labor. In view of this claim, and the further fact that these same interests are playing the agriculturists against labor and labor against the agriculturists, it might be well to see just how much of this swag goes to labor. When I say swag or graft, I mean a tariff rate that is higher than is necessary to protect properly the American producer, which is different from a so-called competitive tariff that will give ample protection to the producer and which will also produce a revenue for the Government.

American factory labor, which has been used by the special interests heretofore to put over a tariff measure like the Fordney-McCumber law, has also awakened, just as has the American farmer, to the realization he has been used for an unjust and unholy purpose, and is resenting it. Suppose at this time we analyze briefly the labor costs per unit of production of much of this highly protected production. I want to give a few illustrations, and in doing so I wish at this time to say I have been furnished much of my data upon which these illustrations are based by the Fair Tariff League; and further, that this league believes in a protective tariff; that its president, Mr. H. E. Miles, is a Republican and a protectionist, but as such is thoroughly disgusted with the present law, which he does not hesitate to say is full of graft. Now, suppose we see just how much the American factory labor is benefited by this tariff, passed in his name and honor.

We will take the production of cotton cloth. At the time the present tariff law was passed a woman or girl in this country operated on an average 10 to 15 looms, for which she received from $16 to $17.50 per week of approximately 50 hours per week. Owing to the efficiency of the American woman and the machinery which she operated, she was producing this cotton cloth so much cheaper than an operator doing the same kind of work in India at not to exceed one-fifth of the wages, that the India dealers could come to this country and purchase this cloth cheaper than they could produce it even with their cheap Indian labor, but because of the seeming difference between the wages paid the American woman or operator and the British operator, these special interests persuaded the Sixty-seventh Congress to increase the tariff rates so that it amounts on an average to about 40 per cent on all cotton fabrics, and with a tariff rate of from 86 to 90 per cent on laces and embroideries. To-day an operator runs on an average of 24 looms, and information from the United Textile Workers of America shows that there has been such an increase of production by an operator within the past three or four years and thereby a lessening of labor costs per unit of production because of his or her increased production, and further, with a 10 per cent reduction in wages since 1923, that the entire labor cost per unit of production is about 1½ cents per yard. It might be interesting to call your attention to the fact that at the present time, 1926, the Fall River mills are paying wages of 45 cents per cut of 47 yards of print cloth, while in England the weaver's wage is 51 cents per cut of 47 yards of the same kind of cloth. This is a fair illustration of how these special interests protect American labor against the much-talked of sweatshop pauper labor of Europe.

In 1925 these same interests exported 543,313,388 square yards of this cloth, valued at $85,011,312, while imports amounted only to $28,424,126.

Another illustration: Statistics show that fully 48 to 50 per cent of all table cutlery made in the United States for years prior to the enactment of the Fordney-McCumber tariff law was exported to foreign countries, because no country could produce it cheaper or even as cheap as the United States. For instance, the common bread knife was exported by this country the world over for 6½ cents. There is about 8 cents of labor in a knife. There was no competition whatever from foreign producers, yet the Sixty-seventh Congress gave the American producers of this knife 11½ cents protection, or four times the total American wage cost of producing it, and this illustration or fact applies also to many other commonly used articles. This country in 1923 produced $72,477,013 of cutlery, and there was imported into this country the great amount of $1,296,426, for which the importers paid a tariff at the rate of 106 per cent ad valorem equivalent, which was passed on to the American consumer.

Another simple little illustration easily understood is on the item of spark plugs. Statistics show that a machinist operating three machines makes a spark plug for an automobile every 6 seconds, or 600 plugs per hour, for which he receives anywhere from 50 to 75 cents per hour. It is almost impossible to figure out the labor cost per plug it is so small. There is practically no wage cost. There is no foreign competition, yet in order to protect that American laborer from the sweatshops of Europe the producers of auto spark plugs persuaded the Sixty-seventh Congress to give them a 40 per cent tariff rate. Statistics show that in 1924 we exported 1,448,054 spark plugs and magnetos, and last year, 1925, we exported 2,192,320. There were no imports to speak of. To be exact, there were $4,625 worth imported into this country.

It is said that the glucose manufacturers persuaded the Sixty-seventh Congress to give them a 50 per cent protection in order that they might be able to pay American wages in their production of glucose, which amounts to about 6 cents of each dollar of production. The consumers of glucose can easily figure out who is paying for this protection. We exported 171,721,842 pounds of glucose in 1924, amounting to $6,099,725. In 1925 we exported 146,068,313 pounds, amounting to $5,660,084. There were no imports at all in the years 1924 and 1925, therefore no competition and no revenue derived, so why this tariff of 50 per cent? Ask the housewife.

WOOLEN GOODS

It is said by those who have made a careful study of the wool tariff carried in the present tariff law that it costs the American people at least $300,000,000, of which about $37,000,000 goes to the woolgrowers or producers. I am informed that the tariff on tweed cloth from which women's tweed suits are made adds $4 to the cost of each suit or coat, and it is estimated that 30,000,000 of these suits and coats are bought annually by American women, which makes it cost them annually $120,000,000. It is said that the labor cost in weaving the woolen cloth is about 6 per cent. From this you can get an idea what this tariff is costing both men and women on woolen goods. Statistics show that in 1923, a year after the present tariff law went into effect, this country produced $1,062,558,438 worth of woolen and worsted goods and that the dutiable imports for consumption of the same goods for 1924 amounted to $21,083,701, upon which the importers paid the ad valorem equivalent of 73.33 per cent, which, of course, was passed on to the American consumers.

The same applications can be made as to the labor costs per unit of production on skirts, collars, underwear, hosiery of all kinds, gloves of all kinds, and, in fact, practically all wearing apparel of all kinds whatsoever, all of which would require too much time and patience to enumerate at this time.

I should think it unnecessary to call attention to any more illustrations to show just how factory labor, which produces most, if not all, of these highly protected commodities, has been exploited for the purpose of passing a tariff law that is permeated and saturated with unadulterated graft.

For instance, why should there be a tariff of 25 per cent on cash registers when the producers of cash registers already had a monopoly on them? In 1925 we exported 24,664, valued at $4,892,272. The imports amounted to $1,843. Consequently there is no competition and no revenue collected by the Government to speak of, just $460.75. So again I ask, why this 25 per cent tariff rate? It may be that the business man who buys these machines could answer the question.

SEWING MACHINES

In almost every American home there is a sewing machine. In addition to this, hundreds of thousands of good, honest American women earn their living with a sewing machine. They were on the free list until the Sixty-seventh Congress passed the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act, and then they were placed on the protected list. Why it was done no one except the producers, who already had a monopoly, can tell. However, a rate of from 15 to 30 per cent was provided, and in 1925 there were exported 262,536 machines, valued at $8,743,670. The imports were negligible. Why make this monopoly all the more secure in its graft? I can not answer it. It may be that the housewives in the millions of American homes, or that the hundreds of thousands of women who earn their living with these machines, can answer it.

ALUMINUM WARE

Just why it was necessary to give the American Aluminum Trust a tariff rate of 79 per cent ad valorem equivalent on table, household, kitchen, and hospital utensils made of aluminum is something no one has attempted to explain. It already had a monopoly on such production. Statistics show that there was exported $629,417 worth of this ware in 1925. So why was it necessary to give this 79 per cent rate to this monopoly or trust?

SHOTGUNS

The Sixty-seventh Congress did not even overlook the kid's shotgun. Under the old law there was a straight ad valorem tax of 35 per cent, regardless of the price of the gun. Under the present law there is a straight ad valorem tax of 45 per cent, regardless of the price of the gun, and in addition a specific tax varying as to the price of the gun. For instance, under the old law, a shotgun valued at $10 would carry a tax of $3.50. Under the present law the same $10 shotgun carries a tax of $10.50, composed of $4.50 ad valorem tax and $6 specific tax.

Under the old law a $25 shotgun carried a tax of $8.75, while under the present law this same $25 shotgun carries a tax of $21.25, composed of $11.25 ad valorem and a specific tax of $10. Was that necessary to protect the manufacturers of shotguns? In 1925 we exported 55,461 shotguns, while there were imported into this country in 1924 just 5,810 shotguns of all kinds and, I understand, less in 1925.

I could mention many more just such items, but what is the use?

The question is, Whom does the present tariff law benefit? It does not benefit the business man nor the professional man, nor the laboring man, not even the laborer who produces the highly protected commodities listed in the law. It certainly does not benefit the farmer of my State. Even Senator CAPPER, who voted for the law, agrees to that. On November 29, 1925, he said:

Unless he (the farmer) is enabled to put his price up it will not be long before he will be demanding a reduction of the protective tariff, which keeps up the price of the manufactured articles he consumes. As a seller he—the farmer—must compete in world markets; as a buyer he must buy in a protected home market. As a seller he must take the world price; as a buyer he must pay the American protected price. It is absurd to assume that the farmer will long remain content at such a disadvantage. He demands readjustment.

Gentlemen, I know of but one class of American citizens that the present tariff law benefits, and that is certain special interests which succeeded in persuading the Sixty-Seventh Congress to pass the law. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6707) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment to the amendment of the Senate No. 7 to the bill (H. R. 9795) making appropriations for the Department of Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes.

BANKRUPTCY

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Rules Committee I call up House Resolution No. 219.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 219

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1039) to amend an act establishing a uniform system of bankruptcy, etc. When such bill is called up for consideration, the amendment proposed by the Committee on the Judiciary shall be read in lieu of the provisions of the Senate bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire any time on the rule?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not myself desire time, but perhaps my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] does.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I desire no time further than to say that unfortunately the gentleman from Tennessee was called out on other business when we had this matter under consideration before the Committee on Rules. As we understand it, this matter comes with the unanimous report from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; a unanimous report from the subcommittee and a unanimous report from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules. We have no request for time on this side.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, before the Clerk begins to read I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This is a House Calendar bill. The rule provides for the reading of the House substitute for the Senate bill. As I understand it, this is all one amendment. The question then would be upon the amendment unless there be amendments offered to the amendment. Is that correct?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands the situation.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from Michigan going to have it read before he discusses it?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the bill would better be read.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I know of no desire on the part of any one to offer amendments, but if there should be any offered, when will be the time to offer them?

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands the situation, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] is in control of the time, and he could yield or he could move the previous question.

Mr. MICHENER. And if I yielded for an amendment would I not yield the floor?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman yields for an amendment, he will lose the floor.

Mr. MICHENER. Then the parliamentary situation is this, that I am recognized for one hour and I may move the previous question at any time, but if I yield for an amendment I lose the floor, and the Member who is recognized to offer the amendment obtains the floor for one hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is correct.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course the gentleman from Michigan could yield time for debate without losing the floor.

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But if the gentleman yielded for an amendment he would lose the floor unless there was some agreement in advance otherwise.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Could not the gentleman from Michigan yield 10 minutes to some one and then could not the gentleman to whom he has yielded 10 minutes explain an amendment which he desires to offer and could it not be voted on later?

The SPEAKER. Any gentleman who obtains the floor by yielding from the gentleman from Michigan could offer an amendment for information.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Could he not take 10 minutes and make his explanation, and then say that he was going to offer his amendment at the proper time later on? Could not that amendment then be voted on without debate?

The SPEAKER. No; the amendment would not be before the House except for information. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That section 1 (a), subdivisions 6, 8, and 24 of an act entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States,' approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, be, and the same hereby are, amended as follows:

"(6) 'Corporations' shall mean all bodies having any of the powers and privileges of private corporations not possessed by individuals or partnerships and shall include limited or other partnership associations organized under laws making the capital subscribed alone responsible for the debts of the association, joint-stock companies, unincorporated companies and associations, and any business conducted by a trustee, or trustees, wherein beneficial interest or ownership is evidenced by certificate or other written instrument.

"(8) 'Courts of bankruptcy' shall include the district courts of the United States and of the Territories and possessions to which this act is or may hereafter be applicable, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and the United States Court of Alaska.

"(24) States shall include the Territories and possessions to which this act is, or may hereafter be, applicable, Alaska and the District of Columbia."

"Sec. 2. That the introductory provision preceding subdivision 1 of section 2 of said act, as so amended, be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"That the courts of bankruptcy as hereinbefore defined, namely, the district courts of the United States in the several States, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the district courts of the several Territories and possessions to which this act is, or may hereafter be, applicable, and the United States Court in the District of Alaska, are hereby made courts of bankruptcy, and are hereby invested, within their respective territorial limits as now established, or as they may be hereafter changed, with such jurisdiction at law and in equity as will enable them to exercise original jurisdiction in bankruptcy proceedings, in vacation in chambers, and during their respective terms, as they are now or may be hereafter held."

"Sec. 3. That section 3 (a) of said act, as so amended be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"(a) Acts of bankruptcy by a person shall consist of his having (1) conveyed, transferred, concealed, or removed, or permitted to be concealed or removed, any part of his property with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors, or any of them; or (2) transferred, while insolvent, any portion of his property to one or more of his creditors with intent to prefer such creditors over his other creditors; or (3) suffered or permitted, while insolvent, any creditor to obtain a preference through legal proceedings and not having at least five days before a sale or other disposition of any property affected by such preference vacated or discharged such preference; (4) suffered, or permitted, while insolvent, any creditor to obtain through legal proceedings any levy, attachment, judgment, or other lien, and not having vacated or discharged the same within 30 days from the date such levy, attachment, judgment, or other lien was obtained; or (5) made a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors; or, while insolvent, a receiver or a trustee has been appointed, or put in charge of his property; or (6) admitted in writing his inability to pay his debts and his willingness to be adjudged a bankrupt on that ground."

"Sec. 4. That section 7 (a), subdivision (8) of said act, as so amended, be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"(8) Prepare, make oath to, and file in court within 10 days after adjudication, if an involuntary bankrupt, and within 10 days after the filing of a petition, if a voluntary bankrupt (unless in either case further time is granted), a schedule of his property showing the amount and kind of property, the location thereof, its money value in detail, and a list of his creditors showing their residence, if known; if unknown, that fact to be stated, the amounts due each of them, the consideration thereof, the security held by them, if any, and a claim for such exemptions, as he may be entitled to, all in triplicate, one copy of each for the clerk, one for the referee, and one for the trustee."

"Sec. 5. That section 12 (a) of said act, as so amended, be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"(a) A bankrupt may offer, either before or after adjudication, terms of composition to his creditors, after, but not before, he has been examined in open court, or at a meeting of his creditors, and has filed in court the schedule of his property and the list of his creditors required to be filed by bankrupts. In compositions before adjudication the bankrupt shall file the required schedules, and thereupon the court shall call a meeting of creditors for the allowance of claims, examination of the bankrupt, and preservation or conduct of the estate, at which meeting the judge or referee shall preside; but action upon the petition for adjudication shall not be delayed, except that the court, for good cause shown, may in its discretion delay such action upon such terms and conditions for the protection of and indemnity against loss by the bankrupt estate as may be proper."

"Sec. 6. That section 14 (a) and (b) of said act, as so amended, be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"(a) Any person may, after the expiration of 1 month and within 12 months, subsequent to being adjudged a bankrupt, file an application for a discharge in the court of bankruptcy in which the proceedings are pending, if it shall be made to appear to the judge that the bankrupt was unavoidably prevented from filing it within such time, it may be filed within but not after the expiration of the next six months.

"(b) The judge shall hear the application for a discharge and such proofs and pleas as may be made in opposition thereto by the trustee or other parties in interest, at such time as will give the trustee or parties in interest a reasonable opportunity to be fully heard; and investigate the merits of the application and discharge the applicant, unless he has (1) committed an offense punishable by imprisonment as herein provided; or (2) destroyed, mutilated, falsified, concealed, or failed to keep books of account, or records, from which his financial condition and business transactions might be ascertained; unless the court deem such failure or acts to have been justified, under all the circumstances of the case; or (3) obtained money or property on credit, or obtained an extension or renewal of credit, by making or publishing, or causing to be made or published, in any manner whatsoever, a materially false statement in writing respecting his financial condition; or (4) at any time subsequent to the first day of the 12 months immediately preceding the filing of the petition, shall have transferred, removed, destroyed, or concealed or permitted to be removed, destroyed, or concealed any of his property, with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors; or (5) has been granted a discharge in bankruptcy within six years; or (6) in the course of proceedings in bankruptcy, refused to obey any lawful order of or to answer any material question approved by the court; or (7) has failed to explain satisfactorily any losses of assets or deficiency of assets to meet his liabilities: Provided, That if, upon the bearing of an objection to a discharge, the objector shall show to the satisfaction of the court that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the bankrupt has committed any of the acts which, under this paragraph (b), would prevent his discharge in bankruptcy, then the burden of proving that he has not committed any of such acts shall be upon the bankrupt: And provided further, That the trustee shall not interpose objections to a bankrupt's discharge until he shall be authorized so to do by the creditors at a meeting of creditors called for that purpose on the application of any creditor.

"SEC. 7. That section 21 of said act, as so amended, be, and the same hereby is, amended by adding after paragraph (g) thereof a new paragraph (h), to read as follows:

"(h) A communication by a creditor, receiver, or trustee of one, by, or against whom a bankruptcy petition is filed, or who has been adjudicated a bankrupt, to another creditor, uttered in good faith and with reasonable grounds for belief in its truth, concerning the conduct, acts, or property of such bankrupt, shall be privileged, and the creditor, receiver, or trustee so uttering the same shall not be held liable therefor."

"SEC. 8. That section 23 of said act, as so amended, be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"(a) The United States district courts shall have jurisdiction of all controversies at law and in equity, as distinguished from proceedings in bankruptcy, between trustees as such and adverse claimants concerning the property acquired or claimed by the trustees, in the same manner and to the same extent only as though bankruptcy proceedings had not been instituted and such controversies had been between the bankrupts and such adverse claimants.

"(b) Suits by the trustee shall only be brought or prosecuted in the courts where the bankrupt, whose estate is being administered by such trustee, might have brought or prosecuted them if proceedings in bankruptcy had not been instituted, unless by consent of the proposed defendant, except suits for the recovery of property under section 60, subdivision b; section 67, subdivision e; and section 70, subdivision e."

"SEC. 9. That section 24 (a) and (b) of said act, as so amended, be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows, and by adding at the end thereof a new subdivision (c), to read as follows:

"(a) The Supreme Court of the United States, the circuit courts of appeal of the United States, the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, and the supreme courts of the Territories, in vacation, in chambers, and during their respective terms, as now or as they may be hereafter held, are hereby invested with appellate jurisdiction of controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings from the courts of bankruptcy from which they have appellate jurisdiction in other cases.

"(b) The several circuit courts of appeal and the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction in equity, either interlocutory or final, to superintend and revise in matter of law (and in matter of law and fact the matters specified in sec. 25) the proceedings of the several inferior courts of bankruptcy within their jurisdiction. Such power shall be exercised by appeal and in the form and manner of an appeal.

"(c) All appeals under this section shall be taken within 30 days after the judgment or order or other matter complained of has been rendered or entered."

"SEC. 10. That section 25 (a) of said act, as so amended, be, and the same is, amended to read as follows:

"(a) That appeals, as in equity cases, may be taken in bankruptcy proceedings from the courts of bankruptcy to the circuit courts of appeal of the United States and the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia and to the supreme courts of the Territories in the following cases, to wit: (1) From a judgment adjudging or refusing to adjudge the defendant a bankrupt; (2) from a judgment granting or denying a discharge; and (3) from a judgment allowing or rejecting a debt or claim of $500 or over. Such appeal shall be taken within 30 days after the judgment appealed from has been rendered, and may be heard and determined by the appellate court in term or vacation, as the case may be."

"SEC. 11. That section 29 (a), (b), and (d) of said act, as so amended, be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows, and that section 29 be further amended by adding after paragraph (d) thereof a new paragraph (e) to read as follows:

"(a) A person shall be punished by imprisonment for a period of not to exceed five years upon conviction of the offense of having knowingly and fraudulently appropriated to his own use, embezzled, spent, or unlawfully transferred any property or secreted or destroyed any document belonging to a bankrupt estate which came into his charge as trustee, receiver, custodian, or other officer of the court.

"(b) A person shall be punished by imprisonment for a period of not to exceed five years upon conviction of the offense of having knowingly and fraudulently (1) concealed from the receiver, trustee, United States marshal, or other officer of the court, charged with the control or custody of property, or from creditors in composition cases, any property belonging to the estate of a bankrupt; or (2) made a false oath or account in, or in relation to any proceeding in bankruptcy; or (3) presented under oath any false claim for proof against the estate of a bankrupt, or used any such claim in composition, personally, or by agent, proxy, or attorney, or as agent, proxy, or attorney; or (4) received any material amount of property from a bankrupt after the filing of the petition with intent to defeat this act; or (5) received or attempted to obtain any money or property, remuneration, compensation, reward, advantage, or promise thereof from any person for acting or forbearing to act in bankruptcy proceedings; or (6) having been an officer or agent of any person or corporation, and in contemplation of the bankruptcy of such person or corporation, or with intent to defeat the operation of this act, concealed or transferred any of the property of the debtor; or (7) after the filing of the petition, or in contemplation of bankruptcy, concealed, destroyed, mutilated, or falsified any book, document, or record affecting or relating to the property or affairs of a bankrupt; or (8) after the filing of the petition, withheld from the receiver or trustee any book, document, or paper affecting or relating to the property or affairs of a bankrupt.

"(d) A person shall not be prosecuted for any offense arising under this act unless the indictment is found or the information is filed in court within three years after the commission of the offense.

"(e) (1) Whenever any referee, receiver, or trustee shall have grounds for believing that any offense under this act has been committed, or from facts or circumstances brought out in the course of administration or otherwise brought to his attention, that there is reasonable ground to believe that such an offense has been committed, or for special reason, an investigation should be had in connection therewith, it shall be the duty of such referee, receiver, or trustee to report such matter to the United States attorney for the district in which it is believed such an offense has been committed, including in such report a statement of all the facts and circumstances of the case within his knowledge, with the names of the witnesses, and a statement as to the offense or offenses believed to have been committed.

"(2) It shall be the duty of every United States attorney immediately to inquire into the fact so reported to him by any referee, receiver, or trustee, and the law applicable thereto, and if it appears probable that any offense under this act has been committed, in a proper case and without delay, to present the matter to the grand jury, unless upon inquiry and examination such district attorney decides that the ends of public justice do not require that the alleged offense should be investigated or prosecuted, in which case he shall report the facts to the Attorney General for his direction in the premises."

"SEC. 12. That section 38 (a), subdivision 5, of said act, as so amended be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"(5) During the examination of the bankrupt, or other proceedings, authorize the employment of stenographers for reporting and transcribing the proceedings at such reasonable expense to the estate as the court may fix."

"SEC. 13. That section 64, subdivisions (a) and (b), of said act, as so amended, be, and the same hereby are, amended to read as follows:

"(a) The court shall order the trustee to pay all taxes legally due and owing by the bankrupt to the United States, State, county, district, or municipality, except franchise or license fees or taxes of a corporation, owing to States in which such corporation is not doing business, in the order of priority as set forth in paragraph (b) hereof: Provided, That no order shall be made for the payment of a tax assessed against real estate of a bankrupt in excess of the value of the interest of the bankrupt estate therein as determined by the court. Upon filing the receipts of the proper public officers for such payments the trustee shall be credited with the amounts thereof, and in case any question arises as to the amount or legality of any such tax the same shall be heard and determined by the court.

"(b) The debts to have priority, in advance of the payment of dividends to creditors, and to be paid in full out of bankrupt estates, and the order of payment shall be (1) the actual and necessary cost of preserving the estate subsequent to filing the petition; (2) the filing fees paid by creditors in involuntary cases, and, where property of the bankrupt, transferred or concealed by him either before or after the filing of the petition, shall have been recovered for the benefit of the estate of the bankrupt by the efforts and at the expense of one or more creditors, the reasonable expense of such recovery; (3) the cost of administration, including the fees and mileage payable to witnesses as now or hereafter provided by the laws of the United States, and one reasonable attorney's fee, for the professional services actually rendered, irrespective of the number of attorneys employed, to the petitioning creditors in involuntary cases while performing the duties herein prescribed, and to the bankrupt in voluntary and involuntary cases, as the court may allow; (4) where the confirmation of composition terms has been refused or set aside upon the objection and through the efforts and at the expense of one or more creditors, in the discretion of the court, the reasonable expenses of such creditors in opposing such composition; (5) wages due to workmen, clerks, traveling or city salesmen, or servants, which have been earned within three months before the date of the commencement of the proceeding, not to exceed $600 to each claimant; (6) taxes payable under paragraph (a) hereof and (7) debts owing to any person who by the laws of the States or the United States is entitled to priority: Provided, That the term "person" as used in this section shall include corporations, the United States and the several States and Territories of the United States: Provided, however, That priorities granted by any State law to its residents and to domestic corporations over nonresidents and foreign corporations shall not be recognized or allowed."

"Sec. 14. That section 70, subdivision (a) 2, and (b) of said act as so amended, be, and the same hereby are, amended to read as follows: "(2) Interests in patents, patent rights, copyrights, and trade-marks, and in applications for patents, copyrights, and trade-marks: Provided, That in case the trustee, within 30 days after appointment, does not notify the applicant for a patent, copyright, or trade-mark of his election to prosecute the application to allowance or rejection, the bankrupt may apply to the court for an order revesting him with the title thereto, which petition shall be granted, unless, for cause shown by the trustee, the court grants further time to the trustee for making such election; and such applicant may, in any event, at any time petition the court to be revested with such title in case the trustee shall fail to prosecute such application with reasonable diligence; and the court, upon revesting the bankrupt with such title, shall direct the trustee to execute proper instruments of transfer to make the same effective in law and upon the records.

"(b) All real and personal property belonging to a bankrupt estate shall be appraised by not more than three disinterested appraisers who shall be appointed by and report to the court. Real and personal property shall when practicable be sold subject to the approval of the court; it shall not be sold otherwise than subject to the approval of the court for less than 75 per cent of the appraised value."

"Sec. 15. Nothing herein contained shall have the effect to release or extinguish any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under any act or acts of which this act is amendatory.

"Sec. 16. The provisions of this amendatory act shall govern proceedings, so far as practicable and applicable, in bankruptcy cases pending when it takes effect; but as to proceedings in cases pending when this act takes effect, to which the provisions of this amendatory act are not applicable, such proceedings shall be disposed of conformably to the provisions of said act approved July 1, 1898, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

"Sec. 17. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with any provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

"Sec. 18. This act shall take effect and be in force on and after three months from the date of its approval."

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, the bill (H. R. 8119) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, was favorably reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. The bill (S. 1039) introduced by Senator WALKER has passed the Senate. These bills in substance cover the same subject matter. The Senate bill (S. 1039) was referred by the Speaker to the Committee on the Judiciary and was reported back to the House with an amendment, that amendment being to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the House bill H. R. 8119, so that we are to-day considering the Senate bill 1039, which, as amended, is House bill 8119.

The present bankruptcy law was enacted in 1898, and since that time there have been but few minor changes in the law. On the whole the law has worked well and has proved the wisdom of its enactment. Credit is such an important part in the commercial and industrial business of the country that a national insolvency law is a necessity.

During the last five years it has been realized by those familiar with the situation that certain amendments should be made to the law, and accordingly several bills have been introduced into the Congress looking toward these changes. In 1924 a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary was appointed to conduct hearings and to consider these proposed amendments. Numerous hearings were held and much publicity was given to the fact that hearings were to be held. The first hearings were held in January, 1925, and the last hearings in January, 1926, and as a result of these hearings the bill H. R. 8119 was introduced. This bill has the active support of the American Bar Association, the National Association of Credit Men, the Commercial Law League of America, and many other organizations. These organizations appeared before the committee in behalf of the bill and no one has appeared in opposition to the bill. The Merchants' Association of New York City and some other organizations advocated further changes in the law. That is, they favor the bill H. R. 8119, but would make additional changes, the principal one of which would be the establishing of a system of official receivers, accountants, and so forth. After most careful consideration the committee concluded that the changes provided in this bill should be made and that we should not go further at this time.

Inasmuch as we have no knowledge of anyone opposing this measure, and inasmuch as the report accompanying the bill and which has been available to all Members for some time, discusses in detail every proposed change, it will not be necessary to prolong this debate.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman has absolute control of this time.

Mr. MICHENER. I yield for a question in reference to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman said that there was not any need of debate.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman wants some time, I shall be very glad to yield him time.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman has promised to yield me 10 minutes, but I call his attention to this: The gentleman is not even going to permit an amendment to the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield further at this time.

Mr. BLANTON. Would not the gentleman answer a civil question? Why does not the gentleman let us amend the bill?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I refuse to yield further.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman will yield for a question about the bill, will he not?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. In reading section 3, I see it is provided that if judgment is secured against a person, after 30 days he may be declared a bankrupt. Under the old law it was four months. Is not that a little hard?

Mr. MICHENER. No; I will explain that as I come to it. The gentleman has a wrong understanding. The bill does not so provide. The four-month period is not eliminated.

Mr. HUDSPETH. As I read it I get that idea.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman has not read it in connection with other provisions of the law. In 1925 the Federal Judicial Council recommended some changes in bankruptcy general orders, and these changes were made by the Supreme Court, and the efficacy of the amendments embodied in this proposed bill is to be considered in connection with these new general orders. The bankruptcy law is technical in the extreme, and practically every section and every subdivision thereof is dependent upon some other section, and its real effect can only be appreciated when one has a thorough knowledge of the law, the general orders, and the judicial construction given by the courts.

These amendments have been well considered and have been passed upon by those in the legal world most able to speak, and there seems to be a unanimity of opinion that these changes should be made. The primary purpose of the bankruptcy law is the relief of the honest debtor, and coupled with this is the idea of equality among creditors in the division of the bankrupt's assets. In short, it is contended that the bankrupt having more liabilities than assets should account for his assets and permit the creditors, under the law and guidance of the court, to wind up the estate, saving to the creditors at all times as much as possible of the assets, to the end that the bankrupt might be permitted to start anew in commercial life and that the creditors might suffer a minimum loss by reason of the debtor's failure. Experience has shown that there are certain loopholes in the law whereby it is possible for dishonest bankrupts and unscrupulous bankruptcy attorneys to work serious fraud upon the creditors, and one of the main functions of H. R. 8119 is to remedy this condition.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I would rather not now.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. For this question: Is it the purpose of the gentleman to yield later on in answer to questions as to different parts of the bill?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will withhold my question.

Mr. MICHENER. The law performs its function so far as relates to the purpose to relieve an honest debtor from his misfortune. The failure, if such, of the bankruptcy law, and the malfeasances for its administration, have reference solely to its second purpose or function, that of securing to creditors at the least possible expense the equal distribution of the property of the debtor to his creditors.

It is needless to say that the most complaint comes from the larger cities, and it is the opinion of the committee that more rigid enforcement of the law by the courts in which it is administered will be most wholesome.

The evils of so-called "bankruptcy rings" can best be remedied by the courts administering the bankruptcy law. Statutory enactment is of no force or effect unless the requirements of the law are insisted upon by the judge before whom the litigants appear.

These proposed amendments are not in the way of innovations; they are simply declaratory of and for the strengthening of the present law, and are directed to helping creditors help themselves to administer that law. No honest debtor can in any way be injured by the proposed amendments, and no creditor will suffer by these changes.

The principal changes are:

(1) The meaning of the term "corporations" is broadened so as to include common-law trusts, and so forth.

Under the law to-day common-law trusts, or what are sometimes called Massachusetts trusts, are not subject to the bankruptcy law, and this amendment cures this defect in the law.

(2) Two new acts of bankruptcy are created, one act being subsection 4 of section 3 (a), which provides:

Suffered or permitted, while insolvent, any creditor to obtain through legal proceedings any levy, attachment, judgment, or other lien, and not having vacated or discharged the same within 30 days from the date such levy, attachment, judgment, or other lien was obtained.

Under existing law a creditor may obtain judgment against a debtor and hold that judgment for four months and one day, and it becomes a lien entitled to priority under the laws of the State if the debtor subsequently goes into bankruptcy; that is, the lien has been permitted to ripen into a preference, giving the creditor advantage over other creditors and defeating one of the fundamental principles of equality among creditors.

It will be observed that the debtor must be insolvent, the idea being that the insolvent estate during the term of four months shall be protected against seizures as well as against preferential payments out of the estate. Mr. Montgomery, an attorney for the National Credit Men's Association, and who is an authority on the bankruptcy law, said at the hearings:

The necessity for that proposition is to be found in a case decided by the United States Supreme Court, Citizens Baking Co. v. Havenna National Bank (234 U. S. 360), which holds that where a lien is obtained upon the property of one who subsequently becomes a bankrupt, but there is no sale or final disposition of the property within five days before the expiration of the four months, preference can be set aside and there is no act of bankruptcy; as, for example, if an attachment in an action is levied upon the property of a debtor and a suit is brought at the same time that the attachment is levied, that suit may be defended and final judgment in the action may not be obtained until more than four months after the attachment were levied; let us assume that none of the other acts of bankruptcy mentioned in section 3a has been committed. That lien remains upon the bankrupt's property for a period of more than four months, pending the final outcome of the litigation, and there is no sale or final disposition within four months from the obtaining of the levy. The opinions hold that no act of bankruptcy is committed, because there is no sale or final disposition until subsequent to the four months. At that time the act of bankruptcy takes effect, but the lien is perfected and has been on the property for more than four months, and is entitled to preference under the bankruptcy act.

In some States, like Massachusetts, an attachment issues at the beginning of suit and without the foundation being laid for attachment as is required in most of the States. This attachment is levied on the debtor's property and remains a lien through the entire proceeding, and it is to reach cases of this kind that this amendment is suggested.

I might say this in further explanation. In some States of the Union like Massachusetts they start a suit by attachment. The attachment issues and summons, and it is levied on the man's property and it remains a lien there until final disposition of the property. Now it is for the purpose of taking care of this kind of cases that this amendment is offered, and I think, I will say to the gentleman from Texas, it will not make much difference in the operation of the law in his State.

Mr. HUDSPETH. We do not start any suit in Texas by the issuance of an attachment unless it is shown the property is to be removed from the State or there is some statutory ground.

Mr. MICHENER. That is exactly as in my State.

Mr. HUDSPETH. They have to show that.

Mr. CARSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I will.

Mr. CARSS. How does this amendment affect the amount of exemption in this bankrupt proceeding as compared with the old law?

Mr. MICHENER. These amendments do not effect exemptions. I think the gentleman means to ask how this affects the wages of wage earners. Under the present bankruptcy law there is an amount of $300 for wages earned within three months immediately preceding the bankruptcy proceedings allowed as a priority claim. In the amendment suggested the amount is raised to $600. I might say to the gentleman the American Federation of Labor appeared before the committee and asked that the limit on the amount be removed entirely and that the time limit be removed. In other words, that all wages earned in all time have priority over other claims. The committee thought that was inadvisable because it would open the gates to fraud, the very thing that we are trying here to close, but we did not feel that if $300 in 1898 was the proper amount of wages earned within three months then in 1926, with changed conditions, that $600 was a fair and equitable amount.

Mr. CARSS. I thank the gentleman for the information.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. On page 15, section 8, subdivision (b) relates to suits by trustees. As I understand the law at the present time, the trustee or receiver in bankruptcy has to sue in the State court for the possession of property due the bankrupt estate as though no bankruptcy proceedings had been filed, but I notice in section (b) here the bill provides that suits shall so be brought.

Except suits for the recovery of property under section 60, subdivision (b); section 67, subdivision (c); and section 70, subdivision (e).

What are those exceptions?

Mr. MICHENER. I can answer the gentleman's question quickly. Section 8, subdivision (b) is copied from the old law. That is the law to-day.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Why does the gentleman want to reenact something that is in that form and thus confuse Members?

Mr. MICHENER. I will say to the gentleman that it was through an inadvertence on my part that that was left in the bill. It is in the law to-day. This bill was prepared by the American Bar Association and other organizations and revised on several occasions, but there is no change in (b).

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. What the gentleman says about this bill being prepared by the American Bar Association and being supported, all the commercial lawyers being for it, and the wholesalers and collecting agencies, is interesting. I suppose the bankrupts themselves had very little representation before the committee.

As to section 11, why the necessity of creating a whole flock of new crimes and new criminal offenses? I, for one, have always been afraid of statutes for imprisoning people for debt. The bankrupt court is a close approach to that ancient and dishonorable statute by which people were thrown into prison for debt. I do not want to create new crimes and misdemeanors just because some collecting agency can not find some property to seize.

Mr. MICHENER. I appreciate the gentleman's suggestion, but it was thought advisable to make no changes. The language of the bill speaks for itself. The committee felt that only those changes should be included. This is in section which?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Section 11. Were any facts presented to the committee showing any necessity for these new offenses? I think the present law is pretty strong. They seem to be able to collect everything that a fellow has got.

Mr. MICHENER. Has the gentleman read the report?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes; I have read the report. But I understand the report contains nothing but a copy of the substitute. It does not explain anything.

Mr. MICHENER. It explains every change in every section in detail. On page 17 of the bill, section 11A, the only change there is the addition of the words "receiver, custodian, or other officer." In other words, it is now an offense to conceal property from the trustee. We felt that if that were true, then it should be an offense to conceal that same property from the receiver, custodian, or other officer of the court. If the gentleman will familiarize himself with the law, he will find that we have added but these words. The only change in section B is this: We did increase the penalty from two years to five years. The law says a person shall be punished by imprisonment for not exceeding two years upon conviction of the offense of knowingly and fraudulently concealing from the trustee or receiver any property. We have increased that to five years. We also added the words "United States marshals or other officer of the court charged with the control or custody of property or from creditors in composition cases." If there was any reason why we should punish the man who concealed from the trustee, then there was reason why we should punish the man who concealed from the custodian or marshal or other officer of the court having like duties to perform at certain stages of the proceeding.

Mr. BOWLING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. BOWLING. As to subdivision (a) under section 11, if I understand the force and meaning of that language, it all being one sentence, it is effective only on the trustee, receiver, custodian, or other officer. Is that the correct understanding?

Mr. MICHENER. There is no change in the law whatever only as above indicated.

Mr. BOWLING. That language is modified later on in the sentence, where he is described as a trustee.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I will yield for a short question.

Mr. BLANTON. After a discharge in bankruptcy has been granted, what does the gentleman think of the limitation of the time within which the same person can get another discharge from bankruptcy?

Mr. MICHENER. Under the law now a man going into involuntary bankruptcy can get a discharge as often as he likes so far as the time limit in the law is concerned. One going into voluntary bankruptcy can get a discharge once in six years.

Mr. BLANTON. Why do not you make it 20 years?

Mr. MICHENER. Because we made it six.

Mr. BLANTON. You will not permit an amendment to change it, will you?

Mr. MICHENER. No.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. It was stated that the Senate bill was offered by Senator WALSH. I want to ask the gentleman whether the House amendment, which supersedes the Senate bill, differs materially and in substance from the Senate bill?

Mr. MICHENER. It does not. It includes a few things not in the Senate bill, most of which are corrections to make the law conform to modern conditions, so far as the courts are concerned. For instance, we eliminate the Indian Territory and provide for an appeal in the District of Columbia from the Supreme Court to the Court of Appeals of the District.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. So that we can safely say that the Walsh bill and this bill have the approval of the American Bar Association?

Mr. MICHENER. I do not think there is any question about that. However, this bill is a later bill. The Walsh bill was introduced at the last session and had the approval of the bar association at that time. After further consideration additional changes were made. Senator WALSH at the beginning of the session introduced the old bill again.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. So far as these prosecutions are concerned of which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] spoke, the limitations are not changed, are they, as to the time in which prosecutions are to be instituted?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes. There is a provision in the bill providing that the limitation be increased from one year to three years. Under the present law persons subject to the terms of the bankruptcy law may be prosecuted within one year. We increased that to three years at the suggestion of the Attorney General's department.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Do you take care of the amendment recommended by the Retail Merchants' Association?

Mr. MICHENER. I do not know what that amendment is.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I have had a number of letters from the Retail Merchants' Association in my district referring to an amendment in the bill in which they are interested.

Mr. MICHENER. I assume the gentleman refers to an amendment providing that no one shall be entitled to the benefits of the bankruptcy law unless he owes debts to the amount of $500 or more?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I think that is the amendment.

Mr. MICHENER. If that is the amendment to which the gentleman refers, I will say that the committee did not adopt that amendment and for this reason: The bankruptcy law is intended for the protection of the honest bankrupt, primarily. It was our notion that a man with debts amounting to $499 is just as much entitled to the protection of this law—if there be a protection—as the man who owes debts of $550. You can not arbitrarily set any particular amount unless you are going to do injury to the small man. I will say that there are many people in the country who have taken advantage of the bankruptcy law under that amount and they ordinarily come from the rural districts.

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. Following out that statement, if a man has debts amounting to $500, or even $1,000, why should he be given the aid of the bankruptcy law? If he owes $500, surely in the course of his lifetime he can pay that $500 or even $1,000. I believe it ought to be limited to $1,000; that no one could take advantage of the bankruptcy law whose debts amounted to less than $1,000, because that frees him from that indebtedness, and we know he has many years in which to retrieve his fortunes and pay the indebtedness.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. In other words, the gentleman thinks if a man owes $1,000,000 he should get free of that?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Whereas if he owes only $500 the gentleman would make him pay every nickel and not let him go into bankruptcy?

Mr. STEPHENS. No. The idea of bankruptcy is that a man who might owe $1,000,000 in business affairs has no prospect of ever retrieving his fortune and being able to pay the $1,000,000; but my idea is that anyone who owes $500 will have an opportunity to pay it some time in the next several years, and we should not relieve him of that debt.

Mr. WEFALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. WEFALD. Are we to understand that this bill will deal just as fairly with the little fellow as with the big one?

Mr. MICHENER. Absolutely.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. My experience in representing creditors in bankruptcy courts has been that the chief objection to the bankruptcy law has been that the cost of administration of estates in bankruptcy courts has been so high that the creditors have received very little, and as a rule they try to keep out of the bankruptcy courts. Is there any change made in the law to reduce the cost of administration?

Mr. MICHENER. Not directly but indirectly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. In what way?

Mr. MICHENER. I do not want to take the time to explain that to the gentleman. The gentleman can find that in the report.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I have read the report, but I can not find anything which explains that.

Mr. MICHENER. If it is not in the report, then there is nothing in the bill about it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I would like to ask why that was not considered? I am sure that one of the greatest criticisms of the bankruptcy law is that the cost of administration, the referees' fees and the trustees' fees and commissions, eat up the estate and there is nothing left. Has the gentleman heard that complaint?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes. We had long hearings on the question of official receivers. The only method advocated by anyone along that line is the official receivership proposition, which would come in and take over, on the part of the Government, the operation, the conduct, and the carrying on of all these estates. That would create innumerable Government officials and they would receive a salary; their fees would go into the Treasury of the United States, and it was suggested that these fees would take care of the actual cost. However, the committee did not feel that way about it. I do not think that is feasible, and at this time we are not in any way dealing with the fee system, but that may come up later.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I think that is one thing in the law that ought to be given attention, because the referees in bankruptcy have grown rich at the expense of the creditors, and, as I understand, the organization of these referees is very strong and very powerful.

Mr. MICHENER. No referees appeared before the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I am sure they would have more sense than to do that directly.

Mr. MICHENER. I hope the gentleman will not take any more time. We are discussing these proposed amendments, and not amendments not included in the bill.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. I want to ask the gentleman if any effort was made to prepare and submit any amendment in this bill which would relieve many of these bankrupt estates from being dissipated, which, I think, is one of the matters that was recently before this House in connection with some proceedings recently had here.

Mr. MICHENER. I will say to the gentleman that it is the opinion of the committee that the matters to which he refers can best be handled by the courts themselves. The bankruptcy law is sound in principle, and the bankruptcy law is well drawn, but in its administration there are conditions existing which should be remedied. These are largely in the large cities, and, in my judgment, they are due largely to the fact that the court does not exercise the supervision which it should exercise over the administration of bankrupt estates. If the court insisted upon the law being carried out as it is and as amended here, I think the gentleman would have no cause for complaint.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The statute of limitations applies generally in the Federal courts to two years after the offense is committed. I want to ask why you extend that time to three years and permit some sleuths and some secret-service men—and they are always snooping around to find something on somebody—to have a longer time? Why do you extend it to three years?

Mr. MICHENER. For the reason that in some of the larger cities, like New York City, the bankruptcy cases go into the millions and it is very easy for a man to leave the jurisdiction or to leave New York; he can remain away for one year and then return and go unpunished.

Mr. HUDSPETH. What demand was there for this amendment? Did it come from the big cities and did the Attorney General recommend it?

Mr. MICHENER. The Attorney General recommended it; yes. My time has about expired, and I have promised to yield some time. Under permission to extend I will give a detailed statement of these amendments and the reasons therefor.

SECTION 1 OF THE BILL, BEING SECTION 1 OF THE LAW: "MEANING OF WORDS AND PHRASES"

To the definition given in present law of the word "corporations" has been added the following words: "joint-stock companies, unincorporated companies and associations, and any business conducted by a trustee or trustees, wherein beneficial interest or ownership is evidenced by a certificate or other written instrument."

The object of this amendment is to include within the scope of the operation of the bankruptcy law, beyond any doubt, those businesses conducted under the guise of so-called trusts.

Clause 8, defining "courts of bankruptcy," has been made to conform with present-day conditions by striking out reference to the "United States Court of the Indian Territory."

Clause 24 has also been modernized by striking out the words "the Indian Territory."

SECTION 2 OF THE BILL, BEING SECTION 2 OF THE LAW: "CREATION OF COURTS OF BANKRUPTCY AND THEIR JURISDICTION"

The comments with respect to clauses 8 and 24 of section 1 above are in point here.

SECTION 3 OF THE BILL, BEING SECTION 3 (A) OF THE LAW: "ACTS OF BANKRUPTCY"

There are three amendments to this section. The first is to be found in 3 (a) where the word "final," preceding the words "disposition of any property," has been changed to read "other."

The purpose of this amendment is to prevent frequent evasions of the bankruptcy act now occurring, due largely to inability to prove that a sale which has occurred within four months prior to the bankruptcy was a final disposition; some of the courts holding that until a hearing has been had on the merits there has been no final disposition of the defendant's property. In the meantime and upon the lapse of four months the bankrupt creditor has gained a preference by legal proceeding, thereby defeating the spirit of the law.

The second amendment to section 3 (a) is the insertion of a new act of bankruptcy which is designated "(4)" and reads as follows: "suffered or permitted, while insolvent, any creditor to obtain through legal proceeding any levy, attachment, judgment, or other lien, and not having vacated or discharged the same within 30 days from the date such levy, attachment, judgment, or other lien was obtained."

Under existing law a creditor may obtain judgment against a debtor and hold that judgment for four months and one day, and it becomes a lien entitled to priority of payment under the laws of the State if the debtor subsequently goes into bankruptcy; that is, the lien has been permitted to ripen into a preference, giving the creditor advantage over other creditors and defeating one of the fundamental principles of equality among creditors.

It will be observed that the debtor must be insolvent, the idea being that the insolvent estate during the term of four months shall be protected against seizures as well as against preferential payments out of the estate. As suggested by Mr. Remington at the hearing, this section has no reference to liens by right, no reference to foreclosure of mechanics' liens, or mortgage liens.

The third amendment in this section occurs in "(4)" of 3 (a) of the present law. Said "(4)" being "(5)" of the bill and as amended reads: "made a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors; or, whole insolvent, a receiver or a trustee has been appointed or put in charge of his property."

Under judicial interpretation the existing provision of the law has been held to mean that insolvency must actually be alleged in a petition for the appointment of a receiver, and a receiver must have been appointed because of insolvency in order to become an act of bankruptcy. Under the amendment the appointment of a receiver for a debtor who is in fact insolvent is in itself an act of bankruptcy, even though such insolvency was not directly alleged in the petition asking for the receiver.

SECTION 4 OF THE BILL, BEING SECTION 7 (A) OF THE LAW: "DUTIES OF BANKRUPTS"

All the language of subdivision (8) of section 7 (a) is stricken out and new language inserted.

The purpose of this amendment is to place the voluntary bankrupt on a parity with the involuntary bankrupt in respect to the filing of schedules and serves to eliminate the excuse for collusive petitions. Under existing law schedules must be filed within 10 days in involuntary cases and with the petition in voluntary cases. The adoption of this amendment will do away with many so-called "voluntary involuntary" bankruptcy proceedings.

SECTION 5 OF THE BILL, BEING SECTION 12 (A) OF THE LAW: "COMPOSITIONS, WHEN CONFIRMED"

This amendment strikes out the words "and action upon the petition for adjudication shall be delayed until it shall be determined whether such composition shall be confirmed," appearing at the end of section 12 (a), and inserts in lieu thereof the following: "but action upon the petition for adjudication shall not be delayed, except that the court, for good cause shown, may in its discretion delay such action upon such terms and conditions for the protection of and indemnity against loss by the bankrupt estate as may be proper."

Experience has shown that many composition offers are submitted which are never intended to be carried through, and it is customary and proper for the preservation of the good will of the bankrupt's business to continue its operation pending the consideration of his composition terms, and as these businesses are frequently conducted at a loss, therefore after the composition terms are withdrawn it is found that the bankrupt estate has suffered accordingly.

This amendment will prevent a debtor in bankruptcy making an offer of composition which ipso facto stays further proceedings and very often to the detriment of the creditors.

SECTION 6 OF THE BILL, BEING SECTION 14 (A) AND (B) OF THE LAW: "DISCHARGES, WHEN GRANTED"

In paragraph (a) of the present law the words "the next" are stricken out for the reason that these words have produced ambiguity, doubt existing as to whether a bankrupt has 12 or 13 months from the date of his adjudication in which to apply for his discharge. The amendment corrects this ambiguity, and is in accordance with the original intent of Congress, as indicated by the vast majority of courts passing upon the question.

In 14 (b) the first amendment occurs in subdivision (2). The principal change comes by striking out the words "with intent," so that the destruction, mutilation, falsification, concealment, or failure to keep books shall be ground for denying the discharge unless the court deems such failure or acts to have been justified.

Mr. Brandenburg, the authority on bankruptcy, said at the hearings: "Those of us who have made a study of the law have realized that under the statute as it originally existed all persons should keep books of account. Now, we know that the farmer does not keep books of account; we know that the ordinary householder does not keep books of account. This amendment permits the court to excuse the obligation of not keeping books of account, and we think that this is important."

In 14 (b) the second amendment comes in subdivision (3) of the present law, which reads as follows: "obtained money or property on credit upon a materially false statement in writing made by him to any person or his representative for the purpose of obtaining credit from such person."

This subdivision has been stricken out and there has been inserted in its stead the following: "obtained money or property on credit, or obtained an extension or renewal of credit, by making or publishing, or causing to be made or published, in any manner whatsoever, a materially false statement in writing respecting his financial condition."

The commerce of to-day is transacted almost entirely upon credit. Under the present law a false financial statement to be grounds for denying a discharge must be given directly to the complaining creditor or his representative. The amendatory provision serves to prevent those evasions of the law which now occur by having the false statements made to and distributed by commercial agencies.

In 14 (b) the third amendment comes in 14 (b) (4), the material change being that the words "four months" have been stricken out and the words "twelve months" inserted in lieu thereof.

The purpose of this amendment is to permit fraudulent transfers occurring at any time within 12 months preceding the filing of the bankruptcy petition to be grounds for denial of a discharge.

In short, the amendment requires the bankrupt to be honest for a period of 12 months preceding his bankruptcy instead of 4 months, as now provided, if he is to receive the benefits of the bankruptcy law.

In 14 (b) subdivision (5) it is provided that no bankrupt, voluntary or involuntary, can receive a discharge oftener than every six years. This is the law to-day so far as voluntary bankrupts are concerned. In actual practice the hearings developed that there are those who seek discharges in bankruptcy oftener than once every six years, and the practice has been to have some friendly creditors file involuntary petitions and in this way evade the law.

In 14 (b) subdivision (7) is found an entirely new subdivision.

By the provision of this amendment the burden of proof is shifted from the creditor to the bankrupt to explain any losses of assets or deficiency of assets, which should be present to meet liabilities, and in case an objector to a discharge shows to the satisfaction of the court that there is reasonable ground for believing that the bankrupt should be denied a discharge in accordance with section 14 (b), then the burden is placed upon the bankrupt to show that he is entitled to his discharge, the contention of the objector to the contrary notwithstanding.

SECTION 7 OF THE BILL, BEING SECTION 21 OF THE LAW: "EVIDENCE"

The amendment to this section consists in adding a subdivision to be known as ("h").

It is intended by this amendment that a creditor may write to another creditor or to the trustee or to the receiver, concerning the bankrupt acts or property of the bankrupt, and that the creditor shall not be held liable to any person for such communication, provided the same was uttered in good faith and with reasonable ground for belief in its truth. It developed before the committee that investigations of bankrupts, etc., are now conducted largely by creditors' committees and it was thought advisable to permit these creditors to communicate freely with each other in reference to the bankrupt's conduct in connection with his estate.

SECTION 8 OF THE BILL, BEING SECTION 23 OF THE LAW: "JURISDICTION OF UNITED STATES AND STATE COURTS"

The principal amendments in section 8 of the amendatory bill to section 23 of the existing law are these:

In line 3 the words "The United States district courts" have been substituted for "United States circuit courts," and section 23 of the existing law, relating to jurisdiction of the United States circuit courts, has been entirely eliminated. It is quite obvious that the United States circuit courts have been abolished.

SECTION 9 OF THE BILL, BEING SECTION 24 (A) AND (B) OF THE LAW: "JURISDICTION OF APPELLATE COURTS"

The amendments to this section are threefold: First, to comply with recent congressional legislation provision has been made for appeals in the District of Columbia to the Court of Appeals of the District; this change has been made in both subdivisions (a) and (b) of section 24. Second, the amendment to 24 (b) has for its object the elimination, so far as possible, of the fine distinction between appeals and reviews, as the judiciary repeatedly suggested should be done. It is proposed to amend the law by having reviews take the form of appeals, without, however, carrying up to the appellate court matters of fact as well as matters of law. Third, subdivision (c) is new and is as follows:

"(c) All appeals under this section shall be taken within 30 days after the judgment or order or other matter complained of has been rendered or entered."

The purpose of this amendment is to render uniform the time within which appeals and reviews may be taken. At the present time certain appeals are to be taken within 30 days and other appeals and reviews are to be taken within periods ranging from 30 days to 6 months.

SECTION 10 OF THE BILL, BEING SECTION 25 (A) OF THE LAW: "APPEALS AND WRITS OF ERROR"

The amendatory matter contemplates two changes in the existing section. First, the insertion of "the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia"; and the other, striking out the period of 10 days within which an appeal might be taken and inserting in lieu thereof "30 days."

The reasoning applied to the amendments under the previous section is here in point.

SECTION 11 OF THE BILL, BEING SECTION 29 (A), (B), AND (D) OF THE LAW: "OFFENSES"

The first change is in section 29 (a) where at the end of the section the words "receiver, custodian, or other officer of the court" have been added, so that it shall be a crime to conceal from receivers, custodians, or other officers of the court, as well as from the trustee.

The first change in section 29 (b) is the substitution of the term of "five years" for two years, so that "a person shall be punished by imprisonment for a period not to exceed five years, upon conviction of the offense of having knowingly and fraudulently," etc.

As many of these commercial frauds are of large proportion, the maximum punishment now provided is thought to be inadequate.

The next change is in section 29 (b) (1). This amendment is recommended by the Attorney General, who in his annual report said:

"It shall be made an offense to conceal assets, not only from the trustee, as now provided by section 20 (b) (1) of the bankruptcy act, but also from creditors in composition cases, and from any officer of the court charged with the control or custody of property, including, for example, receivers in certain cases, trustees, and United States marshals."

The next change occurs in section 29 (b) (5), which now reads as follows:

"(5) Extorted or attempted to extort any money or property from any person as a consideration for acting or forbearing to act in bankruptcy proceedings."

As amended this subdivision would read:

"(5) Received or attempted to obtain any money or property, remuneration, compensation, reward, advantage, or promise thereof, from any person for acting or forbearing to act in bankruptcy proceedings."

This amendment was prompted by the fact that the courts have given the most rigid interpretation to the word "extort," whereas it was doubtless the intent of Congress that one should render himself criminally liable if he knowingly and fraudulently received or attempted to obtain any money or property for acting or forbearing to act in bankruptcy proceedings.

To section 29 (b) has been added subdivisions (6), (7), and (8), as follows:

"(6) Having been an officer or agent of any person or corporation, and in contemplation of the bankruptcy of such person or corporation, or with intent to defeat the operation of this act, concealed or transferred any of the property of the debtor; or (7) after the filing of the petition or in contemplation of bankruptcy concealed, destroyed, mutilated, or falsified any book, document, or record affecting or relating to the property or affairs of a bankrupt; or (8) after the filing of the petition withheld from the receiver or trustee any book, document, or paper affecting or relating to the property or affairs of a bankrupt."

The purpose of (6) is to reach behind a corporate entity in order to get at the one directly responsible for the wrongdoing. Subdivision (7) is also intended to reach those acts committed in contemplation of bankruptcy; and subdivision (8) is a necessary complement to other provisions of the bankruptcy law.

In section 29 (d) the time within which a bankrupt may be prosecuted criminally has been changed from one year to three years. This amendment has been proposed at various times by many Attorneys General of the United States and conforms with the Federal penal statutes.

Section 29 (e) is new matter and the text of the amendment was prepared by the Attorney General. The Attorney General did not suggest the amendment but did perfect the text. The amendment is designed to secure the aid and cooperation of the United States district attorney in bringing to speedy justice offenders against the bankruptcy law.

SECTION 12 OF THE BILL, BEING SECTION 38 (A) (5) OF THE LAW: "JURISDICTION OF REFEREES"

This section has to do with the employment of stenographers in bankruptcy matters.

The rate allowed by the law to be paid to stenographers is not to exceed 10 cents per folio for reporting and transcribing the proceedings. The amendment would permit the payment to stenographers such reasonable compensation as the court might fix. It is impossible in the larger centers at this time to secure stenographers at the rate now provided in the bankruptcy law.

SECTION 13 OF THE BILL, BEING SECTION 64 (A) AND (B) OF THE LAW: "DEBTS WHICH HAVE PRIORITY"

The amendatory matter in this section is a revision of the provisions of (a) and (b) of the present act. The principal changes are:

"(a) That no order shall be made for the payment of a tax assessed against real estate of a bankrupt in excess of the value of the interest of the bankrupt estate therein as determined by the court."

And the insertion of a new priority debt as follows:

"(b) (4) Where the confirmation of composition terms has been refused or set aside upon the objection and through the efforts and at the expense of one or more creditors, in the discretion of court the reasonable expenses of such creditors in opposing such composition."

Under the present law wages due to workmen, clerks, etc., which have been earned within three months before the date of the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings and not to exceed $300 to each claimant has priority. The amendment increases the amount of priority claims to $600. Certain organizations appeared before the committee and asked that the time limit and the limit on amount be eliminated from the present law. However, the committee does not think this advisable, but is of the opinion that if $300 was a proper priority claim in 1898, when the law was enacted, taking into consideration the value of the dollar then and the value of the dollar now, that $600 would be a fair amount at this time, and for this reason this amendment is suggested.

"Priorities granted by any State law to its residents or to its domestic corporations over nonresidents or foreign corporations shall not be recognized and allowed" is a new provision, and the reason for its enactment is that one or two States have statutes granting liens on assets of insolvent estates in favor of their own citizens who are creditors. This amendment also serves to establish equality among creditors.

SECTION 14 OF THE BILL, BEING SECTION 70 (A) 2 AND (B) OF THE LAW:
"TITLE TO PROPERTY"

The present law reads:

"(2) Interests in patents, patent rights, copyrights, and trade-marks is changed to read:

"(2) Interests in patents, patent rights, copyrights, and trade-marks, and in application for patents, copyrights, and trade-marks; provided that in case the trustee, within 30 days after appointment, does not notify the applicant for a patent, copyright, or trade-mark of his election to prosecute the application to allowance or rejection, the bankrupt may apply to the court for an order vesting him with the title thereto, which petition shall be granted unless for cause shown by the trustee the court grants further time to the trustee for making such election; and such applicant may, in any event, at any time petition the court to be re-vested with such title in case the trustee shall fail to prosecute such application with reasonable diligence; and the court, upon re-vesting the bankrupt with such title, shall direct the trustee to execute proper instruments of transfer to make the same effective in law and upon the records."

This amendment is made necessary due to the fact that in the administration of bankruptcy causes the trustees often pay but little heed to patent rights and interests, and after closing the estate serious difficulties are later presented with respect to title. Under this amendment the trustee must act within a specified time, otherwise the bankrupt may take certain action looking toward re-vesting him with his title.

By the terms of (b) of the existing law all property belonging to bankrupt's estate must be appraised by three disinterested appraisers. While the amendment proposes that the property shall be appraised by not more than three disinterested appraisers who shall be appointed by and report to the court.

There are many small cases where there is no necessity for three appraisers, and the amendment would lodge a discretion in the court, permitting the court to appoint less than three appraisers if thought advisable.

Sections 15, 16, 17, and 18 are new, and in no way change or affect the existing law, other than to carry out the amendments of the preceding 14 sections.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill can not be amended, and it is not a good bill. The gentleman in charge of this bill will not permit us to amend it. The bankruptcy law that has been in force since 1898—28 years—ought to be repealed absolutely instead of thus being extended from time to time. I have sat around the settlement table, I guess, as much as any man in the House representing creditors both in bankruptcy proceedings and in assignment proceedings.

The best proceeding for the man who owes and for the creditors is the old practice of debtors making assignments, and then the creditors distribute the assets themselves. The estate of a bankrupt belongs to the creditors, and it ought to go to the creditors. It ought not to be dissipated in bankruptcy fees and expenses. In the English case the evidence showed that the smallest percentage of cost in bankruptcy cases was 26 per cent for administration, and in some courts that runs up to 40, 50, and 60 per cent of the estate for administration, referees' fees, trustees' fees, receivership fees, fees of the attorney for the bankrupt, fees for the attorney of the trustee, and fees for the attorney of the receiver. All of these fees eat up the estate, and we ought to stop it.

Why bring in a bill that can not even be debated and which can not, in any particular, be amended? You have got to vote for it just as it is, with no opportunity to offer amendments. The chairman will move the previous question and will not permit you to offer amendments. I am going to vote against it.

It permits any man to come in the bankruptcy court every six years and get discharged from all of his debts.

I want to tell you about a case I have been working on—

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment. I have been trying to get the general counsel down here in the Veterans' Bureau removed from office, because he has been wrongfully keeping veterans and their widows and orphans from getting their just deserts. He is generally known as "Poker Bill" Smith. I have been trying to have him removed. Why he has been discharged in bankruptcy twice from paying his honest debts, and yet he is now drawing a big salary from your Government down here in the Veterans' Bureau. You ought to stop it. It is not conducive to honesty and integrity to permit these men to come in every six years and be discharged of all their debts.

Mr. STEPHENS. Can not the gentleman have him removed?

Mr. BLANTON. I have been trying my dead-level best to have him removed. If the gentleman will help me, I think we can get him removed.

Mr. STEPHENS. I will help you.

Mr. BLANTON. But it is a slow process.

Mr. STEPHENS. Because I think he ought to be removed.

Mr. BLANTON. If I could get the chairman of the Rules Committee to go home for a week, we could have some of these fellows removed, but as long as he is here to protect them, God knows, it is a hard proposition. [Laughter.]

Let me tell my friend something. If you will make the dishonest millionaire who owes $1,000,000 pay his honest debts, the little fellow will pay his—the $500 man and the $1,000 man. It is because a man accumulates debts up to $1,000,000 and gets discharged from them that you find little fellows suffering all over the country.

Mr. STEPHENS. I think Smith should be removed on account of lack of legal knowledge.

Mr. BLANTON. Why, of course. He never has known any law. He got into the legal fraternity by accident. [Applause.] He went in with a large bunch of applicants in 1916, and they just doled out his license here through this machine in Washington. Every attorney down there knows he knows no law. And I made him admit to Director Hines in the presence of Senator SHEPPARD that he had never tried any important case in a courthouse when he was made general counsel for the United States Veterans' Bureau.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SNELL). The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] such time as he desires.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I do not desire to discuss the bill. I did not know it was coming up this morning, and a bill of such technicality needs some refreshing of one's memory before one can intelligently discuss it. I have been on the subcommittee with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], who has charge of the bill upon the floor. I wish to say he has given it the most painstaking, intelligent, and conscientious attention and consideration; indeed, I may say his fidelity to this bill deserves the highest appreciation of the House. [Applause.]

There has not been a semblance of partisanship in the consideration of the bill. We were confronted with whether we could improve existing legislation, and this is an effort to do it. Whether we should abolish the bankruptcy law and have no bankruptcy law, as suggested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], is another question. I simply wish to give the House this assurance, if anything from me can be an assurance, that this bill is an improvement of the existing law. It gives a fairer deal, if I may use that term, both to the creditor and to the debtor. Of course, the character of this law, the excellence of this law, is not of so much moment as the administration of the law. So, in the last analysis, we come back to the judge and the machinery of the court for the administration of law. We of the committee think this law will aid in that administration, that it is an advance and improvement, and for that reason I commend it to the favorable consideration of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, what I shall have to say is expressed for the purpose of expressing my own views rather than with any expectation of influencing anybody else with reference to this bill. I shall vote against it, chiefly for the reason it increases the statutory period of limitation, in most cases, from one year to three years, and it makes new criminal offenses.

The effect of extending the statute of limitations is to give increased opportunity to harass and blackmail and threaten persons who have any dealings with a bankruptcy court from one to a period of three years.

I believe everybody ought to pay their debts; but since we have a bankruptcy statute, I do not believe in making it so harsh and so much an engine of oppression and inquisition as this bill seems to do. I have not had an opportunity to examine it very carefully. I am voting against it simply on account of the fact it does not seem to me there is any particular necessity at this time for adopting the amendments that are proposed here.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I may say, in conclusion, that this bill simply does this—it improves present conditions. I have not heard a single man and there has not been a single organization speak one word against the provisions of the bill until my friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], discussed the matter, because it is conceded by all that there are inaccuracies and imperfections in the present law, and this law improves those conditions.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Does the gentleman think his statement that there has been no organization coming here opposing the bill is any real argument? Is it not our duty to examine this bill for ourselves and not wait until somebody comes here and opposes it? There are 100,000,000 people in this country who are not organized.

Mr. MICHENER. In answer to that statement I will say this bill was taken up for consideration more than a year ago. Hearings were held in January of 1925, and others were held in 1926. Every trade journal in the country and every newspaper in the country of any importance was notified of the hearings on this bill. The committee sent notices out to every one we thought might be interested. We sent notices to Federal judges and also to referees. The bill was submitted to the Department of Justice. This is not hasty action. It is the best bill we can pass at this time. It makes for honesty, it makes for economy, it makes for equality among creditors.

The matter was discussed by the judicial council, of which Judge Taft is chairman; it was given wide publicity, and while many people have appeared before the committee and have admitted that the changes were good, some have asked for further changes. There are additional changes that should be made. I agree with the gentleman from Texas in some particulars, but they are not included here, because there is no possibility of getting them through now. What we want to do is to improve on the present law. If a man believes the bankruptcy act should be repealed, if he does not believe in the principles of the law, he might vote against this bill; but if he believes in a bankrupt law, it strikes me that his duty is to vote for this measure. It is his duty to vote to make the law better and more effective so far as the people are concerned. The bankrupt has received at the hands of this committee every consideration. There is not a single provision in the bill that will make it one bit harder for the honest bankrupt.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I will.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In the hearings before the subcommittee which were quite elaborate and sometimes laborious, and in the deliberations before the subcommittee, does the gentleman recall that there was any question that was more seriously thought of than the protection of the bankrupt himself?

Mr. MICHENER. Absolutely not.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Was there any purpose to make his life harder?

Mr. MICHENER. Absolutely not, and this bill and these amendments are not sponsored by lawyers engaged in bankruptcy practice. They were not bankruptcy lawyers. Loss in any business is reflected in the cost of operation. Reduce fraud in the bankruptcy law and reduce the cost to the consumer.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Let me say that I am not a bankruptcy lawyer. I may be a bankrupt lawyer. [Laughter.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SNELL). The gentleman from Michigan moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MICHENER. And on that I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were 3 ayes and 74 noes.

So the motion to recommit was lost.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were 84 ayes and 2 noes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote and make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is no quorum present. The doors will be closed, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 277, nays 17, not voting 137, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

On motion of Mr. MICHENER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 8119) was laid on the table.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CHINDBLOM). Under the special order the Private Calendar will be called.

HARRY WALTER STEPHENSON

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8502) authorizing the President to reappoint Maj. Harry Walter Stephenson, United States Army, retired, to the position and rank of major, Coast Artillery Corps, United States Army.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to reappoint Maj. Harry Walter Stephenson, United States Army, retired, to the active list of the Army after ascertaining that he is qualified for the active service therein; and to commission him, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, as an additional number in the Coast Artillery Corps, United States Army, in the rank, grade, and position on the promotion list held by him at the date of his retirement November 26, 1922: Provided, That no back pay or allowance shall accrue as a result of the passage of this act.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I merely want to call attention of the administrative powers that be to what the Secretary of War says about this bill. I quote the Secretary of War, as follows:

In the case of Major Stephenson the board recommended and, upon reconsideration, adhered to its recommendation that he be eliminated from the active list by reason of relative efficiency ratings, relative usefulness, and relative value to the service. An examination of this officer's record discloses much upon which the board may have found him less effective and of less value to the Government than other majors.

The Secretary of War winds up by saying this:

In view of all the circumstances, the War Department does not recommend favorable consideration or passage of H. R. 5064.

And yet the administrative powers that be let it pass. I can not stop it. I might have objected to it and postpone it, but it would pass later, and the time consumed would only take the place of some other bill that was good. I can not stop it. Therefore I did not object, but I wanted to urge a real protest here against the passage of such bills over the unfavorable recommendation of the department.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. BEEDY. I call the attention of the gentleman also to the possible injustice here if this bill is passed that would be done a great many of the men who are on the list awaiting promotion.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly; but these bills pass, nevertheless.

Mr. BEEDY. I call the attention of the committee to the letter of the department, signed by former Secretary of War, Weeks, as Secretary of War, under date of February 13, 1924, addressed to the late Hon. Julius Kahn, in which he outlines the three methods adopted of reducing the size of the Army, and in that letter he states that this petitioner was in one of those classes, and that it is contrary to good policy now to promote this man and shut out some other men who would otherwise be promoted.

Mr. BLANTON. But what is the use of objecting? They will pass the bill later.

Mr. BEEDY. But it is our duty to object. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, I am detailed here to perform certain work, not altogether agreeable. I was listening attentively to the opening of this calendar, but in the confusion I did not hear the announcement. I think there ought to be some way of preserving our rights here. I intended to reserve the right to object to this bill, but when I rose to do so the Chair informed me that that period had been passed. Is there not some manner in which my rights may be protected here?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say that the Chair pounded vigorously for order and spoke loudly when he asked if there was objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BEEDY. The Chair was not at fault, but the membership of the House was in such disorder that it was impossible for me to hear, and I was listening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair regrets the situation, but can not do anything about it. It is within the power of any gentleman, however, to ask unanimous consent that any action that may have been taken by the House be vacated.

Mr. BEEDY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the action taken may be vacated.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I shall object to that.

Mr. BEEDY. Is the gentleman from Tennessee objecting?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Surely. It is my bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee objects. The Chair requests the Members of the House to maintain order. It appears that by reason of disorder a Member of the House feels that his rights have been jeopardized.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this is the second time this bill has been unanimously favorably reported by the Committee on Military Affairs of the House. There are a half dozen pages in this report citing the magnificent record of Major Stephenson while he was a Regular Army officer. He had 13 years of experience in the Regular Army and served his country with conspicuous valor during the European war on the other side. Since his retirement he has been assigned to Reserve Officers' Training Corps duty in Tennessee, and as a Reserve Officers' Training Corps officer he has made a record second to that of no officer in America. He is a young man, in vigorous health, as the record shows. It is unjust to him not to be permitted to be reinstated.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. And I understand also that this officer is now in active service.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. He is, in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps service.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. As a retired officer, and that this will merely restore him to the commissioned rank of the Regular Army?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. That is all.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. The commission he formerly held. He is now in the active service of the Army?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. He is now in active service and is a comparatively young man and is enjoying splendid health.

His record for efficiency is above the average, according to the reports of the War Department.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. And the fact of the business is that he is such an efficient officer that the War Department called him back into the active service.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Yes; and on account of his efficient record.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

J. H. TOULOUSE

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1243) for the relief of J. H. Toulouse.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $631.20 to J. H. Toulouse, to reimburse him for expenses incurred by him in connection with the devising and preparation of certain forms that were adopted by the sales-tax unit of the Bureau of Internal Revenue in connection with the collection of the tax on admissions.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 3, after the word "is," insert the word "hereby"; line 5, after the word "appropriated," insert the words "and in full settlement against the Government"; and, in line 7, after the word "expenses," insert the words "and services."

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 546, identical with this bill, and substitute it for this bill, with the amendments that have been incorporated in the House bill.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman would have to ask for the substitution of the Senate bill for the House bill, and then offer the committee amendment.

Mr. MORROW. That is what I am doing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The engrossed copy of the Senate bill does not seem to be here.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is a Senate bill to substitute for this bill.

Mr. MORROW. The Senate bill has passed. It may not be here yet. In that event, let the House bill be considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And the gentleman from New Mexico withdraws his request?

Mr. MORROW. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JOHN H. WALKER

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1244) for the relief of John H. Walker.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair will say in this case there is a Senate bill.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. With the understanding that the amendment which is in the House bill goes in the Senate bill I will not object, but that amendment ought to go in.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Certainly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 549) for the relief of John H. Walker

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,690.52 to John H. Walker, of Pasadena, Calif., as compensation in full for services rendered by him in the matter of the survey of public lands under contract No. 385, New Mexico.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I move that, in line 5, after the word "appropriated," the words "and in full settlement against the Government" be inserted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. UNDERHILL: Page 1, line 5, after the word "appropriated," insert "and in full settlement against the Government."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HEIRS OF LOUIS F. MEISSNER

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1897) for the relief of the heirs of the late Louis F. Meissner.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem, in favor of Charles A. Meissner, Cecille J. Wenzel, and Louis F. Meissner, Jr., sole heirs of Louis F. Meissner, deceased, United States coupon bonds Nos. 76978, 76979, 76980, and 76981, in the denomination of $100 each, of the 4 per cent funded loan of 1907, with interest thereon at the rate of 4 per cent from October 1, 1906, to July 2, 1907, the date of the maturity of the bonds, without presentation of said bonds or the coupons representing interest thereon from October 1, 1906, to July 2, 1907, which are alleged to have been stolen: Provided, That the said bonds shall not have been previously presented for payment, and that no payment shall be made hereunder for any coupons which shall have been previously presented and paid: Provided further, That the said Charles A. Meissner, Cecille J. Wenzel, and Louis F. Meissner, Jr., shall first file in the Treasury Department a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the bonds and the interest which had accrued thereon when the principal became due and payable, in such form and with such surety or sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury, to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the bonds hereinbefore described or the coupons belonging thereto.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JOSEPH L. KERESSEY

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2042) for the relief of Joseph L. Keresey.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object in order that I may ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNELL] some questions, I understand that the theory upon which the Claims Committee report out these bills is that men in the position of Keresey, for instance, are superintendents of substations, and they are not therefore responsible for the selection of men under them or for the custody of funds—

Mr. O'CONNELL of New York. They are not.

Mr. BEEDY. And that the responsibility under the bond running to the Post Office Department attaches to the postmaster?

Mr. O'CONNELL of New York. Of the city in which the substation is located.

Mr. BEEDY. If this is a fact, I wish somebody would explain to me how a trained postal inspector investigating this burglary makes a report after consideration to the department that this man Keresey was lax in his discipline, that he was not careful in seeing who had keys to this safe and those who did not, and this is the loss for which the man is himself responsible? How can a trained inspector in the Postal Department make that report if the fact was that there was no responsibility?

Mr. O'CONNELL of New York. The gentleman must realize that even in the report of the inspector, knowing, as he does, the contrary to be the case, surely my friend from Maine would not hold this man responsible when the Director of the Budget indorsed the claim and the Postmaster General of the United States says it should be paid.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I think I have the floor. Let me say to my friend from New York [Mr. O'CONNELL] I know that the Director of the Budget said this would not interfere with his financial program. He makes that as a general statement covering all of these bills, and I know the pressure that has been brought to bear upon the Post Office Department to settle this case. Let me ask this question: The bondsmen of this man have paid this loss, have they not?

Mr. O'CONNELL of New York. Not all; Keresey has paid every cent of it out of his small salary.

Mr. BEEDY. That is one thing I want to get before the House. Then this does not benefit the bondsmen?

Mr. O'CONNELL of New York. In no way whatever.

Mr. BEEDY. But it is money to be paid back to the man which has already been taken out of his salary.

Mr. O'CONNELL of New York. Yes; I am very glad to say to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. Who is the most responsible to the Government, the inspector or the Postmaster General, and who controls in this matter?

Mr. BEEDY. That question, of course, answers itself.

Mr. BLANTON. The Postmaster General, to whom we must look for proper administration, and he comes in and tells the Congress or requests the payment of this bill. He says it is not against the President's financial program. What are we going to do? I am not going to object to a bill of that kind.

Mr. BEEDY. It is no use to object, but it is our duty to get the facts before the House.

Mr. O'CONNELL of New York. I thank my friend. I am familiar with all the facts in the case, and it is entirely meritorious.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Joseph L. Keresey, of Brooklyn, N. Y., the sum of $1,569.40, as reimbursement for the loss of postal funds arising out of burglary at Station E, post office, Brooklyn, N. Y., on May 15, 1921.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "appropriated," insert the words "and in full settlement against the Government."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was ordered to be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ELLA E. HORNER

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2465) for the relief of Ella E. Horner.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. With the understanding, Mr. Speaker, that the committee amendment goes in the bill, I shall not object.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that that will follow in every case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Ella E. Horner, the sum of $240 as compensation for injuries received on September 16, 1922, at Auburn, N. J., when she was struck by a truck operated by the United States Army.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

On page 1, line 5, after the word "appropriated," insert the words "in full settlement against the Government."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was ordered to be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CUSTER ELECTRIC LIGHT, HEAT & POWER CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3659) for the relief of the Custer Electric Light, Heat & Power Co., of Custer, S. Dak.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an appropriation be, and is hereby, authorized out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in the sum of $124.92, to compensate the Custer Electric Light, Heat & Power Co., of Custer, S. Dak., for the total destruction of a motor and starting switch used by the Government at its seed extractory in Custer, S. Dak.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $124.94 to the Custer Electric Light, Heat & Power Co., of Custer, S. Dak., as compensation for the total destruction of a motor and starting switch used by the Government at its seed extractory in Custer, S. Dak."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was ordered to be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

JOHN HAMILL

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4140) for the relief of John Hamill.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the amount granted the claimant in this case, I see, is $5,000. The injury, while it is one that the House usually compensates for, it does seem the permanent disability is not enough to justify that amount, and that amount will be larger than the Committee on Claims is accustomed to give in cases of that kind.

For example, Col. C. C. McCulloch, jr., who was sent out there to examine the patient, reports that there is no apparent shortening of the leg, but that there is a slight weakness of the leg, and that the degree of permanent disability is 10 per cent.

Now, I think if this bill passes there ought to be an agreement that an amendment will be offered that makes the amount $2,500 instead of $5,000. I want to be just to both the claimant and the Government.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, the committee in reporting the amount of $5,000 followed its usual course in reporting in such cases of loss of limb or permanent disability the sum of $5,000. The committee has tried to be consistent in all of these cases, not making an award of $1,000 to one applicant and $5,000 or more to somebody else, but taking as the general basis on which to make an award $5,000.

The purpose the committee had in making this award was this: Although the child had not lost the limb, the limb was not really of great use to him, and as long as the board found that the child would be crippled for life we recommended that a sufficient sum be given to enable his guardian to see to it that he should learn a trade and would not become a permanent charge on the community.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I think the gentleman will agree with me that for injuries no greater than this the Committee on Claims usually recommends a smaller amount than that which is carried in this bill.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The committee having performed its services the chairman of the committee does not think it is incumbent upon him to state further as to how much Congress or the House shall allow in this case. If the gentleman from Texas wishes to offer an amendment, then we will leave it to the House to determine the amount suffered in damage by this boy.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I shall object to the consideration of this bill at this time unless—

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman withhold his objection and offer his amendment so we may put it up to the House? I do not oppose his amendment in any way.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. This bill was turned over to me to examine and study. In studying this bill I had the same idea that the gentleman has, but in going over the correspondence and figuring that this child has a forward bending of the bone below the knee and that the child might become permanently disabled, I felt this amount should be allowed; but it was also my thought, like the chairman of the committee, that if anybody in the House saw fit to cut this sum it would be all right.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I have no other purpose except to do justice in this case; but the reason I raise the question is that I want an agreement that this amount will be reduced, because I think it is unquestionably a just suggestion I am making. I understand that $5,000 for the loss of life is the maximum amount that is granted, and yet here is a boy with an injury that only amounts to 10 per cent.

Mr. UNDERHILL. If the gentleman will offer his amendment, I assure him I will not offer any objection to it. I would be glad to have the responsibility in the House rather than in the committee.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. In view of the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I shall not object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Whose bill is this?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I do not know. We never ask that.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman here who is interested in this bill? Apparently not. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TILSON). The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RELIEF OF OCEAN STEAMSHIP CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8178) for the relief of Ocean Steamship Co. (Ltd.).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes on this bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to state to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] that if there were no reason for the passage of this bill other than the one I am going to state I believe it would appeal to him. Our colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] devotes more time to the work of his committee, I dare say, than almost any other chairman devotes to his work. He is doing splendid and good work. This is his bill.

Mr. UNDERHILL. It is not my bill. I just reported it.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman introduced it, did he not?

Mr. UNDERHILL. At the request of the State Department.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, he introduced it. Whenever the gentleman from Massachusetts introduces a bill and reports it out you can bet your head on there being some merit in it. I have found that out in watching him. I hope the gentleman from New York will let it go by, since the State Department requests its passage.

Mr. FISH. If the gentleman will state it was introduced at the request of the State Department I will withdraw my objection. The reason I objected was simply this: I understand that the United States has a number of claims against the English Government because of the confiscation of ships and cargoes during the war, which are still pending, and without having looked into it I would like to know more about it before we take action on the bill. However, if it was introduced at the request of the State Department I will withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute Senate bill 2368 for the House bill now under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to substitute Senate bill 2368 for the House bill now under consideration. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of Ocean Steamship Co. (Ltd.), a British corporation, owner of the British steamship Alecinous, against the United States for damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of a collision between the said steamship Alecinous and the U. S. steamship Artemis, in or near the harbor of New York, on or about December 3, 1917, may be determined in a suit to be brought by said claimant against the United States in the United States district court for either the southern or eastern districts of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty; and that the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the said suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages, if any, with costs, as may be found due to said claimant from the United States by reason of said collision, upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases between private parties, and subject to the same rights of appeal and review: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: And provided further, That such suit shall be brought not later than four months after the approval of this act.

SEC. 2. That should the proceedings herein authorized result in a decree or decrees in favor of said claimant and against the United States, then the amount of said decree or decrees shall be paid to the said claimant or to its proctors of record out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, page 1, line 3, down to and including line 22, on page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the claim of the Ocean Steamship Co. (Ltd.), a British corporation, owner of the steamship Alecinous, against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between said steamship Alecinous and the U. S. transport Artemis, in or near the harbor of New York, on December 3, 1917, may be determined in a suit to be brought by said claimant against the United States in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court in admiralty cases, and that said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine said suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages, and costs, if any, as shall be found due from the United States to the said Ocean Steamship Co. (Ltd.) by reason of said collision, upon the same principles and under the same measures of liability as in like cases between private parties, and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and upon such notice it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That such suit shall be begun within four months of the date of the approval of this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 8178) was laid on the table.

DISBURSING AGENTS—ALASKAN ENGINEERING COMMISSION

The next business on the Private Calendar was the resolution (H. J. Res. 99) for the relief of special disbursing agents of the Alaskan Engineering Commission or of the Alaska Railroad.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I want to call the attention of the House to this statement from the Comptroller General who passed upon this case:

The act of March 4, 1921 (44 Stats. 1405), in appropriating for the expenses of the Alaskan Engineering Commission contains a proviso, as follows:

"That no one individual shall be paid an annual salary out of this fund of more than $10,000."

This officer, Mears, attempted not only to draw the $10,000 salary provided for in that act, which was limited to $10,000, but he wanted to draw his salary as an officer as well, when the law did not authorize it. He could elect to draw either one of them, but he could not draw the two salaries under the law. He elected to draw the $10,000, and he drew it, and now he is trying to get us to pay him his War Department salary as well. The Comptroller General recommended against it, and we are seeking by this bill to set aside the law and the order of the Comptroller General of the United States. We ought not to do that, and I am going to object, but if the gentleman from California wants to be heard I shall reserve my objection.

Mr. CURRY. The gentleman made his statement, and I wish to be heard in response to the statement, which is not based on facts.

Mr. BLANTON. I have quoted from the record.

Mr. CURRY. No; you have only quoted a part of it.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the other part?

Mr. CURRY. You have had your talk and I have said nothing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve the right to object, so the gentleman may make his statement.

Mr. CURRY. Colonel Mears was to receive $10,000 a year in salary as the engineer officer and manager of the Alaska Railroad. His salary as an Army officer was deducted from the $10,000 a year. He was to receive from the War Department his salary as an officer in the Army and the difference between that and the salary that had been fixed by the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Interior and the commission at $10,000 a year. He was paid that salary under the law that absolutely authorized the President of the United States, Woodrow Wilson, to fix the salary and to assign an Army or Navy officer to this work, which he did, with the consent of Secretary of War Baker and at the request of Secretary of the Interior Lane. The war came along and Colonel Mears thought his duty was in the Army and asked to be relieved of this duty. He reentered the Army, went over to France, built the railroads for the American Army, took care of our interests over there as a colonel in the Engineer Corps. He had constructed the railroad across the Panama Canal at the time of the digging of the canal, and was one of the officers for whom Congress passed an act permitting them to retire on a pension at any time. When he came back from the war he desired to go into private business and wanted to retire because the war was over, and he did not want to go back into the Engineer Corps and did not wish to go up to Alaska. At the personal request of the President of the United States and of the Secretary of the Interior he sacrificed thousands of dollars a year and went to Alaska at a salary which was fixed at $15,000 a year, part of the salary to be paid as a colonel of the Engineer Corps and the balance of the salary from the funds of the Alaska Railroad. He was paid that for a long time. Then the Comptroller General stated that he was out of the Army if he took this position as chief engineer of the railroad and manager, or else he was in the Army and this money was paid, was illegally paid, by a man by the name of Chase, who was the auditing officer. This claim is against Mr. Chase. Colonel Mears received the money. He is an honorable man. He has resigned from the Army and has taken the position he was offered when he came back from France.

This is for the relief of Mr. Chase, and Mr. Chase happens to be a Democrat, and I happen to be a Republican. This mix-up came from the Democratic administration and was inherited by the Republican administration. I think the United States Government should be as honest in dealing with its citizens and in keeping its obligations as it compels its citizens to be in dealing with each other.

It is easy enough to object to a bill of this kind. One man of the 435 Members of the Congress can do it. It is an easy way of making a record. I would not care whether this bill was objected to or not if it was possible to consider it in the House upon the call of the committee; but it is on the Private Calendar, and it can only be considered in this way, because there are so many bills on the Private Calendar that the bills have to be considered that are unobjected to. I do not think the gentleman from Texas wants to make a record of trying to cheat a poor, unfortunate man by compelling him to pay $3,333.34, when he honestly paid it to this man under the direction of the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Interior and the Engineering Commission.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, still reserving the right to object, the fact that this man is a Democrat, if he is one, does not cut any ice with me at all.

Mr. CURRY. It does not with me, either.

Mr. BLANTON. If he is trying to get something the law does not allow, I am against his getting it, whether he is a Democrat or not.

Mr. CURRY. But the law does allow it. We passed three laws—

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield.

Mr. CURRY. Will the gentleman let me explain this before he talks?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. CURRY. We have passed three acts through the House to try to straighten this thing out.

The last bill we passed was sent from the Interior Department, O. K'd by the War Department. We took it up informally with the Comptroller General, and then we amended the bill in accordance with his suggestion. We passed the bill in that form and then he again refused to comply with that law.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to show you what the report shows from the statement by the Interior Department? May we rely on that or not? Here is what the department says:

From the compensation of $10,000 per annum Colonel Mears is paid from the Alaskan Railroad fund the difference between his Army pay and $10,000.

That makes his $10,000 salary. Now let me go further and show you what Mr. Mears says. Remember that the act of March 4, 1921, passed under this administration, says that no one individual shall be paid an annual salary out of these funds of more than $10,000. That is the law passed by the gentleman's administration. Here is what Mr. Mears says:

The disbursing officer of the Alaskan Engineering Commission continued to pay my salary as chairman and chief engineer of said commission, at the rate of $15,000 per annum (less pay as Army officer) in accordance with the President's commission.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, if there is going to be an objection, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman asks for that, I object.

C. M. RODEFER

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2009) for the relief of C. M. Rodefer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TILSON). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem one 4½ per cent United States Treasury certificate of indebtedness No. 11227, of the denomination of $10,000, dated September 15, 1919, and maturing September 15, 1920, and attached coupon No. 2 of the denomination of $225, due September 15, 1920, without presentation of such certificate of indebtedness or coupon, which have been lost, stolen, or destroyed, and to pay from the proceeds of such redemption to the said C. M. Rodefer the total sum of $10,225: Provided, That the said certificate of indebtedness and coupon shall not have been previously presented and paid: And provided further, That the said C. M. Rodefer shall first file in the Treasury Department of the United States a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal of said certificate of indebtedness and coupon in such form and with such sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury, to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the lost, stolen, or destroyed certificate of indebtedness and coupon hereinbefore described.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem in favor of Charles M. Rodefer United States Treasury certificate of indebtedness No. 11227 in the denomination of $10,000, dated September 15, 1919, matured September 15, 1920, series T-10, with interest from March 15, 1920, to September 15, 1920, at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum, without presentation of the said certificate or the coupon representing interest thereon from March 15, 1920, to September 15, 1920, the certificate having been lost, stolen, or destroyed: Provided, That the said certificate of indebtedness shall not have been previously presented and paid, and that payment shall not be made hereunder for any coupon which shall have been previously presented and paid: And provided further, That said Charles M. Rodefer shall first file in the Treasury Department of the United States a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal of the said certificate of indebtedness and the interest which had accrued when the principal became due and payable in such form and with such sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury, to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the lost, stolen, or destroyed certificate of indebtedness and coupon hereinbefore described."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JOE F. JENKINS

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2324) for the relief of Joe F. Jenkins.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Reserving the right to object, this bill is one of several others, and I would like to look into it a little further.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I hope the gentleman will not object. This is the case of a young country boy, a farmer boy 18 years of age, who went into the Army for the World War, went over the seas, and received free of charge all the cigarettes he needed until about the time of the armistice. There were several other boys, and they together stole a couple of cases of cigarettes, which all the fellows smoked. One of the other boys was sent to the military prison and served his sentence. His military record has been cured. But this boy, Joe Jenkins, served six months in prison, and his record is not yet saved for him.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. How was the record of the other boy cured?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do not know.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The only thing on earth they ever took was cigarettes?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; and the Salvation Army and the Young Men's Christian Association had furnished those prior to the armistice.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. How many cigarettes did they get?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Sixty dollars' worth.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Well, I will not object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. For the country boy I thank you. An honorable discharge will be about all he will get in this life.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Joe F. Jenkins, who was a member of the Twenty-ninth Company, Twentieth Engineer Regiment, United States Army, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on the 17th day of September, 1919: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GEORGE BARRETT

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1539) for the relief of George Barrett.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A similar Senate bill is on the calendar, and, without objection, the Senate bill will be considered in lieu of the House bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill (S. 3031), as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, their widows, and dependent relatives George Barrett, Army serial No. 1637071, who was a private of Battery F, Twelfth Field Artillery, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said battery and regiment on the 3d day of April, 1919: Provided, That no back pay or allowance of any kind shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The bill H. R. 1539 was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 3624. An act for the relief of Hannah Parker; and
H. R. 5012. An act to legalize a pier into the Atlantic Ocean at the foot of Rehoboth Avenue, Rehoboth Beach, Del.

JOY BRIGHT HANCOCK

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8138) for the relief of Joy Bright Hancock.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum equal to six months' gratuity pay granted to the regular officers of the United States Navy to Joy Bright Hancock, widow of the late Lieut. Charles Gray Little, United States Naval Reserve, who was a member of the crew of the ZR-2 airship, which was destroyed by an explosion on board the ship August 24, 1921.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A. B. EWING

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 537) for the relief of A. B. Ewing.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. This bill involves an amount of almost $30,000; $29,895.06, to be exact. On reading the report I find that the postmaster was found to be negligent in the remittance of funds; that his attention was called to it many times; that he would not remit, even though he promised to do so; and it at length led to this report by all of the inspectors who were put upon this case. I read from the report:

The postmaster has not concerned himself with any of the important matters in the office, his sole employment having been opening the mail, meeting the public, and some casual supervision, leaving to the assistant postmaster the handling of all finances, the keeping of the accounts, and rendition of all reports. The handling of the office correspondence has been conducted in a slipshod manner, which has resulted in letters from the department being lost or ignored, and inquiries from other postmasters have been passed around to various employees, who failed to answer them as required.

Mr. AYRES. On what page of the report is the gentleman reading?

Mr. BEEDY. I am reading from page 21 of the report. Finally, the First Assistant Postmaster General characterizes this postmaster as follows, as quoted by the post-office inspectors:

However, in reviewing the facts set forth above, it is shown that postmaster has failed to perform the usual duties and to accept responsibilities and management of the office devolving upon him by virtue of his appointment as postmaster. In fact, he can be well described in the language of the Hon. John H. Bartlett, First Assistant Postmaster General, as a "rubber stamp" of an experienced but incompetent, negligent, and procrastinating subordinate, and not a real asset but a "sad liability to the office."

Mr. BLANTON. Would not that apply to the ordinary Congressman?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, if that is the case, I think we ought not to waste much time upon this bill. I shall have to object to the passage of the bill.

Mr. AYRES. That is agreeable to me, if the gentleman desires to object. I am merely trying to help out one of his people.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not care who his people are. I object.

JOHN W. KING

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1731) for the relief of John W. King.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does anybody know John?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes; I know him.

Mr. HOWARD. All right. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to John W. King, of Avery, Tex., one permanent United States coupon bond in the denomination of $1,000 of the third Liberty loan 4½ per cent bonds of 1928, with coupon due March 15, 1926, and coupons to maturity attached thereto, in lieu of a temporary coupon bond (number unknown) of the same loan in the denomination of $1,000 with all coupons attached, destroyed by fire, charred fragments of which have been presented to the Treasury Department, and to pay interest at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum from September 15, 1918, to September 15, 1925, in the amount of $297.50, representing the coupons attached to the temporary bond when destroyed, and coupons of the permanent coupon bond which will not be attached to the bond when issued: Provided, That the said bond shall not have been previously presented or ascertained to be in existence, and that no payment shall be made hereunder for any coupons which shall have been previously presented and paid: And provided further, That the said John W. King shall file in the Treasury Department a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the bond, and the interest which would accrue thereon until the principal becomes due and payable in such form and with such securities as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury, to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the destroyed bond hereinbefore described or the coupons belonging thereto.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "due," strike out "March 15, 1926," and insert in lieu thereof "December 15, 1920."

Line 11, strike out the word "all" and insert the word "three."

Page 2, line 3, after the word "to," strike out the words "December 15, 1925," and insert "March 15, 1920."

Line 4, strike out "$297.50" and insert "$63.75."

Line 6, after the word "destroyed," strike out the comma and "and coupons of the permanent coupon bonds which will not be attached to the bond when issued."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WILLIAM D. McKEEFREY

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2011) for the relief of William D. McKeefrey.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MURPHY] a question. It occurs to me that the constituents of the gentleman are getting very careless about their bonds. They are losing entirely too many of them. How many more of these bills has the gentleman?

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, this is the only one we have of this kind, and this man has been waiting since 1918.

Mr. BLANTON. They ought to buy some safes out there.

Mr. MURPHY. I think perhaps there was carelessness some place. This man admits it. The bonds have not shown up; they are lost.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will read the committee amendment instead of the bill which has been stricken out.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem in favor of William D. McKeefrey, of Leetonia, Ohio, United States coupon bonds Nos. 39675, 39676, and 39677, in the denomination of $100 each, of the 3 per cent loan of 1908-1918, with interest from date of issue to August 1, 1918, the date of maturity, at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, without presentation of the said bonds or the coupons representing interest thereon from the date of issue to the date of maturity thereof, the bonds, with all coupons attached, having been lost or destroyed: Provided, That the said bonds shall not have been previously presented for payment, and that no payment shall be made hereunder for any coupons which shall have been previously presented and paid: And provided further, That the said William D. McKeefrey shall first file in the Treasury Department a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the bonds and the interest payable thereon, in such form and with such surety or sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury, to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the lost or destroyed bonds hereinbefore described or the coupons belonging thereto.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HARRY COVENTRY

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 658) for the relief of Harry Coventry.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Harry Coventry, who served in the World War as a first sergeant in Company I, Three hundred and twenty-sixth Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 9, after the word "States," insert "on March 3, 1920: Provided, That no back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

THOMAS J. GARDNER

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3376) for the relief of Thomas J. Gardner.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, Thomas J. Gardner shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of Company L, Sixth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, on the 1st day of May, 1865: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the proviso in the bill and substitute this language:

Provided, That no back pay, pension, or allowance shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLACK of Texas: On page 1, line 9, strike out the proviso and insert in lieu thereof "Provided, That no back pay, pension, or allowance shall accrue prior to the passage of this act."

Mr. BLACK of Texas. This is simply the usual form used in bills of this kind.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to amend the gentleman's amendment. At the end of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas add the following:

And shall not be paid to any Commissioner of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I make a point of order against the amendment that it is not germane.

Mr. MAPES. I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I think it is a germane limitation. I think it is a proper limitation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas insert "And shall not be paid to any Commissioner of the District of Columbia."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the point of order is made against the amendment. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I desire to be heard. Surely the Chair would not hold this is subject to the point of order. We can place any kind of a safeguard around pensions. This is a pension which when it will be paid will be paid to a man who served in the Civil War, a man who is possibly between 70 and 80 years of age or more, a man whose mind is not as strong as it was when he was 21 years of age, but a man against whom there could not be a true charge of imbecility and against whom there could not be a true charge of lunacy. Now, we have a right under those circumstances to safeguard the payment of this money and see that it does not get into improper hands.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understand the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] was that there could not be any allowance accruing. If it does not accrue, how could it—

Mr. BLANTON. That is prior to this act, and it will accrue after the act.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But the gentleman's amendment is an amendment to that of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. I mean after it does accrue and after it has to be paid by the Pension Department they should not pay it to a Commissioner of the District of Columbia, because whenever it gets into the hands of such a commissioner it is squandered and the poor old veteran of the Civil War does not get the benefit of it. Now, that is a proper amendment; that is a safeguard. I submit the matter to the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to rule. The second clause of paragraph 7, Rule VI, says:

And no motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under cover of amendment.

It seems to the Chair that the amendment introduces an entirely new subject and is therefore not germane to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK]. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for recognition against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, you are fixing by this bill to pay a pension to a survivor of the Civil War, an old gentleman who is at least 75 years of age, and the very minute that one of these Commissioners of the District of Columbia finds out this man is drawing a pension he is going to have his eyes on him and he will soon have lunacy charges against him, and he will have him declared a lunatic and put over in St. Elizabeths Hospital, and begin to collect the money and begin to take out his 10 per cent, and are we going to sit here and let him continue to do that way and not stop it? Why do not we stop it? I am trying to stop it. I have a resolution before your Committee on Rules that has been there for nearly a month slumbering the sleep of death.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Your Veterans' Committee—some Democratic Members—are very enthusiastic and have been trying to get a hearing on the proposition, with Members clamoring to be heard, and they can not get but three or four Republican Members present, with no quorum, and they can not do any business.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and that committee has jurisdiction of these matters. Could not the committee proceed and invite these people, Commissioner Fenning and others, to come before the committee?

Mr. BLANTON. Well, the committee could, but it will not.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. In a minute—and then if they refuse would not we be in a position wherein the House could not afford to refuse the authority? Why does not that committee go ahead?

Mr. BLANTON. If I were its chairman, the committee would act. I have found out that this House can afford to do almost anything it wants and get away with it when those in authority do not want to do something. The committee to which I belong yesterday passed a resolution for the chairman to appoint a committee of five to investigate this matter. But it has not yet been appointed. Besides, that committee has not any authority to summon witnesses and make them appear. It has not any authority to make witnesses produce papers or records there.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the subject that is pending before the House.

Mr. BLANTON. I know that this does not sound good to the administration.

Mr. MAPES. We are considering bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BLANTON. In deference to the Speaker, I will not force him to rule on this perplexing question, hence will yield the floor.

Mr. MAPES. Recognizing also that the gentleman is out of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was ordered to be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

LEWIS WILLIAMS

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 821) for the relief of Lewis Williams, formerly collector of internal revenue for the State of Idaho.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of Lewis Williams, formerly collector of internal revenue for the State of Idaho, by reason of shortage of book of special tax stamps, broker's $50, numbered from 851 to 860, inclusive, only one of which stamps had been issued, being No. 851, with 10 coupons attached, with a book shortage consisting of the remaining stamps with a book value of $458.33.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was ordered to be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

HOWARD A. MOUNT

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2254) for the relief of Howard A. Mount.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Howard A. Mount, of Washington, D. C., the sum of $685.64, to compensate him as philatelic stamp agent, Post Office Department, for loss of postage stamps inadvertently destroyed without credit in course of redemption in the said department.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was ordered to be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

JOHN A. OLSON

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2329) for the relief of John A. Olson.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I notice that this is a cabin that Mr. Olson owned in the Olympic National Forest.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. He did not own the land on which the cabin was situated, did he?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes. He owned the land. This is a good illustration of one of the hardships incident to pioneering ahead of the creation of these forest reserves. This forest reserve was proclaimed and built around the homestead of Mr. Olson. His house was in the forest reserve. His house at this time had been taken over and occupied by employees of the Forest Service.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I have no objection if the house was on his own land.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes. He owned the land. It was included within a forest reserve.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. The report simply stated that the house was in the Olympic National Forest. I gained the impression that the land belonged to the Government.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No. I am glad the gentleman brought up that question so that an explanation might be made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John A. Olson, of Olson, Wash., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,500 to reimburse and compensate him as owner of a house and contents destroyed by fire June 7, 1918, while the said house was occupied and used by employees of the United States Forest Service.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

On page 1, line 6, after the word "appropriated," insert "in full settlement against the Government," and on line 7, strike out the figures "$1,500" and insert "$900."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was ordered to be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

H. R. BUTCHER

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2933) for the relief of H. R. Butcher.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of H. R. Butcher, former second lieutenant, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, disbursing officer of the Army at Camp Funston, Kans., with $299.78, this sum being an alleged shortage in the accounts of the said H. R. Butcher and a balance due the United States while acting as disbursing officer at Camp Funston, Kans., when in fact there is no real or actual shortage or balance due by H. R. Butcher to the United States.

With committee amendments, as follows:

Strike out all of line 3, on page 1, and insert "That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized," and in line 11, after the word "Kansas," strike out the remainder of line 11 and all of line 1, on page 2, and the words "to the United States" on line 2, and insert in lieu thereof "due to the lack of evidence to support certain war-time disbursements."

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. After line 10, the word "Kansas" ought to be stricken out on page 1.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was ordered to be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ROYAL HOLLAND LLOYD

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8894) for the relief of the Royal Holland Lloyd, a Netherlands corporation of Amsterdam, the Netherlands.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the chairman of the committee, my friend Mr. UNDERHILL, who is the author of the bill, if he considers this bill of more importance than some bills I have introduced or may introduce. This seems to be a bill to grant to the Royal Holland Lloyd, a Netherlands corporation of Amsterdam, the right to sue in the Court of Claims. I want to ask the gentleman if he thinks it is of more importance than to grant relief to a man where they commandeered his wool during the war, took it and sold it at a less price? The gentleman was not in my State, but was from the State of New Mexico, which at that time I introduced the bill had no Congressman, as I recall. That bill was denied a favorable report by the Claims Committee, and this poor fellow, McIntire, was forced into bankruptcy. I have introduced many other meritorious bills, one asking that a claim be allowed for two poor Mexican children, the Government being responsible for their loss.

And this bill has been turned down by his committee. I would like to ask if he thinks a bill to grant a Dutch company the right to sue in the Court of Claims is of more importance than bills of that character? Those bills have all been denied a favorable report. There was another bill I introduced where an Army officer ran into one of my citizen's cars and tore it to pieces. I introduced a bill for his relief, but that relief has been denied, but here is a Dutch company being given the right to sue in the Court of Claims, and the committee has favorably reported the bill, and the chairman of this committee is the author. Will the gentleman give the gentleman from Texas the same consideration in connection with the bill to grant relief to a poor widow whose husband gave his life in the customs service, and those poor maimed Mexican children? They have no court to go to. I ask the gentleman if he will give me that right?

Mr. UNDERHILL. If there was any medium through which the gentleman's claim could be settled other than the Claims Committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts would be more than glad to pass the responsibility on.

Mr. HUDSPETH. As I say, there is no other remedy.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I want to say to the gentleman and to the gentlemen of the House that the gentleman from Massachusetts, although his name appears on many bills, has not a single claim before the committee in which he is personally interested. This particular bill, and others, was introduced by the chairman of the committee at the request of the State Department. It is an international complication, and the collision occurred previous to the passage—

Mr. HUDSPETH. They were just stopped by the Federal Government for a short time; they were commandeered during the war, and now they want to come in and sue this Government.

Mr. UNDERHILL. No. There is an admiralty law on the statute books which allows suits against Government vessels when the collision occurred after 1919, I believe, but this antedates that law, and consequently we are extending the same privilege to these people at the request of the State Department.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman explain to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] how the Committee on Claims got jurisdiction of this bill in preference to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, where it belongs?

Mr. UNDERHILL. All of these bills are referred to our committee and not referred to the Foreign Affairs Committee.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. It is for damages to foreign nationals?

Mr. UNDERHILL. We have had these bills ever since I have been a Member of Congress and on the committee.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I trust my big-hearted and liberal friend from Massachusetts—

Mr. UNDERHILL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Oh, I mean it—will grant me the right to go into the Court of Claims, to say the least of it, in behalf of these unfortunate people. It seems I can get no relief through this committee. I hope the gentleman will be that generous when I present a bill to that effect. And I know his great generous heart will prompt him to do at least that much.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Royal Holland Lloyd, owners of the Netherlands steamship Zeelandia, against the United States for damages alleged to have been sustained as a result of the refusal of the Federal authorities to grant clearance to the vessel during the period from October 17, 1917, to March 21, 1918, may be sued for by the said Royal Holland Lloyd in the United States Court of Claims, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit to judgment: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. In line 11, after the word "judgment," insert the words "and either party shall have the right of appeal."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK of Texas: Page 1, line 11, after the word "judgment," insert "and either party shall have the right of appeal."

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if the general bill that was passed in the House, and of which he was the author, did not contain a provision which gave either party to these admiralty suits the right of an appeal.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I believe it did.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BENJAMIN A. J. FUNNEMARK

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3025) granting a patent to certain lands to Benjamin A. J. Funnemark.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to reserve the right to object. How far is this policy going to be continued of granting patents through Congress?

Mr. FRENCH. May I say to the gentleman that the person in whose interest this bill was introduced was permitted erroneously to apply for certain land under the enlarged homestead law, and he prosecuted his entry for a period of five years. Then when he came to offer final proof the local land office discovered that the law did not apply to homesteaders across the survey line within the bounds of the Nez Perce Indian Reservation, but did apply on the outside. The entryman's original land was within the reservation, and therefore his application for patent was rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. The Land Commissioner has authority to straighten those matters out, has he not?

Mr. FRENCH. No; not this matter.

Mr. BLANTON. Where they attempt to comply with the law?

Mr. FRENCH. But not in a case like this. When the law was passed, under which enlarged homestead additions could be made, it specifically provided that the law did not pertain to certain Indian reservations. The local land office apparently overlooked this provision.

Mr. BLANTON. Has there been any adverse report upon this bill?

Mr. FRENCH. Not an adverse report. The department is favorable to it.

Mr. BLANTON. Has there been any report from the department not recommending this bill favorably?

Mr. FRENCH. Not that I recall; certainly not in this Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, in a previous Congress?

Mr. FRENCH. Not that I recall.

Mr. BLANTON. Well the gentleman has been here back to the time to which the memory of man runneth not to the contrary; so he ought to know.

Mr. FRENCH. Well, I think there has not been such a report. This is simple justice to the poor homesteader who lost out because of an error not of his own, but of the officers of the department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue a patent to Benjamin A. J. Funnemark for 490 acres of land of a character available for entry under the stock raising homestead law, the said grant being in lieu of an equal area of land of like character upon which the said claimant was erroneously permitted to enter, the land erroneously entered being within the Lewiston (Idaho) land district, and more particularly described as follows: Lots 3 and 4, section 18; lots 1, 2, 3, and 4, section 19, township 11 north, range 45 east, Willamette meridian; and east half southeast quarter, section 13, east half northeast quarter, northeast quarter southeast quarter, southwest quarter northeast quarter section 24, northwest quarter southeast quarter section 30, township 11 north, range 44 east, Willamette meridian.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 10, strike out "Lewiston, Idaho," and insert in lieu thereof "Walla Walla, Washington, now Spokane."

Page 2, line 3, after the word "quarter," insert "northwest quarter, southeast quarter."

In line 6, strike out "northwest quarter southeast quarter section 30."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to amend the title of the bill by inserting after the word "patent" the words "to certain lands."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended as indicated.

There was no objection.

T. ARTHUR MOORE

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1952) for the relief of T. Arthur Moore.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon furnishing sufficient evidence that he is the owner of the southeast quarter of section 13, in township 1 north range 1 east of the Salt Lake meridian, in the State of Utah, T. Arthur Moore is hereby authorized to convey to the United States the said land and to select in lieu thereof any tract of surveyed, vacant, unreserved, nonmineral public land of equal area and of the same character and of equal value to that conveyed; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion, to accept such conveyance and to issue patent for the tract selected, the exchange to be made under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CHARLES E. LOWE

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2744) to correct the military record of Charles E. Lowe.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Charles E. Lowe, who was a private in Company F, Thirty-seventh Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service and to have served "honest and faithful," as noted on his original discharge certificate.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "service," insert "February 12, 1900, and to have received the gunshot wound in right hand in line of duty."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK of Texas: In line 11, after the word "certificate," strike out the period, insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That no back pay, pension, or allowance shall accrue prior to the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GUSTAV E. HOFFMANN

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7921) to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to dispose by sale of certain public land in the State of Arkansas.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RAGON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask some one about this bill.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I can explain the bill. This is a bill for the relief of a drug clerk in Peoria, Ill., who bought this land in 1913. It seems they made some mistake, and the General Land Office discovered that this tract had been erroneously posted in their tract book, and, in fact, a patent had never been issued by the Government to the State. So another person settled on it, and he has paid the taxes up to the present time. He is broke and has not anything except what he has invested here.

Mr. RAGON. Would the gentleman object to letting this bill go over without prejudice? I will explain to the gentleman why I ask that. The bill was called to my attention just immediately before we went on with the Private Calendar by my colleague, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Wingo]. We had the Land Office called up to locate it. In the meantime the gentleman was called away from the Chamber, and I told him if it was in my district I would investigate the matter; and if it was agreeable, I would not object to it. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Wingo] asked me to object to it if he was not here and the bill came up, if the land happened to be in his district. When we were called on the phone by the Land Office we found it was in one of the counties in the gentleman's district. We looked for the gentleman who is the author of the bill, and we likewise looked for the gentleman from Arkansas, who is a member of this committee—

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. I have been here all the afternoon, and I would like very much to have the bill go through now.

Mr. RAGON. I regret very much I am under the obligation of objecting to the bill. I regret very much I am in that attitude, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Although I have been very busy, I have been watching this case to-day, because I know the circumstances of this poor fellow. The bill ought to be passed. Will the gentleman let it go over without prejudice? I am sure the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Wingo] will not object to it after I talk with him.

Mr. RAGON. I have no objection to that, and I shall not object to it the next time it comes up.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may go over without prejudice, retaining its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE DAVIS CONSTRUCTION CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4156) for the relief of the Davis Construction Co.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, a similar Senate bill (S. 124) is on the calendar, and I ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, under such regulations as he may prescribe, to receive fully itemized and verified claims and reimburse the Davis Construction Co., contractor for the Post Office Department Equipment Shops Building, erected at Fifth and W Streets NE., Washington,

D. C., under the supervision of the Postmaster General, for lesser due directly to increased costs due either, first, to increased cost of labor and materials, or, second, to delay on account of the action of the United States Priority Board or other governmental activities, or, third, to commandeering by the United States Government of plants or materials shown to the Secretary of the Treasury to have been sustained by it in the fulfillment of such contract by reason of war conditions alone. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to submit from time to time estimates for appropriations to carry out the provisions of this act: Provided, That no claim for such reimbursement shall be paid unless filed with the Treasury Department within three months after the passage of this act: And provided further, That in no case shall the contractor be reimbursed to an extent greater than is sufficient to cover its actual increased cost in fulfilling its contract, exclusive of any and all profits to such contractor: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress at the beginning of each session thereof the amount of each expenditure and the facts on which the same is based.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The bill H. R. 4516 was laid on the table.

LEVIN P. KELLY

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 831) for the relief of Levin P. Kelly.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERHILL. There is a similar Senate bill (S. 2111) on the calendar, and I ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill (S. 2111), as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $6,000 to Levin P. Kelly, owner and captain of the schooner John Bradley, which was sunk on the 25th day of July, 1922, by Government launch No. 1, of the United States Naval Academy, through the negligence of the Government.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The bill H. R. 831 was laid on the table.

C. B. WELLS

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 965) for the relief of C. B. Wells.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BEEDY. Reserving the right to object, how much was there involved in this transaction, how much steel was there? Mr. MORROW. It was the sale of some ore property.

Mr. BEEDY. How many tons of steel was there in the original sale? Is there anyone here that can give the information?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. This bill was introduced by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JEFFERS], who is unable to be here this afternoon on account of a surgical operation that his wife is to undergo.

Mr. BEEDY. I will ask that the bill be passed without prejudice.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Just let me say this only involves the small sum of $132.89.

Mr. BEEDY. This sale was made under the law and conditions which provided that the goods were sold "as is and where is." It seems that if there was not much of an amount of money involved in this sale it was small peanuts to come in and ask us to make up this $132. If there was four or five hundred dollars involved, it would be 20 per cent, but if the purchase amount was five or ten thousand dollars' worth, it would make a difference. I think the man ought to stand by the terms of the sale under the law and take his medicine.

Mr. UNDERHILL. It makes no difference whether it was a million dollars or a hundred dollars, the principle is the same. They bought a certain amount of steel and there is no question that they did not receive what they ought to have. There was a shortage in the amount delivered to him, and it is so acknowledged by the department and by those who handled the whole transaction. Consequently, if the Government owes him $132, it ought to pay him as a matter of principle and matter of right, not because it is a small amount or a large amount.

Mr. MADDEN. I recall a case a short time ago where a man bought a lot of Liberty motors of the War Department and the motors would not work after they got them. They tried to get them to exchange for motors that would work and they would not do it. That transaction involved many thousands of dollars. If the Government can not exchange a thing that would not work for something that would work after they sold it, what justice is there in having this paid?

Mr. BEEDY. There is nothing in the report to show any shortage. It says there are indications of a shortage. They do not admit or say there is any evidence which is conclusive or otherwise that the property purchased was not in possession of the Government. But, even granting that it was not, the sale of the property was under the law "as is and where is." The report says that a part of the alleged shortage appears to have been admitted. It is only a small matter. Inasmuch as they bought it in an open sale under the law "as is and where is," I think they should stand by it.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. This "as is and where is" applies where the property is in the possession of the Government. This property was not in the possession of the Government. That is the distinction. The property had not been turned over to the Government.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman point out in the report any evidence of that fact?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I think if the gentleman will read the letter of the Comptroller General, he will find it.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me? I made the report, and I ought to know something about it.

Mr. BEEDY. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that that suggestion is not necessary. All of these bills retain their places on the calendar.

Mr. UNDERHILL. But under the rules of the House one objection on the first call of the calendar must be followed upon the second call of the calendar by three objections.

The SPEAKER. That applies only to the Consent Calendar. An objection to-day in the consideration of this calendar is merely tantamount to a statement that the House refuses to consider the bill at this time. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CHARLES C. HUGHES

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1464) for the relief of Charles C. Hughes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPROUL] a question. This bill is for the relief of Charles C. Hughes?

Mr. SPROUL of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. The circumstances appear to warrant the relief, if the amount is correct. However, the report is not very clear on the loss of time. The largest item is for $516 to cover the loss of time, but the report does not show what employment this man was following.

Mr. SPROUL of Illinois. He has made an affidavit that he was employed. I can not say positively what amount of salary he was drawing. I do know from the evidence that I got that if he had had a chance to bring the suit in the courts he would probably have obtained $10,000 instead of the claim that they are making here.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I am not questioning the merits of the claim, except to speak of the proof, which is not very full on the point of the amount of salary he was drawing at the time he was hurt.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Of course, the committee has to take an affidavit as being a fact.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. He could have stated what employment he was engaged in. There is nothing at all in the report to show what this man was doing at the time that he was injured.

Mr. SPROUL of Illinois. Oh, he was crossing the street.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I mean the employment that he was engaged in.

Mr. UNDERHILL. We gave the claimant nothing for his sufferings, nothing for any subsequent injury which may possibly develop. We gave him only $709 for his loss of time for the few weeks he was in the hospital and for his medical expenses.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I am not going to object, because I understand the great amount of work which the Committee on Claims has to do and am not disposed to be unduly critical, but I merely call attention to the fact that this affidavit is not as clear as ought to be submitted in these reports.

Mr. UNDERHILL. That is a fact; but if the man had been out of employment or out of work for a long period of time, the bill, among others, would have been submitted to the Workmen's Compensation Board, and they would have stated the amount that he would have been entitled to under their rules and regulations; but considering the fact that we gave him nothing at all for his suffering and nothing at all in case further complications developed from the injury, we thought it only fair to allow him the full amount he claimed for loss of services, as sworn to in the affidavit.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that it is the policy of the committee, where there is no legal liability as in cases of this kind, simply as a matter of charity to compensate these claimants?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Not at all.

Mr. BEEDY. The gentleman is cognizant of the report of the Secretary of War that in these cases there is absolutely no liability whatever.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Absolutely. I stood for an hour or more on the floor of this House the other day and called attention to the iniquity of this system, the injustices of it, and I still proclaim with all the strength that there is in me that the great Government of the United States should not quibble over legal liability, an inheritance of archaic principles.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of objection, because in view of what the gentleman states, the amount is probably reasonable.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Charles C. Hughes the sum of $1,041 on account of injury sustained by the said Charles C. Hughes when struck by a United States Army truck as he was crossing Sixty-second Street at Stony Island Avenue, in the city of Chicago, Ill., on the 6th day of December, 1921.

With the following committee amendments:

Line 5, after the word "appropriated," insert "in full settlement against the Government," and in line 6 strike out "$1,041" and insert in lieu thereof "$709.86."

The committee amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

The SPEAKER. Before proceeding to the consideration of the next bill on the Private Calendar the Chair desires to make a statement in regard to the reference of the bill (S. 2996) to validate payments for the commutation of quarters, heat, light, and of rental allowances on account of dependents. A similar House bill has been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. This Senate bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The Chair consulted with the chairmen of both committees, and the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, to which the bill was referred, has no objection to its rereference to the Committee on Military Affairs. The bill is rereferred accordingly.

LUTHER H. PHIPPS

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1540) for the relief of Luther H. Phipps.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem, in favor of Luther H. Phipps, of Seattle, Wash., United States coupon bonds Nos. 17938 and 53420 in the denomination of $1,000 each, of the 4 per cent funded loan of 1907, with interest thereon at the rate of 4 per cent per annum from October 1, 1905, to July 2, 1907, the date of the maturity of the bonds, without presentation of said bonds or the coupons representing interest thereon from October 1, 1905, to July 2, 1907, which are alleged to have been lost or stolen: Provided, That the said bonds shall not have been previously presented for payment, and that no payment shall be made hereunder for any coupons which shall have been previously presented and paid: And provided further, That the said Luther H. Phipps shall first file in the Treasury Department a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the bonds and the interest which had accrued thereon when the principal became due and payable, in such form and with such sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury, to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the alleged lost or stolen bonds hereinbefore described or the coupons belonging thereto.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NEFFS' BANK, OF M'BRIDE, MICH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1669) for the relief of Neffs' Bank, of McBride, Mich. The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I suggest the amendment be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent the amendment be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem in favor of Neffs' Bank, of McBride, Mich., United States Treasury certificates of indebtedness payable to bearer, Nos. 51828 and 51829, in the denomination of $1,000 each, series IV-D, dated August 6, 1918, called for redemption November 21, 1918, and matured December 5, 1918, with interest from August 6, 1918, to November 21, 1918, at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum, without presentation of the said certificates of indebtedness, which have been lost, stolen, or destroyed: Provided, That the said certificates of indebtedness shall not have been previously presented for payment: And provided further, That the said Neffs' Bank, of McBride, Mich., shall first file in the Treasury Department of the United States a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal of the said certificates of indebtedness and the interest which had accrued when the certificates were called for redemption, in such form and with such surety or sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury, to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the lost, stolen, or destroyed certificates of indebtedness hereinbefore described.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the Clerk will correct an error in spelling. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A MOTION TO ADJOURN

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, it is Saturday afternoon and some of the Members would like to get home, and I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not make that motion. The Private Calendar is a long one and we do not have many opportunities to consider it, and certainly there are enough Members here interested in these bills on the calendar and others to warrant the House remaining in session some little time longer.

Mr. BLANTON. This is late enough on Saturday afternoon, and we are going to have another day next week.

Mr. WOODRUFF. It may be late enough for the gentleman from Texas, but a few of the rest of us are satisfied to stay here and work some time longer.

Mr. BLANTON. I am here all the time.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I know.

Mr. BEEDY. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan that a number of Members have come here and asked that that motion be made at 4 o'clock and I have allowed it to run now 15 minutes longer, and I understand that before this session is over there will be ample opportunity to cover the entire calendar.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I hope so.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman withhold his motion so that I may submit a request?

Mr. BEEDY. Certainly, I withhold the motion.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not see the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] on the floor just now, but he understood I was going to submit a request that on next Thursday immediately after the reading of the Journal and disposition of business on the Speaker's table that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] should have permission to address the House for 35 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that on next Thursday after the reading of the Journal and disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] may have permission to address the House for 35 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Upon what subject?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Upon appropriation measures, I think. Now, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that I have mentioned the name of the gentleman from Connecticut, I want to say I do not mean to leave the impression that the gentleman exactly agreed to that, though he did not object to it and knew that request was going to be made. I will say this, that the matter may stand as it is now, and if the gentleman from Connecticut finds he should object to it on Monday I will ask to rescind the permission, but I do not think he will object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, Mr. BULWINKLE was granted leave of absence for seven days on account of serious illness in family.

ADJOURNMENT

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine moves that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned to meet to-morrow, Sunday, April 18, 1926, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. TILSON submitted the following tentative list of committee hearings scheduled for April 19, 1926, as reported to the floor leader by clerks of the several committees:

COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

(10.30 a. m.)

A bill relating to the Office of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital (H. R. 6568).

COMMITTEE ON PATENTS

(9.30 a. m.)

To amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyright," approved March 4, 1909, as amended, by adding subsection (f) (H. R. 10353). Joint hearing.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

453. A message from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926, pertaining to printing and binding, $82,500 (H. Doc. No. 323); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

454. A message from the President of the United States, transmitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year 1925 and prior years, $46,871.91, and supplemental estimates for the fiscal year 1926, $440,000, in all $486,871.91; also a draft of proposed legislation affecting an existing appropriation (H. Doc. No. 324); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1834. By Mr. SOMERS of New York: Petition of J. Francis Boornem, of New York City, favoring the passage of House bill 8708; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SUNDAY, April 18, 1926

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CURRY.

In the absence of the Chaplain, Rev. Dr. Joseph Dawson, professor of Biblical literature, American University, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, we thank Thee for all Thy goodness to us as individuals and as a nation. We thank Thee for the men whom Thou hast given to enact laws for our Nation, and the example of patriotism that they have given to the world. We pray for the bereaved family. In the days of loneliness, when they long for the touch of a vanished hand and the sound of a voice that is still, do Thou hold them by Thy strong hand and speak comforting words to them, saying, "Fear not, for I am thy God."

When soon or late they reach the coast—
Over life's rough ocean driven,
May none be lost, but all be saved,
A family in Heaven.

Amen.

The reading of the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was dispensed with.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE RAKER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the order of the day.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. LEA of California, by unanimous consent,

Ordered, That Sunday, April 18, 1926, at 12 o'clock meridian, be set apart for memorial services on the life, character, and public services of the late Hon. JOHN E. RAKER.

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, I present the following resolutions and ask for their adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 227

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. JOHN E. RAKER, late a Member of this House from the State of California.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of these exercises, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to pay a tribute to our late colleague, Hon. JOHN E. RAKER, and in connection therewith make some comments as to his vision of the future of the United States—his fears and his hopes. Judge RAKER and myself had much in common. He represented a very large district on the Pacific coast in northern California, while I represent also a large district on the Pacific coast in southwestern Washington. Each district is beautiful with rugged snow-capped mountains; magnificent with great evergreen trees; and teeming with active, hopeful, aggressive western American citizens. Each district has needed much local legislation—public-land legislation, forest-reserve legislation, Indian legislation, reclamation and irrigation legislation, and, in fact, all other legislation of the kind that pertains to the true development of the newer part of our country.

When I came to Congress, Hon. Julius Kahn was the dean of the Pacific coast delegation. He had then had 10 years' service. Congressman Kahn died after 20 years' service. The dean of the Pacific coast delegation now is Hon. WILLIS C. HAWLEY, of Oregon, who is in his twentieth year of service. The next ranking Members from the Pacific coast in length of service are Hon. CHARLES F. CURRY, of California; Hon. NICHOLAS SINNOTT, of Oregon; and myself; one from each State and each in his fourteenth year of service. The coast States have found it best not to make frequent changes in congressional membership.

Forty-four Members, including HAWLEY, are now in Congress who have served longer terms than we three from the coast—21 of whom are Democrats and 23 of whom are Republicans. Our coast delegation is so small and our problems so great that we have not often divided along political lines. Hon. HENRY ALLEN COOPER, of Wisconsin, is now the dean of the House, and was at the time of Judge RAKER's death.

Judge RAKER in 1920 visited my home city, Hoquiam, and various cities in my district. I have visited various cities in his district, but did not have time to visit his home town.

Mr. Speaker, Macaulay has described the life of a legislator as a life of hope without realization; labor without accomplishment; devotion to duty without reward.

Such a description did not apply to the late Hon. JOHN E. RAKER. His hopes were realized; he saw much legislation which he had promoted enacted into law. His labors met with accomplishment. He never knew what it meant not to be at work. He never rested on his oars after success. I feel sure that to-day when the Members of this body pay tribute to his memory the central expression will be that he was a worker. His devotion to duty was rewarded, for although he had laid down his life in the service of his country, for he wore himself out, no one can say that he had not the esteem of all his fellow Members during the entire 15 years of his service here; and how few Members of Congress have been returned for term after term without political opposition or personal criticism in their districts!

JOHN E. RAKER came first to the Sixty-second Congress. I came to the Sixty-third Congress. Each of us sought to be placed on the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and we were made members of that committee at an extra session, in the spring of 1913, where we served side by side, long hours, hard work, year in and year out from that time until his last illness. The membership then was—

Immigration and Naturalization: John L. Burnett, of Alabama; Adolph J. Sabath, of Illinois; John A. M. Adair, of Indiana; Henry M. Goldfogle, of New York; James L. Shnyder, of Texas; William A. Oldfield, of Arkansas; John E. Raker, of California; John A. Key, of Ohio; Franklin Brockson, of Delaware; Augustus P. Gardner, of Massachusetts; Everis A. Hayes, of California; J. Hampton Moore, of Pennsylvania; Edwin A. Merritt, Jr., of New York; James Manahan, of Minnesota; and Albert Johnson, of Washington.

The committee had a majority of about 2 for restriction and every member had to be in his seat at every session.

Mr. SABATH of Illinois had been placed on the committee two years ahead of RAKER and myself. SABATH and I are now oldest members of that committee in point of service. What changes in personnel we have seen; what changes in policy.

The late Hon. John Burnett was chairman then, and continued chairman to the end of the Sixty-fifth Congress, in the spring of 1900. Through the war period, the Sixty-third, Sixty-fourth, and Sixty-fifth Congresses had Democratic majorities. RAKER and myself had been lieutenants for Chairman Burnett. Throughout the strain in connection with the several rewritings of what became the immigration act of 1917, which was the Burnett bill, vetoed by President Taft in 1913; rewritten in committee and vetoed by President Wilson; again rewritten, again vetoed by President Wilson; again rewritten and finally passed over the President's veto.

The Sixty-sixth Congress had a Republican majority, and the honorable and responsible position of chairman was given to me. I knew that I could count on RAKER and Burnett as lieutenants. I do not say this in disparagement of the work of the other members, but the membership, except SABATH, was ever-changing, and while Mr. SABATH was not in accord with the restrictive policies which we were determined on, he did then and has ever since given us the benefit of his experience.

But we lost the services of Burnett. Two days before he was to have taken his seat in the Sixty-sixth Congress, which was called to meet May, 1919, he died from shock. A number of bombs had been sent by mail from New York to various prominent persons. One was sent to Burnett. The package was opened in Burnett's home by a negro servant girl, standing a few feet from Burnett. Her hands were blown off. The shock affected Burnett, who died next day. The front of the residence of the then Attorney General, Hon. A. Mitchell Palmer, on S street, in this city, was blown out the same night with an anarchist's bomb.

Our committee had been working on a bill to make more drastic the anarchist exclusion laws of the United States. Soon after we were organized in the Sixty-sixth Congress, we reported what is known as the anarchist exclusion act, which is now act of June 5, 1920. This was the first public act of my incumbency as chairman.

Efforts are made from time to time to amend, weaken, or abolish this piece of legislation. I do not see how a single word can be taken from it. All of the members of the committee worked on it, holding many night sessions. Those then on the committee who are still serving in Congress are SABATH, WILSON of Louisiana, KNUTSON of Minnesota, and VAILE of Colorado.

They will recall the efforts of Judge RAKER to write into that act a distinct definition of international communism and of communists who would destroy the Government by force, so that such red communists might be placed in the excludable and deportable classes of undesirable aliens. Oh, how he labored for that. Every kind of amendment he offered; every kind of definition, in an effort to differentiate the communist who would work with force and violence against government, and against the right to hold property, as different from communists of the type of some of our old New Englanders, who founded community settlements.

I wish now that we had used any one of the definitions which Judge RAKER offered, even at the risk of having Congress assailed as it now is by those international subversives, which charge that the word "anarchist" enacted in our immigration act is nothing but a verbal brickbat.

Gentlemen, on this occasion of tribute to JOHN E. RAKER in these days of rapidly developing subversive movements against the Government of the United States, may I not call on each and every one of you to remember the iron of duty in RAKER's otherwise gentle make-up; to remember the strength with which he stood for his Government, which is our Government, and I ask you to solemnly swear with me that so long as we live this Government shall not be broken down by boring from within, nor wrecked by those who would come among us with impossible political ideas and the dangerous political nostrums of European countries, which have made wrecks of nations and individuals.

Remember that under our form of government, and under our Constitution, we are an ever-changing Government. Ours is a government of law. We think of the changes as the results of the thoughts and the votes of the citizens. But it is not entirely so. Many foreign-language newspapers play a part. Whole congressional districts are beholden—not to the voters but the alien influences of those districts. Our big cities are becoming more and more alien in population and in thought. Most of these aliens are well-intended people, who want to be right in thought and action, but they are susceptible to influence of movements—often led, I am sorry to say, by American citizens—subversive of our Government. Each alien among us plays some part in molding our Government, even if never receiving the right to vote. He is given the right of free speech, but that does not mean the right to preach the overthrow of the Government by force and violence. It never shall mean that. Free press does not mean that. Let those who are getting up communist labor strikes as a vehicle for advocating overthrow of government beware.

Let those who would save and protect and advance this Government be ever watchful.

We, as Representatives in Congress are the instruments through which the people change their Government. What tremendous fundamental changes during the 15 years that JOHN E. RAKER served as an honorable Representative, and during the 13 years I have served.

If we are busy and working under pressure and strain—as we usually are—the days merge one into another, and we do not have time to stop to note the great advantages. One day we vote on some momentous piece of legislation that changes our structure for all time. The next day we vote for an act to add 10 sections to a forest reserve, or to create a national park, or to correct the record of a World War veteran.

O Mr. Speaker, what fundamental changes in the evolution of the United States were made by Congress during the 15 years served by JOHN E. RAKER! I think of these—

1. Direct election of Senators, 1913.
2. Liquid currency system, 1913.
3. Graduated income tax, 1913.
4. Federal interest in organized labor, in interstate commerce, as shown in the Adamson Act, 1916.
5. The draft (exercise of the Government's right to require any man or class of men to serve in time of war. This right, having been tested will be extended whenever necessary to the drafting of capital, labor, and property), 1917.
- I do not include the declaration of war, or the passage of heavy emergency pre-war and war-killing legislation, through many strenuous months, here. War is incidental to the struggles of nations for existence. I am endeavoring to name some of the fundamental advances by law in peace times, not war times. I resume the list as follows:
6. National prohibition, 1919.
7. National women suffrage, 1920.
- JOHN E. RAKER was a leader in each of these movements—
8. Fifty-fifty system of Federal aid to State activities, about 1919.
9. Budget system, 1921.
10. Esch railway regulation and guaranty, 1921.
11. Regulation of aviation, the radio, the telephone, and the moving picture, beginning about 1922, and some still pending.
12. Immigration restriction act, 1924.

This last was a reversal of a policy which had existed from the beginning of our Government. We were an asylum; we are no longer an asylum for very good reasons.

These legislative enactments—there are others, but I have not had the time to search the records—give an idea of how this great free Government of the United States of America—a Government of the people, by the people, and for the people—is ever advancing; how it bends to the voice of the people; how the voice of the people is the voice of God, and why it is to-day the greatest and most successful experiment in Government ever attempted.

But ours is a very young Government. It may go too fast! It may overreach itself! When we have come to be 117,000,000 people we can not move as we did when we were fewer.

The JOHN E. RAKER type of old-fashioned, home-spun American is passing. How many have departed this life since he and I came to Congress!

Champ Clark, who in my opinion should have been called the "commoner," is gone. Former Speaker Clark used to tell me that it required 6 to 10 years to make a good Congressman out of a substantial new Member who was willing to work. His advice was: Take whatever committees to which assigned, do the work there thoroughly, strive for membership on more important committees and more work, learn the rules of procedure, and be always a real member of the Committee of the Whole House.

W. J. Bryan, who should have been called, I think, the "great evangelist of politics," rather than the "great commoner," has passed on; Sereno E. Payne, who had been painted out West as a dreadful devil, has gone. I believe that he did as much as any one man to fix and make sure that a protective tariff is as basic a fundamental of this Government as if it were one of the stones of our actual foundation. The tariff as perfected gave the United States its "industrial revolution," just as the invention of the steam engine and the spinning jenny gave England its "industrial revolution" more than 100 years ago. Our industrial revolution, which was well under way by 1896, enabled us to absorb the immigrants who began to come at the rate of 1,000,000 a year, and made the restriction of immigration a question to be discussed principally from the economic standpoint, rather than that of the future of our Government—the standards of future citizens.

I would not mention the tariff in this memorial address—and what I have said is a matter of history rather than of politics—but for the fact that Mr. RAKER and myself had discussed it many times in connection with immigration. He believed in a tariff. He said that if Canada could sustain permanently a tariff policy, Canada would develop manufactures, and a home market, and that immigrants then would go there, which might relieve the United States from too much immigration coming to the cities—not to the country.

But I had started to mention a few of those whom RAKER and I found here in the Sixty-third Congress, but who are now reaping the last reward of devotion to duty. James R. Mann! What force he gave to Congresses of his day. Perhaps the so-called Mann Act should have been named by me as one of the recent fundamental acts—hardly, I think, fundamental—yet it pointed the way as to what can be done by law in the name of regulation of interstate commerce. Burnett, the little giant of the restrictive immigration movement! Born following the travail of that great War between the States, and, having seen the aftermath of one great race struggle in the United States, he was a restrictionist in the hope that we might never have another. Claude Kitchin, who fell full armored and died for his country as surely as if he had fallen on field of battle. Augustus P. Gardner! What an American he was; what a true patriot! He was a son-in-law of the late Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, who declared before his death that the immigration act of 1924 was the most important piece of legislation enacted in the past 50 years. Lodge is gone. If I undertook to mention the great leaders of the Senate for 13 years past who have passed on and other departed leaders of the House of Representatives, I would not be able to close this speech in another hour; nor can I take time to mention distinguished Senators and Members of the House who have retired and are out of political life but still giving their best efforts to the welfare and future of this Government.

Ah, my colleagues, don't think that because I mention a few of the departed that we now have no strong men in Congress. We have—men of the old school; men and women of the new school. But, my colleagues, the increased membership of the House, the tremendous program of legislation brought about by the centralization of Government, by the extension of commissions (which are the arms of Congress, and quickly become more powerful than the body that gave them birth), together with the great aftermath of legislation made necessary by the World War—all these things require more actual intensive labor, more varied noncoordinated work, with less time for forensic effort in the Halls of Congress than in the days when JOHN E. RAKER came from the Golden West to give his best efforts for the district that sent him, for his State, and for his Government.

Mr. Speaker and my colleague, now let me pay my most sincere and earnest personal tribute to our departed colleague, JOHN E. RAKER. To him we owe much for his continuous effort that brought about the final steps in the efforts of the United States to establish finally and completely the policy that: Those persons ineligible to citizenship shall be inadmissible for permanent residence.

What a perfect blending of the words of a Supreme Court decision with words from the Constitution. It was Congressman RAKER who kept that idea alive in our committee.

JOHN E. RAKER had another great conception for our future homogeneity and safety, which had he lived might have been brought to fruition.

After the immigration act of 1924 had been signed by President Coolidge on May 26, 1924, JOHN E. RAKER said to me about as follows: JOHNSON, one other change will be necessary to carry out the policy which the fathers of our Government intended. Early in congressional action—about 1803—they provided that persons who might be naturalized should be "free white" persons. The war of 1861 to 1865 made a change necessary. Following the adoption of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments, Congress amended the naturalization laws to read as follows:

SEC. 2169. The provisions of this title shall apply to aliens being free white persons; and to aliens of African nativity and to persons of African descent. (R. S. 1878, p. 380; 1 Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1833.)

Now that the quota act is permanent legislation, and restriction and selection is here for as long as this Government shall endure, Judge RAKER believed that an amendment would be needed to that section of the naturalization law. He said that under the quota law no Africans will come from Africa. We have 11,000,000 negroes in our population. They need protection. He declared that we should go back as a base for naturalization to the words our fathers gave us:

Those who may be naturalized shall be white persons.

Judge RAKER and all members of the committee foresaw at the time of the passage of the 1924 act the situation that would be brought about by immigration from Mexico.

Congress must adjust that situation, the quicker the better. It will be a great task. It will take time.

And then, perhaps, some of the younger Members who shall be here in future Congresses may give thought and study to the last legislative idea of JOHN E. RAKER in the hope that as our population increases it may be as nearly as possible homogeneous—one race, one people, one language—for the enjoyment in the fullest measure of the benefits of a free government.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, one of the first Members of Congress whom I met when I entered this body at the beginning of the Sixty-third Congress was the late Hon. JOHN E. RAKER, of California, whose character and public service we memorialize on this occasion. To me the duty which the hour imposes is a labor of love and I avail myself of this opportunity to pay my tribute to his noble attributes of mind and heart.

I was attracted to him by his genial and gracious manner, and instinctively felt that we would soon be good friends. When the committees were appointed I was pleased to learn that we were on two important committees, where we served side by side until the opening of the present Congress, when I was pained to learn that he was too ill to attend the sessions.

It was also my good fortune to enjoy his companionship on a European trip during the spring of 1919, and of a trip to California in 1923, and through his own district last summer, which afforded me an opportunity to know him probably as intimately as any one in this House, as my impressions were formed by constant association over a long period of years, and under varied circumstances. His death, therefore, was a deep personal loss to me, for I feel that I have lost, not only a loved colleague and delightful companion, but a dear friend.

The career of JUDGE RAKER, like that of many who have become prominent in public, professional, and commercial life, is an inspiration to the young men of the country, for his early life was surrounded by many handicaps incident to lack of advantages which might have been avoided had he possessed ample means. He literally carved success out of an environment that offered few opportunities for advancement, because of his industry, initiative, and a determination to win. He was early recognized in northern California as an able and astute young lawyer and soon won a high place in his profession. He was later elevated to the bench, in which capacity he made a splendid record. In 1910 he was elected to the Congress of the United States and was reelected to each succeeding Congress by increasing majorities.

When traveling in his district last summer I conversed with many of his constituents regarding his work in Congress who, regardless of party, expressed their admiration of him as their Representative, as a citizen, and as a friend and neighbor. In every city, town, and hamlet we visited the people thronged to meet him, and to welcome him and his devoted wife on their return from the Nation's Capital.

Judge RAKER's strongest characteristic was his devotion to duty. He appreciated the honor and responsibility of representing a large constituency in the Congress of the United States, and he was ever on the alert to advance their interests and to see that their right to consideration was not disregarded.

He worked early and late in his office, and was always punctual in attendance upon the sessions of committees and the House; and denied himself the diversions which are so necessary to good health. He was so strong and rugged in health that he seemed unconscious of the fact that he was impairing his strength by hard work and long hours of application. A few years ago he moved to an apartment within one square of the Capitol, in order, as he stated to me, that he could return to the office conveniently after the close of the day to meet the demands upon his time.

I remonstrated frequently against his close application to his work and especially his return to the office in the evening, but he insisted that he must inform himself on the many public questions coming before the House in order that he could better serve his constituents, his State, and the country.

Judge RAKER was a deep student of public affairs, and his illustrious ability and his indomitable industry enabled him to inform himself on every question which came up for consideration in the committees and on the floor of the House.

He possessed marvelous discernment and could interpret legislation with the greatest ease, and quickly discover any incongruities or inconsistencies therein, or with existing statutes, which, with his familiarity with parliamentary practice made him one of the most useful and valuable Members of the House.

As a logical and forceful speaker Judge RAKER had few equals. He had the courage of his convictions, and availed himself of every proper occasion to express them. The world is better because of such a life, and our work here will be better performed by the inspiration of the memory of his virtues and his splendid service to his constituency, his State, and our country.

Truly a good man has left us. In private life he was upright and pure; in public life he was faithful to every trust.

I can not say—I will not say—
That he is dead. He is only away.
With a cheery smile and a wave of the hand
He has wandered into an unknown land
And left us dreaming. How very fair
It needs must be, since he lingers there.
And you—oh! you who wildest yearn
For the old time step and glad return—
Think of him faring on, as dear
In the love there as the love here.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I am indeed grateful to the California delegation as well as to the membership of the House for being permitted to pay my respects to-day to the memory of one of the hardest-working and most sincere Members of this House, Hon. JOHN E. RAKER. I have known Mr. RAKER ever since he entered the House. During my 20 years of service in the House I have known a great many hard-working and sincere men, but I do not know of a single Member with whom I have had the pleasure to serve who was more devoted to duty or who possessed greater courage than JOHN E. RAKER.

I regret that I could not always agree with him on some matters of legislation which he advocated, but I know that he was honest and sincere in the things that he did advocate. Men will differ, and I reserved the right to differ with him and he reserved the right to differ with me on some questions, and in view of the fact that it has already been mentioned by the distinguished gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] I am frank to say that the questions on which we disagreed were the questions of immigration and prohibition. Outside of those two questions we agreed on all the other matters. He was a progressive Democrat, a progressive man, who was trying to his utmost to serve the country and the people.

As a great many other men have been, he seemed unduly alarmed in respect to the future of our Nation, especially during the war. When we were forced into the war he was very apprehensive in respect to the foreign or alien element in the United States, but after the war, after he had noticed the thousands and thousands of these aliens who offered their lives to the country, enlisting, waiving their exemption rights, he began to realize and appreciate that even these men possessed the elements of loyalty and patriotism much more than he had formerly thought they could. Outside of the two questions which I have mentioned it was my good fortune to agree with Mr. RAKER and cooperate with him on nearly all other matters. He was active and courageous, as I have said, and I feel that the House and the country and his State have lost in him an extremely valuable Member of the House.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, among the most pleasant and valuable associations afforded me since becoming a Member of the Congress have been those resulting from my service on the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and this has been equally true of the service under the late John L. Burnett, chairman under the Democratic administration, and under the guidance of the present chairman, Hon. ALBERT JOHNSON, of the State of Washington. The late JOHN E. RAKER was a member of this important committee at the time I was assigned to it at the beginning of my service in Congress, and he remained one of its leading members until he was called to his last reward.

This committee gives an unusual opportunity in a peculiar way to test the industry, diligence, and strength of a Member of the American Congress, to get the lines and angles of his sympathies, and to try out his willingness and ability to take the path of duty to his country and go unflinchingly forward when the distress and heartaches of suffering humanity, pictured with impelling force by the skill and eloquence of artists, would point and lead the other way.

The record of JOHN E. RAKER on this committee, as in this House, was one of courage, determination, and diligence. He eagerly grasped every opportunity for service to his district, State, and country, and spared no effort to make that service effective. He was a polished gentleman, open, frank, and direct at all times and in all things. As a friend and associate he was thoughtful, kind, and indulgent.

In his public career he was tenacious of his opinions; but he had the right to be, because they were formed after painstaking and diligent research. By incessant and untiring labor and the systematic collection of facts he was able to defend his position against all attacks. JOHN E. RAKER had the courage of his convictions and was a fearless advocate of truth and justice.

On November 21, 1889, our deceased colleague was married to Iva G. Spencer, daughter of Judge E. V. Spencer. Their home and family life was impressively beautiful. Here was the center of his happiness and devotion. He will be glad for us to say that in no limited measure were the successes and honors coming to him due to the assistance and counsel of this noble woman. She was truly his partner and the faithful and vigilant attendant during his illness and suffering. As he fearlessly approached the closing scenes of this life he might well have said:

Let no impatient mourner stand
In hollow sadness near my bed,
But let me rest upon the hand,
And let me hear the gentle tread
Of her whose kindness long ago
And still, unworn away by years,
Has made my weary eyelids flow
With grateful and admiring tears.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen of the House, we have met here to-day to pay our respects to the memory of a distinguished Member of this body—Hon. JOHN E. RAKER, of the State of California. Mr. RAKER was first elected to Congress in the election of 1910, and had he served out the term for which he was last elected he would have represented his district in Congress for 16 years.

I had the pleasure, and I may say the honor, of meeting Mr. RAKER for the first time when the Sixty-second Congress was convened by President Taft in special session in April, 1911, 15 years ago this present month.

It is indeed one of the greatest honors that can be conferred upon an American citizen to elect him to represent his district in the House of Representatives. It is the greatest legislative body in all the world, because it is the law-making body of the greatest Government on this earth, and not only that, but it is the greatest Government that has ever been established since the beginning of time. Not only is it a very great honor to serve in this body, but it is indeed a very great privilege. We meet here, gentlemen, and of late years ladies, too, who come from every section of the Republic. We form friendships and associations which bind us close together and which will remain with us as long as we shall live.

Long years ago, in a discussion of the chief characteristics of a gentleman, it was said they are—

High erected thoughts seated in a heart of courtesy.

Down through the ages these words have come; they are as true to-day as when first spoken. The soul of JOHN E. RAKER was at all times filled with "high erected thoughts" and his heart was full of love and courtesy for all mankind. Mr. RAKER began at once to actively look after every interest in the district he represented and his faithfulness and his fidelity to all his constituents and to all that Western country so impressed itself upon the people, that notwithstanding, he was a Democrat and continued in that faith to his death, he has been elected for the last three elections with the indorsement of the opposing party—indeed, a very great honor to be conferred upon any man.

In the Sixty-second Congress, there were 127 gentlemen who, along with our esteemed colleague, Mr. RAKER, came into the House of Representatives. I would like to detail briefly the story of those 127, who began their national legislative careers during that Congress:

Of that number there are only 11 of us who are Members of this House at the present time. Thirty-four of them have crossed the dark river and gone to their reward. A number of them have had preferment and are now serving in other places of distinction. One of them, as I recall, is now serving his people with honor as governor of a great State; another has served his State as governor and has now retired to private life.

Five have been elected to seats in the Senate of the United States, and are now serving their States with honor and distinction in that great body. One of those 127, I am pleased to say, has had the very great distinction of being nominated by his party as its candidate for the highest office in the gift of the American people. Three of them, as I recall, are located here in Washington, where they hold positions of trust. Some have gone into Foreign Service and, of course, a very large number have retired from public life.

I also want to recall here to-day the service rendered by our distinguished colleague in the committees of Congress upon which he has served. When one becomes a Member of Congress it is customary to assign him to those committees for which he is best fitted, or which have to do with those things about which he is best advised. When our colleague was placed upon Public Lands, Immigration and Naturalization, Irrigation and Reclamation, it was an ideal selection, for the West was particularly interested in these subjects. Mr. RAKER was particularly well equipped for service upon these committees. He remained upon them during his entire service and was a most faithful and efficient member of each.

He was an earnest and devout advocate of woman suffrage, and when the Committee on Woman Suffrage was created he was made chairman and held that position during the remainder of his service here. He had much to do with the passage of the woman suffrage amendment, and I know throughout the length and breadth of this land he will be honored and remembered by the good women of America.

I had the honor of serving with him upon the Committee on Public Lands. There were 22 of us who gathered around the table when that committee first met in the Sixty-second Congress. Upon that committee Mr. RAKER served during his entire term. Of the 22 who were members upon that committee at that time, there are remaining in the House only two of us, the gentleman from Colorado, Mr. TAYLOR, and myself. One other gentleman, who was then a member of that committee is serving with honor and distinction in the Senate, the Hon. JOE T. ROBINSON, who was at that time chairman of the Committee on Public Lands.

I mention these facts merely to show how rapidly changes take place in the personnel of the House and its various committees.

During my two years of service on the Committee on Public Lands, I had the opportunity of observing the work done by Mr. RAKER, and to note how earnestly he represented the needs not only of his own district but of all that great western country. Rarely was it that our committee met that Mr. RAKER did not present some matter of interest to his own people and urge its recommendation by the committee.

Mr. RAKER did not confine his work in Congress alone to the committee upon which he served. Just a few days ago as I sat in the committee room of the Committee on Agriculture, I reached up and took from one of the shelves a copy of the hearings of the committee taken in the days gone by. As I examined this volume I found it to be the hearings taken in 1916. At that time our committee brought in the appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture, and this volume was the hearings on the 1916 appropriation bill. I casually opened it and as I did so I saw the name of our distinguished colleague, JOHN E. RAKER, who was appearing before that committee urging with his usual vehemence an appropriation of money to protect the livestock of the western country from the ravages of predatory animals. I mention this to show you that there was not a single solitary interest in the whole western country that he was not alive to, and which he did not, along with his other associates from that section, protect and defend.

I very much regret that circumstances over which I had no control, prevented me from joining with my colleagues who were designated to escort his remains to their last resting place. JOHN E. RAKER has gone to his reward, and those of us who have had the honor of serving with him through all these years, as well as all the Members who have served with him, will honor and revere his memory.

Mr. ROUSE. Mr. Speaker, JOHN E. RAKER and I entered Congress at the same time. We were elected in 1910 and took the oath of office on the same day, the 4th day of April, 1911, at a special session of Congress called by a proclamation of President Taft. At this time 118 new Members of Congress were elected, and until this time, this was the largest class of new Members in the history of the Congress. Just for a moment, consider the change in the membership of the House of Representatives. There are now only seven men left in that class; however, there are four Members of the present Congress who were elected in 1910 but have been absent for one or more terms.

From the time I met Judge RAKER in one of the Washington hotels almost immediately after his arrival to enter upon the duties as a Congressman, and until his death, I considered him one of my very best friends in Congress.

Soon after he entered Congress he won the admiration and confidence of his colleagues. He was a splendid Representative, a student, and a ready and forceful speaker.

I often sat with him during the sessions of the House, and very frequently when I had inquiries regarding matters affecting the immigration laws of our country or matters pending in Congress and before his Committee on Immigration, I would consult him to get his views, and always found him ready and willing to give what I afterwards learned to be the proper advice. He and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BOX] were my principal guides on matters of immigration.

He was an untiring worker for his constituents; considered by all who knew him to be one of the real energetic and conscientious representatives of the people. His place on the Immigration Committee of the House will be hard to fill; not only did he represent the people of his congressional district on this committee, but he represented a vast majority of all the citizens of the United States. I know he was held in the highest esteem by the people of the district which I have the honor to represent for his faithful work in behalf of the immigration laws which were passed during his service in the House, and I doubt if he was ever in my district or had ever had the pleasure of meeting any of my constituents except those whom it was my honor to introduce to him. If the personnel of the Immigration Committee of the House and Senate were always made up of the caliber of Judge RAKER, the Members of Congress would be relieved of answering many letters of inquiry from their constituents who favor restricted immigration legislation, our citizenship would be constantly improved, and our institutions be safely guarded.

Judge RAKER also held prominent assignments on the Committee of Irrigation and Reclamation and on the Committee on the Public Lands. When his labors here ended and for many years before, he was the ranking man on the Public Lands Committee. It was his incessant and studious labors on these two committees which greatly benefited not only his district and his State but the entire great western part of this Republic. When I was in California and visited two of the great cities of that State, I met with men who were loud in their praise of the work of this statesman. One gentleman, a member of the Chamber of Commerce of the City of San Francisco, stated to me that he had never known a man to represent a district from California in the House of Representatives, whose service was of more benefit to the entire State of California than those of Judge RAKER.

His home and his district was in the northeastern part of the State yet his efforts and his accomplishments were appreciated in every section of that great sovereign State which he loved so well. From the words of praise which I heard from the many citizens of his State, I believe he would have been honored with any office in the gift of his people.

JOHN E. RAKER has been called to his reward to that "house of many mansions."

If we would recall the example he set as a man, a statesman and a friend, stop and ponder, we would become better for the life he lived.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Speaker, and gentlemen of the House, within the limited time that circumstances now permit it is impossible to assemble and present all of the strong points in the life of a man like JOHN E. RAKER. It is impossible to present fully an appreciation of his services, even the cardinal features of them. I rise to express my appreciation of two or three phases of his life and work. I was associated with Mr. RAKER on the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization from the beginning of the Sixty-sixth Congress until his death. I found him with definite, settled convictions, settled purposes. I found him continuing, unchanging in the course which he adopted. I came to appreciate him very much on that account.

Another thing that I observed with great admiration in connection with Judge RAKER's public service was the place he held in the esteem of his own people. Men talk about politics as if it were something discreditable in a man to understand and serve his people and maintain their confidence. It is generally recognized that a business man must keep in touch with his trade, and that every other man who serves the public must cultivate the good will of his people and continuously have their support, but men sometimes speak of those of us who serve the public as if it were discreditable for us to understand our people, for us to continuously maintain their good will. That is a necessary qualification for a man who serves the public. The man who does not do it does not serve at all, and if, by any mischance he did serve, he would be a failure. The man who does not understand his people, and who in turn does not make himself understood by them, can not long continue to represent them. I do not know how the idea got into American public life that public service and ability to understand and to continue to serve the people involves even a shade of discredit. Such an idea is born of shallow thinking and silly talk.

This attitude and propaganda supporting it are based on inability or unwillingness to discriminate between cunning tricksters and public servants who have tact and talent to enable them to understand and interpret the public will and needs. Such tact and talent are indispensably requisite to a representative government. Without men who understand public questions and know how to deal with the public there can be no constitutional, representative government. People who believe in the Constitution and the system it has established should not, through ignorance of what it involves, promote a state of the public mind which would destroy it. Men who do not believe in free representative government may consistently deride the necessary constitutional processes of winning and holding popular support of men and measures, but people who understand and love the rule of the popular will can not.

The fundamental thing that enables a man to maintain the confidence and support of his people is the deserving of that confidence and support. There are deceptions and miscarriages, of course, but not for long will a man hold the prevailing good will, the hearty support of his constituents, unless in the course of years they recognize that there is in him that which is expressive of the best that is in them, that on which they can depend. When a man has continued to hold the confidence and support of such a constituency as Judge RAKER had, if I had no other standard by which to test his life, I would know that there was sterling worth in his character and substantial value in his services.

I had the pleasure of visiting several parts of the district he represented. The majority of the citizenship of the district, I think, were of an opposing faith, and yet he continued, as you have been told, to represent that great district, with its great middle class, high class, American citizenship. I saw how heartily the people of his own party and of the Republican Party supported him, not as a matter of form, but it appeared in the manner in which they greeted him. The good will and confidence of people of both parties found spontaneous, continuous expression wherever opportunity for its expression was presented.

Gentlemen and dear lady, if I shall have the privilege of serving my people and the Nation as long as Judge RAKER did, if I can live in the recollection and esteem of my colleagues and have myself and in those who know me a knowledge of the fact that the people who have trusted me, who conferred this honor upon me, have had an ever-increasing confidence in me as the years have come and gone—if I have that privilege, I shall be glad to leave it to my children and my friends as a heritage well worth having.

Mr. VAILE. My acquaintance with JOHN E. RAKER did not cover quite as long a period as that of some of my colleagues, but it was long enough to give me an opportunity for full appreciation of him as a man and a legislator.

And it was rather an intensive acquaintance, on its professional side, because for six years I served on two committees with that most industrious Congressman. Those committees, Immigration and Naturalization, and Public Lands, were exceedingly active during all of that time.

The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization passed the 1920 amendments to the exclusion act, the two acts for the percentage restriction of immigration, and the act for the separate citizenship of married women. This legislation marked a complete change in the traditional policy of our Government on a matter as vital to the Republic as any that has ever been considered by this Congress, a matter that goes to the determination of what shall be the blood of this Nation through all the centuries to come.

The Committee on the Public Lands during this period considered and secured the passage of the oil-leasing bill, involving a change in our former policy with regard to the use of the natural resources of the public domain, many bills relating to the landed and mineral wealth of the United States and a great mass of private and local bills. That committee ranks very high in volume of work transacted, standing next, I believe, to Claims and Pensions in the number of bills referred to and considered by it.

I might add that I served with him on a special joint committee of the two Houses of Congress to investigate matters growing out of the old Northern Pacific land grants. Several members of that joint committee are now dead—Senator Spencer, our late colleague Mr. Williams, of Michigan, and our Judge RAKER. The hearings of that joint committee for its one year's work now comprise some three thousand printed pages, and all of that great mass of testimony is sprinkled with his searching, studious questions.

The changes in national policy involved in the work of the two committees which I have mentioned were changes incident to the growth of the country, changes necessitated by an altering ratio between population and resources, changes requiring a long look into the future. In this work JOHN E. RAKER incessantly labored in a broad, constructive, statesmanlike manner.

Mr. Speaker, it is in the daily grind of duty, rather than in the flash of conspicuous moments, that a man's real quality appears. The Congressman who is genuinely useful to his constituents and to the country is not so much the man of brilliance as the man of steadiness, not so much the orator as the worker. JOHN E. RAKER was, indeed, an effective debater, though his effectiveness lay rather in his earnestness and his manifest sincerity, his vigor and virility, and the sense of personal conviction which he conveyed to his auditors, than in any attempt at rhetorical finish. As a speaker he was rough and ready. But he was ready in any situation, and his readiness came from plain, faithful, plugging, hard work.

He was as industrious as any man whom I have ever been my fortune to know. There was hardly a single day during the sessions of Congress for the six years of my association with him when one or the other of his committees was not in session. Very often indeed they were both in session on the same day. He attended every meeting of each of those committees except when their hours were in actual conflict, and even then he would contrive to keep in touch with both.

JOHN RAKER knew all the details of every bill pending before each of those committees. He made it his business to study every bill and to arrive at an intelligent conclusion supported by definite reasons, as to its merits or demerits. He always had his amendments ready and presented them cogently and thoroughly.

JOHN RAKER'S creed was the performance of duty. He took duty as it came, cheerfully, willingly, and tirelessly. I think it would no more have occurred to him to slight a task than to commit a crime. Indeed, to his mind, the two things were about synonymous. No task was so large as to dismay him, none so small as to incur his neglect.

I believe that the records of both those committees will show that Judge RAKER attended more sessions of each than any other Member except the chairman—and that is no small tribute in view of the very conscientious personnel of both those bodies. Often I have seen him come in loaded with law reports to fortify his argument on the matter under discussion. Time and again I have known him to spend the luncheon hour at the law library preparing himself, not with food, but with citations, for an afternoon session.

The pertinacity which was one of JOHN RAKER'S outstanding characteristics was sometimes irritating to his colleagues, but when that man got through with a proposition nothing had been overlooked.

JOHN RAKER had one quality which I often thought made his way more difficult for him. He was constantly seeking not the path of the least, but that of the most resistance. He was constitutionally unable to compromise. I do not mean that he could never be convinced. That did happen now and then, and when he yielded in such cases it would be with a good humor and generosity which warmed the hearts of his colleagues.

He had a warm heart himself, a most lovable and human disposition. He was the devoted husband of a most charming and cultured lady. Wrapped up somewhere with his iron will there was a melting element of almost womanly tenderness and sentiment. He loved his fellow men not theoretically and philosophically but with a lively personal affection.

But when he had made up his mind on a proposition he was set like a rock. You could ride over him by sheer force of votes, but when you got through he was just as solid and just as firm as ever and just as formidable in the next tussle. Defeated many times, he never knew defeat.

Pertinacity, persistence, fidelity, and ceaseless activity—these were the qualities of our departed colleague. He was by nature aggressive rather than defensive, communicative rather than receptive. His virtues were positive, not negative, virtues.

There was nothing passive about the man. His was a restless, active, inquiring, doing mind, sometimes belligerent, always forceful; the kind of mind that always presses home the attack and scorns to feint or parry. And how he did love a good fight!

He sat on the Democratic side of our shadowy dividing line. He was healthily and humanly partisan—vigorously so, because he could not be anything without being vigorous in it. But both sides respected him, both sides loved him, and he belonged to both sides. He nearly always received in his own district the nomination of both parties because he was the kind of a man in whom people have confidence.

He was the kind of a man you would want for a partner or a friend.

And in his big mountainous district of his big, generous State he is remembered as the friend of all the people, regardless of party, as the faithful representative of all and as a stalwart, positive, patriotic American.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, it was not my privilege to serve on any standing committee with our late colleague from California, the Hon. JOHN E. RAKER, but during the seven years I have been a Member of the House I saw much of him on the floor of the House and in Committee of the Whole. Incidentally, the latter organization, to my mind, is of greater importance than is sometimes accredited to it, for, after the standing committees have reported to the House, the Committee of the Whole is the one place where the general membership of the House has an opportunity to influence the final form of our legislative enactment.

I did have an opportunity, early after my arrival in Washington to serve here, to become acquainted with Judge RAKER and his splendid life companion in something of a social way, and I saw some of the sides of his character which were not always displayed in his service on the floor of the House. In personal contact, he was affable, generous, lovable.

It has been said that he was a tenacious and vigorous advocate of the things which received his attention and his support. Let that be said to his credit. No man achieves results in a legislative body or elsewhere without struggle, without contest, without perseverance. If I were to try to give my personal view of his character as displayed in his service in the House, I think I would sum up that impression in the one word "sincerity." I believe Judge RAKER was absolutely sincere. I can not recall an instance when any Member of the House could have had occasion to question or doubt Judge RAKER's own conviction as to the accuracy of any statement which he made—and that is important in this body. When we feel that we can rely upon the sincerity, the good intent, the honesty, the integrity of a fellow member, while we may well disagree with him on questions of policy, we always know that we can contend with him, if that be necessary, upon a safe and equal basis; that the only issue is the true welfare of the people we are here to serve.

He was intensely devoted to his work and to his State and to the great West. The great Pacific coast territory never had a more valiant supporter of its particular interests than it had in our late colleague. We enjoyed his flashes of intensity in debate, his honest determination to achieve success. On this floor there must necessarily be clash of opinion, discussion of policy, and difference in viewpoint—we can not and need not always be in agreement—but one of the pleasant recollections which I shall carry from the membership in the National House of Representatives will be the personal acquaintance which it has been my opportunity to form with such men as Judge RAKER and other colleagues who have been or are still Members of this body. When they pass away—as did Judge RAKER, much to the surprise of some of us, apparently in the full vigor of activity—we cherish their memories in high regard and deep affection, and, as was the situation in his case, we find many things in their lives, in their records here, in their aspirations and their achievements, which we do well to emulate in the tasks yet remaining for us to do.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, I rarely ever attend the funeral of a close friend. This is the second time in my eight years of service in this body that I have delivered a eulogy upon a departed friend. I rarely attend funerals because I prefer to remember my friends as I saw them in the full vigor of life and robust manhood. No man cherishes the memory and affection of his friends more than I. My acquaintance with Judge RAKER when I entered this body in 1919 was one that was not calculated, as with some, to immediately form close ties of friendship. He was a member of the Immigration Committee. Immediately after coming into this body I was called upon to introduce a resolution that came before that committee, having for its purpose the admission of certain laborers from the Republic to the south of us without the restriction of the literacy test, what was known as seasonable or emergency labor.

Through the instrumentality of my good friend Judge RAKER, and the able chairman of that committee, who is present here to-day, together with other Members, my efforts in that direction were very effectively defeated; but that did not affect me in my admiration of those gentlemen, and although I was forced to go to the Secretary of Labor to secure what my farmers and ranchmen had to have, I felt always and knew that they were honest in their convictions and in their opposition to the resolution. No man has greater admiration for the chairman of that great committee to-day than I, and no man had greater admiration for Judge RAKER than I. It was my good fortune to sit beside Judge RAKER on the Irrigation Committee for seven years and to discuss and formulate legislation for the great West that he loved and that I loved. He was an untiring worker on that committee. I followed his leadership and the advice that he gave me, because I was a new Member. While very enthusiastic for the reclamation of arid lands, I gained valuable information and inspiration in my work upon that committee from my deceased friend and colleague. I may say in passing that there are two gentlemen from the great State of California from whom I received as a new Member very valuable advice and instruction. The widow of one of them sits here to-day. I shall ever cherish the memory of Julius Kahn.

Together with my good wife, I visit the State of California almost every summer. It is our practice to spend our summers there. We were entertained in the home of the present presiding officer, and there I met many people from Judge RAKER's district. The surest test of a man and the affection in which his people hold him is the expression from what you may call the middle or the poor class. I met people from Judge RAKER's district who are not rich in this world's goods. They were loud in their praise of Judge RAKER and the consideration given to their problems by him. He was the friend of those who had not affluence and wealth in this world, and while the friend of those people, he was not the enemy of people more favorably situated. In his votes here in this House he accorded justice to all classes of people.

As has been said by one of my colleagues here, I trust when I shall leave this body that it may be said of me that I have been the representative of all the people of my district, regardless of political views or station in life. Such a man was Judge RAKER. It is a beautiful tribute, a magnificent tribute, to his sterling character and worth that he received the indorsement at every election of all the people of his district, both Democrats and Republicans. He was a party man like the rest of us, but he was not a partisan when it came to dealing with the people of his district. Party affiliations rarely entered into his deliberations here, because he was truly the representative of the people of his district, as I think a man should be. When it came to strong party questions, of course, Judge RAKER was aligned with his party just as you and I would be. When it was a matter of dealing with all of the people of his district, representing them, replying to letters which they wrote—and I have seen stacks of them—he was truly the representative of all the people of that splendid district.

What drew me most to him, my friends, was the fact that he was first, last, and all the time an American, and he stood here on this floor with the chairman of his committee and other members and fought to perpetuate American institutions in this country, and his views and influence have left their impress upon the legislation, the splendid legislation, that has come from that committee, to preserve America, and not only America, but the great State of California, for Americans and American ideals and institutions.

I have been in his home here. I know that good helpmate, who is to-day widowed and deprived of the support and comfort of this good man. They were blessed with children, but Providence so willed that they should be taken from him. Judge RAKER was truly a home man. He loved his family and his home life. He had the most tender and affectionate regard for his splendid wife. In his death his district has sustained a loss, I might say almost an irreparable loss. I do not know of a man in Congress who did greater work for the people of his district than did Judge RAKER. He was untiring in his work, and I have seen him in his office at the midnight hour.

And it was not for glory, it was not for the sake of loud applause, but for the good that he might do his people. That untiring work at all hours, there is no question in my mind, brought about his untimely death. He went beyond human endurance in carrying on the work that he felt duty impelled him to do.

Let me say in conclusion, as I started out to state, his State, his district, and the entire Nation suffered a great loss in the death of Judge RAKER. These kind of men are not easily replaced in this body or in the affairs of this great Nation. He received the plaudits of his people in life. They mourn his untimely taking away. May the soul of JOHN RAKER, as I am sure it does and will, forever rest in peace.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker, my acquaintance with Congressman RAKER began with my service upon the Public Lands Committee of the House in the Sixty-eighth Congress. The State of California had in Congressman RAKER a strong defender of the rights of the American people; a man who apparently had won his way to success in life by hard, careful, and conscientious work.

He had a thorough knowledge of the law, always applicable to the questions as they were presented, and he never failed to assert his position with vigor. He was irresistible in presenting his viewpoint and seldom yielded the position he first advocated.

I learned to know him in my association and discussion of matters before the committee, and I always found him strong in his position, clear in his views, and always for a strict and rigid enforcement of the laws of the land.

He was a strong advocate for the growth and development of his adopted State; he worked for the protection of the forests and the natural beauty of the great Pacific State. Much legislation for California's great parks and for the preservation of California's timber was the work and the brain of JOHN E. RAKER.

No firmer defender of the American citizen against the encroachment of the Japanese on the Pacific coast could be found in all America than JOHN E. RAKER. No firmer friend to American citizenship in its opposition to undesirable foreign emigration could have been found in his State. When the bill for the restriction of foreign emigration was before Congress, no man in that entire body worked harder and unceasingly for its passage than did JOHN E. RAKER.

He never forgot that his position made him the servant of the people of his State, and of the Nation. That he served the people of his district, regardless of politics, is well known.

I had great admiration for Mr. RAKER, on account of his great force in presenting or defending his position upon any subject that he advocated.

Having once reached a conclusion as to his course he would be firm, and often alone in support of his position. It was this decisive trait in his make-up that made the people of his district and State trust him and return him to Congress successively for many years. This same trait of character brought to him the respect and confidence of his fellow Members in the legislative body. He had great personal courage, and possessed confidence in himself and in his position; he was always self-reliant.

Frequently in the heat of debate, and in the spirit of intolerance on the part of those who did not always agree with him, his measures would fail; undismayed he would return them to the calendar again, and in the final struggle he would succeed in having them placed in the statutes of the Nation.

When I think of the vast forest reserves of the State of California, and recall the efforts of Mr. RAKER in the extending and preserving of those great areas for future protection of the people of California, I can realize his vision for the future need of his State in the protection of its water and timber supply. The immense service rendered by him to the citizens of that great State is reflected in an editorial inserted in the RECORD by Mr. OLDFIELD on the 9th day of March, 1926; a brief excerpt I take the liberty to incorporate in my remarks to show the views carried by Mr. RAKER upon his entry into Congress, and how that indomitable will of his succeeded:

When JOHN E. RAKER first ran for Congress in 1910 he adopted a platform of his own and had it printed and circulated throughout his district. Among other things as I remember, he set himself down as favoring Japanese exclusion, woman suffrage, reclamation of arid lands, extension of the Forest Service, protection of our natural watersheds, reforestation, and development of hydroelectric power. Later he became a strong advocate of the National Park Service and of national game and fish preserves. At his request he was assigned to the Public Lands Committee, the Immigration Committee, and the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, where he was able to force his views upon a membership composed mostly of easterners who know nothing about the problems of the great western portion of their country.

It was a long, hard fight, but Congressman RAKER lived to see his efforts crowned with success. He lived to see every plank set forth in that 1910 platform a reality. He was really the author of the Japanese exclusion act, and he was chairman of the House Committee on Woman Suffrage when the seventeenth amendment became a law. He was the author of the desert land act and many other laws affecting the great West. He was the best land lawyer in Congress. Legislation fathered and championed by Mr. RAKER found its way into the Reclamation Service, the Forest Service, and the National Park Service.

Clearly, in the above editorial, is the congressional and civil life of JOHN E. RAKER portrayed. In conclusion permit me to say: Life is certainly uncertain, and man is not the maker or controller of his own period on earth. One year ago JOHN E. RAKER was a strong, vigorous, and virile man, whose eye was clear, whose step firm and decisive, whose brain was active. A man apparently content with the whole world; a man who had apparently another decade before him of vigorous, busy life; but, alas the Divine Ruler, who holds the destiny of man, decreed otherwise, and JOHN E. RAKER was passed on, leaving to mourn his untimely taking a devoted and loving wife and a host of associates who recall his busy and successful career.

We are no other than a moving row
Of magic shadow-shapes that come and go
Round with the sun-illuminated lantern held
In midnight by the master of the glow.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, in honoring the memory of the late Hon. JOHN E. RAKER, we honor ourselves. A sense of duty, love of his memory, and ties of friendship bring us here on this occasion to pay tribute to the memory of one who is worthy of the most eloquent and earnest eulogies.

These would be sad occasions, here and elsewhere, but for the hope of life eternal beyond the grave. We are told that the truly good never die; but that they pass to life eternal. In that sweet thought we parted with our friend to whom we pay tribute to-day, believing that our loss is Heaven's gain. He has passed through that sleep called death, to that glorious life where there will be no more parting and no more sorrows. May we live worthy of his memory, and as commanded by our Lord, so that we also may enter into that endless life when we are called.

The older I get, and the more mature I become in my thought, the more I am convinced that there would be no real joy in life except as found in that blessed promise that those who believe in and serve God shall live again. It is disturbing and painful to me when I hear of atheists and infidels trying to upset and destroy this—the sweetest of all human hopes.

A truly great and good man passed from among us when our friend took his departure. His loss from the Congress, where he served so long and so ably, is keenly felt. We miss his counsel, his leadership, and his eloquence. It is a pity we have to give up such courageous men as he was. The country can ill afford to lose Christian statesmen of his splendid type; especially in this time of unrest when "redism" is undertaking, through deadly propaganda, to undermine our sacred institutions by fomenting atheism and infidelity upon our civilization.

It is an insidious propaganda, parading under the guise of "science" and "freedom of thought," a veritable "wolf in sheep's clothing," that would destroy, not only our Government, but our cherished hopes of the life immortal. It is intended to wreck us as it wrecked Russia. It would make of us a godless nation as it has made of Russia. It is a part of that false theory of evolution that argues God out of the creation and leaves its victims godless and hopeless. We need strong men, like the one to whose splendid memory we pay these tributes, to combat these menacing forces.

Mr. RAKER was indeed a strong character and there was no trace of infidelity in his noble soul. He was full of courage and stood bravely by his convictions. He was among those who believed that God rules our destiny and that to continue in happiness we must keep God closely and lovingly in our individual and national lives. His was a manly life, without cant and without hypocrisy. He stood firm, like the mountains of his beloved California, for all that he thought to be right and equally strong against all he thought was wrong. He supported all moral issues with a courage unsurpassed.

Judge RAKER was not in the House long before he was pointed out and referred to as a man of ability. He grew in strength and influence, which, added to his many years of experience here, made of him one of the most useful and powerful Members of Congress.

The late Speaker, Champ Clark, in a memorial address on April 9, 1910, in eulogizing his friend, the late Judge De Armond, in referring to how usefulness and influence grow with experience and length of service, in Congress, said:

The high places to which Phelps, Bland, and De Armond rose in both the House and the country is another illustration of the value of long service—value not only to themselves, but to their constituencies and to the entire Republic.

Men should not be sent hither simply to gratify their own personal ambitions, but because they can be of service, and having proved that they are of service, wisdom dictates that they should be kept here so long as they continue to be of service; and it may be confidently asserted that the value of the services of a man of capacity, character, industry, and good habits increase in exact proportion to his length of service. New England understands this thoroughly. So do the cities of Philadelphia and Pittsburgh. When a Representative from any of those places demonstrates his fitness here he is retained until he retires, dies, or is promoted. Five times in succession Philadelphia has had the distinguished honor of furnishing the "father of the House"—Kelley, Randall, O'Neill, Harmer, and Bingham. Should General Bingham, the present "father of the House," for any reason cease to be a Member, the title of "father of the House" would pass to still another Pennsylvanian, the Hon. John Dalzell. These facts should furnish much food for thought to every constituency in the land.

Sixteen years have elapsed since that great address by Speaker Clark. He himself rose to great power and influence through his matchless ability and long service in Congress. It might be noted in line with his comment, Pennsylvania, in the person of the beloved Hon. THOMAS S. BUTLER, still has the "father of the House," for continuous service.

The second California district recognized the wisdom of keeping a good man in Congress and they sent Judge RAKER here term after term until he was claimed by death in the very midst of his greatest strength and usefulness.

He was a friend and colleague of the great Champ Clark, and of that convincing orator and leader, the late Claude Kitchin, with whom he worked for the welfare of his party and of the country. He served long and well in the Congress. He was a tireless worker, fearless, able, and eloquent. This made a wonderful combination. Added to this were his friend-winning qualities. Few men had more or stronger friends than Judge RAKER had. He has left his splendid impress upon the laws and history not only of California, in whose soil he sleeps, but upon the Nation he loved so well.

He was a great lawyer, a hard student, and a statesman. He loved California and its people and those people loved him in return. They will miss him as we miss him here. He loved his country and was intensely patriotic. He came to the end of his earthly life full of honors, useful, and much beloved.

But, brother, you have not died in vain,
For you will live until the end of time;
Your record shines without a stain,
The soul of faith marches on unslain,
To the heights of the hills sublime.

Mr. REED of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, the eloquent tribute already delivered in this House by Members of Congress properly portray the very high esteem which the House entertained for the valuable services rendered by the deceased, Hon. JOHN E. RAKER. It was not my good fortune to know Congressman RAKER prior to my service in this House which began in December, 1923. Judge RAKER had been a Member of Congress for quite a long time prior to this date. I was placed upon a Committee of Irrigation and Reclamation, of which Judge RAKER had been a member for many years. No one could serve on this committee without being forcibly impressed with the ability of the deceased. It is doubtful whether any member of this committee worked harder or familiarized himself with detail work upon questions before this committee more than Judge RAKER. It is true that some men achieve greatness who do not possess a combative attribute. History, however, discloses that the characters who achieve lasting and enduring achievement are principally confined to those characters who belong to the combative régime. Judge RAKER belonged to the latter class. In my opinion he was by nature endowed with a mind that fitted him for not only hard work but for studious, initiative, constructive and combative work. Nature was further good to him in giving him a strong physique and a brilliant mind as well as the gift of eloquence. This important committee will miss Judge RAKER; the American Congress will miss him more, as his services were in demand by all those interested in helping that great array of our class of citizenship who need wise legislation.

Judge RAKER was strictly human, a strong contender for those principles he conceived to be right, yet ever ready to listen to those who contended for propositions contrary to his own views. The district he served so faithfully for a long time in the American Congress needs no encomium from me, and yet I can not fail in this brief address to say of the people of his district that when they selected Judge RAKER to represent their district in the American Congress, they acted wisely and placed one in high counsels of this Nation who never forgot to serve them ably and faithfully, even though he sometimes served them at the sacrifice of his own physical strength. The magnificent gathering of thousands of people at his funeral in the beautiful little town of Susanville, Calif., where we laid him to rest, thoroughly attest the very high esteem and the great love his own people bear for him.

Since the passing of my friend I have been forcibly impressed with this thought, that when some of our friends are summoned to the Great Beyond that we can not see, in our imagination, the physical form before us. Judge RAKER was one of those who impressed me so forcibly that I can yet in my imagination have an ideal picture of his physical stature and also remember even the tone of his clear strong and forceful voice.

Very few individuals of this life voluntarily want to withdraw and enter upon the possibilities of the life beyond. We have many tasks that we feel we have not finished. We have much labor that we desire to pursue further. In reality we are sometimes at a loss to understand why those are taken who seem to be thoroughly possessed with all their faculties for usefulness. Some of the most brilliant men who have ever served in the American Congress were taken at a very early age. But because of the fact that our finite minds can not reason out this matter is no argument why it is not right, for in reality there is so little which we do thoroughly understand. It is enough for us to know that the same God who has so gently dealt with this young Nation through these years of its incipency does understand and does all things well.

Judge RAKER had lived a little more than three score of years. He died in his days of usefulness. We can yet hear the plaudits of the multitude rejoicing in appreciation of the services of this brilliant man.

Judge RAKER was a brilliant advocate, an able legislator, a wise counselor, and a most estimable Christian gentleman. One of the past has said that if a man puts more into this world than he takes out of it his life is a success. Measured by this standard we indeed may say that Judge RAKER's life was a success.

The best will come in the great "To be,"

It is ours to serve and wait:

And the wonderful future we soon shall see

For death is but the gate.

Mr. CARSS. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, at the funeral of our late friend and colleague, Judge RAKER, a very eloquent and well-deserved tribute was paid to his character and public services by Rev. Elijah Hull Longbrake. I ask unanimous consent to have published in the RECORD that funeral sermon as a part of my remarks, that it may become a part of these services.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The sermon is as follows:

OURS AND THE NATION'S FRIEND, HON. JOHN E. RAKER, MEMBER OF UNITED STATES CONGRESS, SECOND DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

The eloquence of a worthy life speaks here to-day.

Our hearts are made sensitive to hear, in that the voice we heard we shall hear no more, the hand which once lifted beckoning our attention is stilled, and the personality which comprehended so much of the elements of manhood noble and strong, in which simplicity and honor were the outstanding characteristics, will never again visibly honor our presence. But it will be many a day before we shall escape his challenge for those things for which he so unflinchingly stood.

He now belongs to that innumerable company of whom it has been said, "He being dead yet he speaketh." No word of mine or yours can speak with tones so certain and memorable to-day as this his hour of life's summation, for friends, neighbors, and the Nation, all of whom he loved and so faithfully served.

To each in their place does he speak that message which most suitably expresses for them their particular angle of respect and esteem. May you cherish the thoughts which to-day will be yours.

A worthy life is an incomparable achievement.

To foregleam one's journey with the splendor of vision and clarified purpose is to taken nobility.

To hold consistently to that well-defined aim and swerve not, but throwing all into the challenge of life, and with steady stride move onward to the goal is evidence of the march of a man.

Mr. JOHN E. RAKER's life journey began when he was born, February 22, 1863, on a farm near Knoxville, Ill. When he was about 10 years of age his parents came to California, and he grew to manhood on a farm near Milford, Lassen County.

After careful training he entered the law office of Judge Spencer, with whom he later became associated in practice.

Early in his career he moved to Alturas, where his sterling character, moral worth, and civic leadership were quickly recognized, and he was honored with public office, which trust of the people, as their district attorney, was so well cared for he was further honored as their selection for superior judge.

He continued to serve in this capacity till his constituents called him to represent them and this second district of California in that incomparable legislative body of the world, the Congress of the United States of America. This leads one to inquire, Why should this man have been honored by this people and what was there about him which gave him unbroken command?

It is not enough merely to say he was unbeatable, so we are led to inquire why.

Some may ride the current and drift into positions of power. Others by strategy may outrun their opponents. But this is not the answer for the elevation to and mastery of the position held by our friend.

It takes a man foursquare to stand uncompromisingly for the needs of the people, to walk out into the open and, meeting all comers, receive the rising tide of approval of those whom he serves.

Mr. RAKER early was aware that the strongest force in meeting his fellow men and the most driving power for the progress of mankind rests upon integrity and personal character.

A day or two ago I had the pleasure of a personal letter from Dr. Clarence True Wilson, of Washington, who had followed him for the past 10 years closely, and in this regard he said: "I was quickly impressed with his manly vigor, perfectly transparent honor, frank and friendly dealings with his fellows."

You must know this man to have answered our question, Why and what was his secret of influence and rising power?

I had thought to go where men learn the measure of a man—out among the folks on the street and in the office, the shop, and the place where men meet—but it was not necessary for me to inquire. They came to me; and as though I were the ear of their friend they have told me much of him.

I had had but slight opportunity to know him, but men of transparent character and life need not that we shall live by their side for the years, for to the one of discernment he was as an open book. If I might, I would then seek our answer from what we all knew.

What a comfort to-day to be able to say of a man, "He was personally, domestically, professionally, and publicly clean." In all these regards he was upright, consistent, above reproach. Our saying it does not make it so, but it being so we can with good grace and much gratification write it down.

You know no man until you have entered into the sacred sanctuary of his personal life.

He was personally clean.

He was clean by choice.

No man is genuinely clean in character unless it be by his own choice. Character of that quality is never a veneer. It is whole timber and needs not that any shall apply anything whatsoever to cover undesirable traits.

Visioning a career he, after his fashion in all his undertakings, carefully determined what was right, genuine, and of worth, and having written these into his program of self-development, there was to be no purchase price on these qualities, for he was building a life, that he might build a career, and develop an asset to his fellowmen.

Thus his habits would be clean. They would be honorable. They would be desirable and full of worth.

He would be clean, for he must be consistent. You must know a man personally to appreciate him; you, too, must know him both at home and abroad to properly evaluate him.

What you are at home usually is a good index to what you are abroad. But for you to be a gentleman of honor at home and something less when away was not the habit of our friend. What he stood for in his constituents he himself followed. His measure for other men he would not for any appeal consent to lessen for his own, whether in conduct or official life. I am sure this must have been both a source of the confidence bestowed in him and his efficiency in his administration of his service.

Again quoting my good friend Doctor Wilson in his letter to me we find the evidence of another source of his strength. He said: "He came to live in the same building and I had a little more intimate knowledge of a perfect family life, with a beautiful devotion to wife and home which was reciprocated in an absolute trust that made their home life together one of the most perfect examples of what an American home life ought to be."

One of our current editorials noted that if one wished to find Judge RAKER, he would be either in his office working, or in his home, or meeting the men about town, but never loafing; he had no time to loaf.

Our American homes could well profit by this example and bring again the level of our American life plains higher and solve many.

If we would ask again wherein lay the secret of this man's power and hold upon his fellows, may we answer again for the common or average man's group?

Kipling had his secret a long while ago, for did he not say that "If you can walk with kings nor lose the common touch"? Our friend was truly a friend of men.

On every hand we read "He had the confidence of his constituents," there is only one secret to such a privilege. "If you would have friends you must show yourself friendly," said a wise man of long ago and it was well said, and the truth of it was evidenced in the career of our loved friend.

He may not have called himself great, but greatness is not self-announced, it is rather the plaudits of the multitude who have felt the touch of a friend and helper and can not be restrained. Greatness is not self assumed, can not be thrust upon small souls, but is a reward for him who would forgetting its seeking achieve it while serving and receive its acknowledgment from only those who can give it.

It was these gifts and acquisitions which made him the chosen of the people of whom they were not ashamed.

May I again quote to you our friend Doctor Wilson when he said: "He was a keenly alive and intellectual lawyer and legislator, with a moral purpose that dominated all."

Having been a man first, and knowing that he profits most who serves best, he went forth as a servant of the people both of his district and his Nation.

Among certain of his contributions will be always remembered the Raker Act. In this there were found interests which affected his own district, then his State, and, unless carefully written, would be in due time lost to thieves and robbers. With painstaking care and his accustomed habit, "the man with the lamp" protected both the interests of his district and then the city of San Francisco, that the most deft-handed intriguer could not even in broad daylight walk away with the people's rights. This is only a suggestion of the course he followed in his position of trust.

That fine army of our country's manhood, the Legion, will always have cause to remember him and how with personal attention he looked to their interests. Yes, as a body was he interested; but personal service rendered was not once, but over and over again. Their call was his command, and his duty was not done till their request had been measured for its merits—and unabated interest till full deserts were gained.

To sum again, we quote from Doctor Wilson, who observed his service for 10 years: "His undeviating fidelity to the temperance reform and to the strengthening of the prohibition amendment saw him stand foursquare for every moral reform, every new bill and movement that meant human betterment, until no man in the American Congress was more admired and trusted than he. He was a noble Representative and the kind of a public servant we can hardly afford to lose, but I think this Nation is cleaner and better for the life he lived."

From the Bishop Chamber of Commerce came to me this word: "We of Owen Valley, who during the years of our struggle with the city of Los Angeles and the constant efforts to crush us found him our champion on all occasions; and we desire to express our deepest sympathy with the bereaved family and the congressional district he so faithfully and worthily represented."

These and many others are the testimony of service rendered.

What more shall we say? We shall not be able to write or speak his deserts. We may in our hour of personal and public loss, tarry for one or two reflections which will pay to him a tribute better than tears or flowers, our personal commitment to that for which he so undauntingly stood.

To our youth and the Legion for which he unselfishly gave himself with individual concern, to the fraternities who feel the silver cord broken, shall we not so evaluate him and those elements for which we admire him that as we turn from his bier to-day it shall be with high resolve that our lives shall be like his, clear; our career like his shall be like his, one of high service rendered, like him, too, we shall learn that should we walk with kings we shall not lose the common touch, but shall be a brother to man.

To my fellowmen and women of this district shall we not here highly resolve that that character and quality of leadership which was his we shall bring again to the cause of the Nation which he loved.

To you his colleagues in that the only one of its kind in the world, will you not catch from his fallen hands the torch he threw to you and press his and your cause with a purpose dominated with moral betterment for all human kind, the defense of the welfare of our Nation and courageous leadership for strides in the onward march toward the highest goal.

To this companion and loved ones who to-day can not yet measure the full appreciation of his going, may the gratifying thought and confidence of the life worthily lived, give you a sense of reward for his unmeasured investment.

And to one and all may it be with a hope that while to us it was as the end, to him it shall have been but the beginning of life, and reward better, richer, and fuller, with a closer and everlasting fellowship with God, the Father, and the Son, and with all those who have gone on before.

His precious body we shall tenderly lay to rest in the sunny slopes of his high Sierras looking toward the Golden Gate.

His life we cherish as our heritage and inspiration for our day.

His hope we shall catch and following the gleam move toward the eternal day when man is crowned with immortality.

And may God add His blessing.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, death loves a shining mark, a signal victory. So we felt when JOHN E. RAKER passed into the Great Beyond. Raised in the mountains, the son of pioneers and himself a pioneer, he embodied all the qualities of the real westerner—sincerity, reliability, independence, courage, an austerity of mind tempered by a loving heart.

He was devoted to his State and to his country.

The Hetch Hetchy will be a lasting monument, enduring as long as the State shall endure.

His career in Washington was one of service, increasing with each successive term. A man of strong convictions, yet one whose heart ever answered the call of the sick and needy. Few heard of his numberless acts of charity, but the widow and the orphan, the sick veteran and friendless soldier could tell the tale.

His home life was ideal, his wife sharing his joys and his sorrows. A true helpmate with all that that implies.

Faithful servant of his State, sincere friend, loving husband, what finer epitaph need one have?

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, JOHN E. RAKER, of Alturas, Modoc County, Calif., was a sturdy type of loyal American citizen. His career is noteworthy because it is representative of the lives of most successful Americans. The life of JOHN E. RAKER is a further demonstration of the fact that in America there is opportunity and that the road to accomplishment is barred to no one; that, while the way may be difficult, the goal may be reached by those who are worthy and will put forth the necessary effort.

Like many other distinguished Americans who have attained high position, JOHN E. RAKER spent his early life on a farm. He worked his way through the public schools and, after attending the State normal school at San Jose, Calif., studied law and was admitted to the bar of his State. It was while engaged in the practice of law that the name of JOHN E. RAKER became known to the people of California by reason of the important cases with which he was associated. Twice elevated to the bench of the highest trial court in California by the people of his county, he performed the duties of that office with honor and distinction.

It was as a Representative in the Congress of the United States that JOHN E. RAKER became best known. Elected to Congress eight times, he was 15 years a Member of this body. He represented a constituency of strong, sturdy Americans. While his district was of opposite political faith, he was returned to Congress without opposition, for his people believed in JOHN E. RAKER and in his loyalty to their interests. JOHN E. RAKER was a hard-working public official, tireless in his efforts, and always ready to serve. He had a deep interest in the welfare of those who may have been unfortunate. Himself inured to hard work, he was always interested in those who toil. He did much for the people of his State, and they showed their appreciation by the way in which they honored him. From the rugged mountains among which he lived, where men are men and where sham and pretense have no place he absorbed the sturdy elements of a character which shaped his whole career. He was honest in all things and honorable in his dealings with men. His was a life of service to mankind, and in his passing to a higher and greater reward California and the Nation have suffered a distinct loss.

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, JOHN E. RAKER was born on a farm near Knoxville, Knox County, Ill., on the 22d day of February, 1863. Shortly after that his parents moved to Sedalia, Mo., where they remained but a short time and again removed to Knoxville. In 1873 when JOHN was only 10 years of age he moved with his parents to Lassen County, Calif. Lassen County is located in the northern part of California, and is a county of hills and mountains, valleys, and streams. It is a section of our State devoted to general farming. The life of JOHN RAKER on the farm was similar to that of many California boys. He did the work that ordinarily falls to the lot of the farmer's son. He attended the public school, the grammar school at Susanville, and finally the State normal school at San Jose, Calif., where he completed his course in 1884.

While yet a boy Mr. RAKER manifested that energy and self-reliance that so well served him in later years. It was by his own effort that he secured his education.

In the early part of 1885 Mr. RAKER entered the law office of Judge E. V. Spencer, of Susanville, under whom he studied law. He was admitted to the bar in the latter part of the same year. His qualities at that early age so impressed Judge Spencer that he was received into partnership in the practice of the law under the name of Spencer & Raker. This firm became one of the leading law firms of northern California, and was engaged in many suits involving water rights and land matters, as well as criminal cases, some of which became noted.

Lassen County in 1885 was more or less a pioneer section of our State. During that year, before Mr. RAKER was admitted to the bar, the superior court made a special order permitting him, then only 21 years of age, to appear to represent a defendant in an important murder trial.

In 1886, after one year's admission to the bar, he was a candidate of his party for district attorney. In December of the same year he moved to Alturas, the county seat of Modoc County, where he thereafter maintained his home. From Alturas his practice extended in connection with the above-mentioned firm, out over northern California and into Oregon and Nevada.

In 1894 he was elected district attorney of Modoc County, which office he held for four years, 1895-1898. At the general election in 1898 he was the Democratic nominee for State senator.

In 1901 Mr. RAKER gained much public attention as the attorney for a number of defendants in a criminal case known as the Modoc lynching case. The attorney general of the State joined with the district attorney in the prosecution of these cases. The local population was divided into active and bitter partisans over the prosecution. Twenty-one men were indicted by the grand jury for murder, each one of whom was charged with five separate offenses, that being the number of men lynched. The trial commenced in November, 1901, and ended in March, 1902. No convictions were had, and all defendants were discharged. From the time of that trial until his death Mr. RAKER was regarded as one of the notable public men of the State of California.

In 1902 Mr. RAKER was elected judge of the superior court for Modoc County and reelected in 1908. He resigned this position on December 19, 1910. He was a member of the bar of Oregon, of California, and of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. RAKER assisted in organizing the First National Bank of Alturas, and thereafter remained one of its directors.

From his early manhood Mr. RAKER took an active interest in the affairs of the Democratic Party with which he was affiliated. In 1906 he was elected to grand sashem of the Iroquois Clubs of California and reelected in 1907. At different times he was a delegate to the State Democratic convention and served on various committees. He was chairman of the Democratic State central committee in 1908-1910. He was a delegate to the Democratic National Convention at Denver in 1908.

Mr. RAKER also took an active interest in fraternal organizations. He was grand master in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of California, 1908-9, and a representative to the Sovereign Grand Lodge at Seattle, and for several sessions a delegate to the Grand Lodge F. and A. M. of California.

On the 21st day of November, 1889, Mr. RAKER married Iva G. Spencer, the daughter of Judge E. V. Spencer, with whom he had been associated in the practice of law. The marriage was a most happy and companionable one. The 36 years of its duration saw no lessening in the admiration, respect, and affection in that sacred relation.

In 1910 Mr. RAKER was elected to the Sixty-second Congress, where he continued to serve into the first session of the Sixty-ninth Congress. In his last three elections he was selected at the primaries as the candidate of both the Democratic and Republican parties. After he once established himself in the knowledge and affection of the people of his district there was never any reasonable doubt as to whether or not he would be returned to Congress should he seek reelection.

I first learned of Mr. RAKER through the press of our State when I was a boy on a farm of California, as he had been. A few years more and he was recognized as one of the courageous, upstanding men of our State. A few years more I became personally acquainted with and developed a friendship for him. A few years more and he was elected to the House of Representatives. With interest I followed his career here.

A few years more and I took my place beside Mr. RAKER in the House of Representatives. Here I confirmed my previous impression of him. Mr. RAKER's work was characterized by great fidelity to the people he represented and to the causes he espoused. He worked with tireless energy. He was decided in his views and zealous in support of them. The people of his district, in their confidence and reliance upon him, sent much work to his office. He never shrank from it nor complained.

It is not overstating the fact to say that he took up the duties of his office, even the details involving the affairs of most humble individuals, with energy and even with pleasure. He found a positive happiness in being able to be of service to others, or in aiding the cause to which he was devoted. There was no limit on the hours of his devotion. Many times I have passed the House Office Building of evenings when most windows were darkened, but from his office window I saw the light streaming. He was using hours of the night to perform work for the people of his district and the country, for which the hours of the day were not long enough.

Mr. RAKER was of the West, out of the West, and a part of the West. He grew with the West, he felt with the West, he understood the West. In Congress he made himself her voluntary advocate and defender. Her cause was his cause.

Mr. RAKER came to Congress with convictions and definite purposes. He came committed to support the exclusion of orientals, woman suffrage, reclamation of arid lands, extension of the forest service, protection of watersheds, reforestation, and the development of hydraulic power. He sought membership on the Public Lands Committee, the Immigration Committee and the Irrigation Committee. These committees furnished the most effective opportunities for serving the causes to which he was committed. Other committees might be rated as more attractive to the ambitious; these were the committees that offered the greatest opportunity for useful work. He waived more attractive committee assignments for these committees.

In later years he gave active support to the national parks. It was through his efforts that Mount Lassen, containing the only active volcano in our immediate country was made a national park. It will become one of the most notable of all our parks. It would be a strictly accurate reflection of Mr. RAKER's attitude to say that he dealt with every public question from the standpoint of the average ordinary intelligent, clean-minded American. He did that as naturally as the magnetic needle turns to the pole.

Our western section has its own peculiar problems. Other sections of the country do not always understand. The people out here east of the Rockies are equally good and great as our own people of the Pacific slope. None can give the most helpful sympathy to the problems they do not understand. To them Mr. RAKER sought to present his West, our West.

Some one has said, "The character of a people is shown by the character of the men they crown." To-day we pay tribute to the man whom the people of the second district of California crowned. I would also pay tribute to those who crowned him. Some despair of the future of our country. Some fear the type of men to whom the destiny of our country is committed. Only temporarily at least can the failure of America come from those who in office owe her fidelity.

The only real fear we can have for the future of our country is the failure of those who select their representatives to high positions in government. In the long run the people of our country will get that service by public officials which they reward and demand. So long as the American people give an intelligent, independent loyalty to public affairs, so long as they condemn the evil and reward the good in public life, the future of this country is secure.

A few weeks ago the Representatives of Congress attended the funeral of Mr. RAKER at Susanville, Calif., with a great concourse of friends. We went out to his grave in the cemetery on the hill overlooking Susanville, and laid his body away. His grave was surrounded by banks of flowers sent as tokens of affection and expressions of appreciation from people in many walks of life.

If only those whom he served should in the future visit that grave, many indeed would be the people of our State who would go there and leave a tear or a flower in appreciation of him. The young men of our State might well go there and learn lessons of industry and find inspiration in emulating his life. The public men of our State might go there and learn lessons of sincerity, of fidelity, and loyalty to the trusts committed to their care.

In his early years in Congress, largely through his effort, legislation was secured which granted to San Francisco a water supply from the Hetch Hetchy that has ever since been regarded in an appreciative way as a great achievement from the standpoint of the people of San Francisco and the bay section of California. In subsequent years Mr. RAKER accomplished many things of service to his people, his State, and the country.

Perhaps from the general standpoint of the Pacific coast the most notable contribution of Mr. RAKER in Congress was the service he gave in connection with the immigration act passed by the Sixty-eighth Congress. An outstanding feature of that act, as measured by the Pacific coast interest, was the provision which excluded Orientals. Under the leadership of the Chairman of the Committee on Immigration of the House, the Hon. ALBERT JOHNSON, no one performed a more effective service in support of that provision than Mr. RAKER. Many members of Congress, as we people of the Pacific coast view the matter, might be given credit for their support of this provision. Credit to none of them can minimize or lessen the credit that is due the memory of JOHN E. RAKER for the ability and tenacious persistence and effectiveness with which he supported this provision for years, until it was finally written into the laws of his country.

Mr. RAKER gave that service through no narrow spirit of racial prejudice. He did it through a high-minded and just conception of our relations to that of the people of other nations. He knew that the way of peace and happiness between the United States and the Japanese people was not one of immigration and colonization. He recognized the fact that racial differences and prejudices do exist that are not temporary, and that legislation could not wipe away. He knew that to pursue a policy that would lead to a Japanese population of large numbers, where the people of that proud, aggressive, and able race could not be received on social or political equality, would develop not accord and harmony but discord, antagonism, international annoyances, irritation, and misunderstanding.

Mr. RAKER accepted the facts as he knew them. He supported exclusion not as an insult to Japan, nor as a humiliating disregard of the right of another people, but as a means of ultimately developing the friendship, the understanding, and harmony of these two nations. In so doing he performed a great service for his country.

Some time ago I stood in an ancient cemetery. There I saw a magnificent statue of an ancient warrior. In the midst of life and strength and courage the final summons came. The warrior laid his shield and sword at his feet. With manly mien the warrior accepted the summons. With one hand over his heart and the other extended to receive the message, with unflinching courage he accepted the call. JOHN RAKER has accepted the call.

His was the life for men to live; his the death to die. If it were for us to choose, which of us would select a different time to go? What better time than after a long and useful life, while so recently in the zenith of his powers, while there yet appeared before him so much of usefulness, while yet in the day of his active accomplishments, and when he was surrounded by the respect, admiration, and affection of his friends in greatest numbers?

Among the old-time outstanding men and editors of our State none are more highly honored than the Hon. Ed. E. Leake, editor of the Woodland Daily Democrat, of Woodland, Calif.

Mr. Leake, during a long and useful life, has been a close observer of public men and affairs. I submit an editorial from his pen under date of January 25, of this year, as follows:

CONGRESSMAN'S DEATH HELD GREAT BLOW TO ENTIRE STATE

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER, ranking member of Congress from California, and one of the best intellectual products of the State, is no more. His death came as a great blow to the State he had served so long, faithfully, and efficiently, and it is in the nature of a personal loss to his many loyal and affectionate friends who were so deeply attached to him because of his many virtues of mind and heart, his unflinching courage, high ideals, clear vision, and his exalted aspirations. Although a partisan of strong convictions he was so faithful in the discharge of his public duties, so unselfish in his support of public measures the purpose of which was to safeguard the rights of the people and promote the best interests of the Nation and the State, and his private life was so blameless and exemplary that he was eight times elected to Congress in a district in which his party was in a minority. In the last years of his public career no political opponent could be found in the 16 counties comprising the first district strong enough to prevent him from receiving the nomination of all political parties.

No period of American history has presented questions of greater importance and problems more difficult of solution than those which arose during his period of service. They involved not only divisions of domestic policy for which the Constitution furnished a guide, but also many problems that the framers of the Constitution did not provide for and did not conceive would arise. He maintained his opinions with marked ability, he was always courteous in debate, ready in resources but never violent in manner and statement, satisfying his friends without irritating his opponents. His premises once admitted it was difficult to resist his conclusions, for any weak point in his position was always guarded by plausible argument.

Viewed from any standpoint, even his political opponents were forced to acknowledge that he was a learned lawyer, studious, diligent and successful; a trusted and honored Member of Congress, always retaining the respect and confidence of his constituency; a representative of unquestioned ability and integrity, faithful to his convictions as tested by the principles which he openly avowed and ably defended.

If we turn from his public life and view him as a man, in all the varied relations of life, we can pronounce his eulogy without the qualification of opposing opinions. That he was honorable and just in all his business affairs was never questioned. He was easy of approach, affable and kind, carrying into his private life none of the bitterness of political strife. He was a man of good habits, and unblemished character, plain, temperate, and the best type of an American citizen. He loved order, peace, and observed the obligations of religious morality, and more important than all else in human society, he was faithful to his duty, to his kindred, and his family, and left us an example of purity in private life.

It is these virtues, more than genius, learning, or intellectual force that made the lamented dean of California Congressman worthy of the high praise that has and will be bestowed upon him by his associates, and will preserve his memory in the hearts of the people of California.

Much appreciation of Mr. RAKER in our State came from outside of his district. As indicating the general attitude of the people of California, particularly of northern California, where Mr. RAKER was best known, I submit an editorial of the San Francisco Call under date of January 25 of this year:

JOHN RAKER, GOOD-BYE

In JOHN RAKER's first campaign for election to Congress he stated this as his creed:

"My work will be to labor for enactment of laws that will keep this great Government for its 95,000,000 people, and not for a favored few—the interests of the trusts. The people should be permitted to have a full voice in this Government of theirs. I stand for progressive legislation, both State and national, to that end."

No man can say that JOHN RAKER did not literally obey that creed of his. He kept his word, and was reelected again and again on the basis of his deeds at Washington.

Hetch Hetchy is in great measure a monument to him, for he was the man who introduced the measure that embodied the grant under which Hetch Hetchy is being constructed. Into that act he wrote provisions to insure Hetch Hetchy to the people forever. He safeguarded human rights explicitly so that neither by quibble nor by evasion can the Raker Act be voided without discovery.

San Francisco owes him much.

He came from the hills, from the "Modoc Country," the "Mother Lode," where gold was discovered and where our inexhaustible water power is now produced. It will not be easy to find another in the hills or in the city, so earnest, so honest, so vigilant for the people as JOHN E. RAKER.

Nothing in the career of Mr. RAKER has more typified the heart interest with which he responded to the cause of the humble than the time, sacrifice, and loyalty with which he espoused the cause of the California Indians.

I submit a statement issued by the Indian Board of Cooperation of California following the death of Mr. RAKER:

A MEMORIAL TO THE HON. JOHN E. RAKER

The Hon. JOHN E. RAKER is dead, but his work for the benefit of the Indians of California will live. The Indians loved him. They mourn as heartbrokenly as they would for one of their own kinsmen.

As a boy, as a man grown, as an attorney in private practice, as district attorney for the county of Modoc, Calif., as United States Congressman for the second district of California for the last 16 years, he has been their true and untiring friend. He has been that kind of a friend who "comes in when all others go out," a friend in need, one to be coveted and prized.

Congressman RAKER, as a Californian from childhood, reared in Indian country, was familiar with the unparalleled wrongs that these unfortunate people had to suffer. The wholesale confiscation of their lands, their homes and food supply, and the debauching and murderous attacks that reduced these California Indians from a population of more than 200,000 at the beginning of the influx of the unrestrained gold seekers and the onward march of the soldiers commanded by those who taught "the only good Indian is a dead one" to a mere remnant of about 20,000 of to-day, are facts which were well known to Congressman RAKER.

His pleas for remedial legislation, and appropriations to alleviate the suffering and to provide a just settlement for these people are often found in committee and congressional records of the Congress of the United States.

His bill, giving authority to the Court of Claims and the United States Supreme Court to hear the case of the Indians and to render judgment against the United States Government for any amount that may be found due them, after years of hard work and determined effort, passed unanimously both Houses of Congress last year. The measure failed to become a law only because the President failed to sign the bill after Congress adjourned.

Reportedly during his last illness, though weakened and afflicted with pain, he expressed the keenest interest in this effort to provide a rectification of the wrongs done the California Indians. It was at his direction that, almost in the final hours of his life, his bill for the relief of the Indians was rewritten to meet, so far as possible, the administrative objections that have delayed the relief.

As a public servant, Judge RAKER possessed convictions born of a certainty. All through life his fight to better the conditions of humanity, to secure justice and fair play to all, was persistently determined but always fair and kindly. As a fighter for the things most worth while in life, he was never wanting. If the case had merit, even though unpopular, he gave it his best. He was loved and honored by statesmen and children alike.

The Hon. JOHN E. RAKER is dead, but the beneficent influence of his life will live.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, one of our number has been taken from us, and we have met out of respect to his memory to pay tribute to his character and to the work he did here.

It seems only yesterday that JOHN E. RAKER moved among us, alert and active, busy in the performance of his official duties, the very picture of health and rugged manhood. And then, while at the high tide of his powers and attainments, with no apparent weakening of his splendid physique, with no slackening of the gait at which he was wont to travel, and with no diminishing of that vigorous intellect, his call came, and after only a brief illness he passed on, leaving with us the clear-cut memory of him as we last saw him on the floor of this House.

At the time of his death, Judge RAKER was the dean of the California delegation in Congress, and his years of faithful service here were fruitful and profitable not only to the State which he had the honor so long to represent, but to the Nation as well. His work on the Immigration Committee centered around the restrictive legislation calculated to protect our country from too great a movement to our shores of people whom time and experience had proven difficult for us to assimilate into our body politic, and this included a settlement of the difficult Japanese problem for the Pacific coast. As a member of the Public Lands Committee he played an important part in shaping and securing the passage of the important Federal water power act, the Hetch Hetchy legislation to give San Francisco a water supply and the law granting the right of way for the Los Angeles aqueduct, to enable that city to bring its domestic water from the Owens River. On the Irrigation and Reclamation Committee he was an ardent advocate of the Boulder Dam project, which means so much to the entire Southwest, while as a member of the Committee on Woman Suffrage he made an important contribution to the movement which extended the franchise to the women of the country.

In his work JOHN RAKER always sought the truth. His mind was so constituted that it could not long remain in doubt or uncertainty. It insistently demanded to know, and it was ceaseless in its inquiry until it had determined the right and wrong of every question presented to it, and having made a determination, thereafter there was but one course to pursue, and that was to battle for the right as he saw it.

He had courage, both physical and mental, beyond what is given to most men. It stood him in good stead in the early days, since that part of California where he grew up was at that time still colorful with the romance of the lumber jack and mining camp. It contributed to his success there, and it characterized his work here. He dearly loved a good fight for a worthy cause, and the fact that he was sometimes in a hopeless minority never seemed to diminish in the least the enthusiasm and ardor with which he accepted the challenge to battle.

No appraisal of the life work of Judge RAKER would be complete without considering the important part his good wife played in the attainment of his success. They were ideally mated, and their home life was happy. She was fitted in every way to be his life companion and was able to, and did, contribute directly to his steady climb up the ladder of fame.

Both were dearly loved by the people throughout their district, and there is no question whatever but that had he lived he could have been reelected over and over as long as he cared to serve them. On the death of her husband Mrs. Raker was urged to consent to be a candidate for Congress, and there is no doubt if she had consented she would have been elected, and would have served here with credit as a worthy successor of her husband.

When history has recorded the names of those who well and faithfully served our country's cause, who gave unstintingly of the best that was within them to protect the interests and promote the welfare of the people, who were, in public and private life, guided wholly by principle and high ideals, who sought only how best to serve the cause of truth and righteousness, then you will find the name of JOHN E. RAKER written large and high on that roll of honor. California will ever proudly cherish his memory as one of her most distinguished sons.

Mr. FREE. Mr. Speaker, for the fifth time since I have been a Member of Congress the Angel of Death has visited the California delegation and taken therefrom one of its Members. The last one to be taken was JOHN E. RAKER—a man of the type who built up the great West.

He was born in Knox County, Ill. At the age of 10 years he moved with his parents to Lassen County, Calif.

Not being overly endowed with worldly goods, he took to farm work to earn money with which to attend school. He graduated from the public schools and then entered the State Normal School at San Jose, Calif., in 1882, and graduated therefrom in 1884.

He was ambitious to become a lawyer and so studied law at Susanville, Calif., with Judge E. V. Spencer. In 1884 he was admitted to practice law in the State of California, and shortly thereafter became the law partner of his former instructor, Judge Spencer. In 1894 he was elected district attorney of Modoc County, Calif., which position he held for four years. From 1902 to 1910 he served as judge of the superior court for Modoc County, Calif. He was elected to the Sixty-second and each succeeding Congress.

If I were to name what I considered to be his two outstanding qualities, I would say determination and perseverance. I have never known a man who was more persistent in carrying out his ideas. He would sometimes take considerable time to make up his mind on a question; but once his mind was made up, from that moment he was willing to fight to maintain his ideas. From the time I entered Congress up to the time of his death I served with him on the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization in the House of Representatives, and I have seen him day after day fight perseveringly and militantly for the protection of American ideals in the United States.

Early last June, as a member of a congressional committee, I accompanied Judge RAKER through northern California. Upon reaching Mount Lassen Park we found there had been a heavy rain the night before. Judge RAKER was desirous that we should go into the center of the park and view the devastated area where the volcano had blown off the top of the mountain. Old residents feared the trip, but not so with Judge RAKER; and so, following the course laid out by him we persevered through rain, snow, and mud until we accomplished the purpose of our visit. On the trip he injured his foot, and that night suffered considerably. Next morning, while we went on, he was delayed because of his injury and intended to join us later. I bade him good-by, fully expecting to meet him in a day or so. I never saw him again. When I reached Washington he was in the hospital and not able to see me; and finally he passed to the Great Beyond, never having been strong enough during his last illness to greet friends, although he felt to the last that he would again join us in our work.

To-day, by her fireside, in the high mountains of California, where the big trees reach forth to meet the heavens, his widow is sitting alone, her mind turned toward this Chamber, knowing that here to-day the men who have been the associates of her husband for many years are doing him honor. Perhaps she can not understand why this grief has come to her. Perhaps she can not understand why one in the prime of life, so vigorous—mentally and physically—should have his life cut short on earth. It is perhaps intended that she, and we, should not understand. The mystery of death is no greater than the mystery of birth. That this is not the end, we must believe.

We do not doubt from season to season but that the flowers will bloom again. When the sun sets at night, we have no doubt but that there will be another day. In the brightness of the sunshine of the day, we well know there will come a night. So we must have faith and believe that we are part of a great scheme directed and controlled by a guiding power for the good of us all.

NO FAITH

- "I have no faith," he said to me,
And there was sadness in his eyes.
"No faith," said I. "That can not be.
Do you believe the sun will rise?
"Tis dark to-night. No stars are out,
You can not see one gleaming sign,
But can you tell me that you doubt
That stars and moon again will shine?
"You say the clouds have hid their light;
Science explains the darkness so.
And you believe that this is right,
But, tell me, do you really know?
"You have no knowledge that the sun
And moon and stars which disappear
Will keep their courses as they run,
And yet you plan from year to year.
"You see the sun sink down at night,
Nor grieve to see it slip away.
You wait to-morrow's coming light,
And yet you 'have no faith' you say."

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, we have met here to-day to honor and pay tribute to the memory of one who has been taken from us, the Hon. JOHN E. RAKER, devoted husband, beloved friend, lover of nature, advocate, and statesman; he leaves behind words and deeds which will always remain an inspiring monument to those who follow after him.

JOHN E. RAKER was an outstanding man among men, kind-hearted, loyal to his ideals, always courageously carrying the banner for any purpose that would benefit his fellowmen.

One of broad vision and understanding, he worked with untiring energy to see those visions made realities.

As a humble worker in the soil he learned to know and love nature.

While still a farmer we see him as a disciple of the Great Emancipator, striving as he toiled to secure an education. Through his determination he succeeded and became a brilliant advocate, highly esteemed among his colleagues.

These qualities of sympathetic understanding, high intelligence, honesty, and perseverance of purpose made him beloved by all, and it was with a supreme confidence in him that the people of his district chose him as their Representative in Congress. Since that time we have learned to know and love him, too. His vision and untiring energy have made possible the accomplishment of the Hetch Hetchy project, one of the greatest tasks ever attempted by man. Through his love and intimate knowledge of nature he was able to render valuable aid in the conservation of its resources.

In the passing of JOHN E. RAKER this Republic has lost one of its strongest bulwarks, for it is upon the foundation of such men as he that the security of this country is built.

To his devoted wife and helpmate we echo the simple words of that great man, Abraham Lincoln, "We weep with you."

The people of his community have lost not only their Representative in Congress, but also a staunch friend, and they mourn with us.

As a testimonial to the high regard in which he was held by his people, the following beautiful lines have been penned by Eleanor S. Warner, one of his friends, and dedicated to him since his death, titled—

HOME TO HIS HILLS

To the great winds of God
He has flung his spent purse,
Back to the universe.
Mantled in peace, unshod,
He has gone his shining way
To the far hills of day;
Outworn old paths of clay.
With him he carried nought
But his gem of high renown,
On earth he had wrought
For the Lord of Life's crown.

The courts of earth will miss
His guerdon of good will,
His purpose strong and still Unstained by prejudice;
For just he was and kind,
Clean of life, and calm of mind,
To his vision never blind.

He was a friend to trees
And the fountained north hills,
To farms and schools and mills,
To roads and streams and seas—
His girth of love unbound.
Where men vexed problems found
His unbought service wound.

Blossoms we lay at his feet,
On his heart bright with hope
And big with good. We grope
In dusk; the dawn is sweet
He has won. How glad is he
Who has fought valiantly
For Christ's humanity.

O you who follow him,
Bear high his torch of right
Flaming to the peaks of light,
O you who follow him.

Mr. LEA of California took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, again the angel of death has entered the ranks of the California delegation and this time has taken from our midst our friend and colleague, JOHN E. RAKER, who passed the border that separates time from eternity, at his apartments in the city of Washington on January 22 of this year. A congressional delegation accompanied his funeral cortege and he was buried January 31, 1926, at Susanville, Lassen County, Calif., in the midst of the magnificent mountains and forests and valleys of the Sierras, among the constituency he loved and had so ably represented for many years in the Halls of Congress.

From his early manhood JOHN E. RAKER was a leader of men. Among his many honors were being selected as grand master of the Odd Fellows, past master of his Masonic lodge, many times a delegate to the grand lodge, chairman of the Democratic State central committee, an influential delegate to many State conventions, and to a national convention of his party.

He was elected to serve the people as district attorney and as judge of the superior court of Modoc County and as a Representative in Congress from the second California district, which latter office he held from 1911 to the date of his untimely death. As a prosecutor he was fair to the public, but lenient to those who had taken the first erring step; as an advocate he was tireless and almost belligerent in defense of his client; as a counselor his advice was sound and dependable; as a judge he tempered justice with mercy; as a legislator he was a patriotic American, diligent in behalf of the interest of his constituents, his State, and his Nation. He knew the rules of the House, was ready in debate, and his arguments were based on accurate information and were eloquently presented.

San Francisco owes her right to use the water and power of her Hetch Hetchy Valley to his persistent and able efforts. He initiated the legislation that established the Mount Lassen National Park in his beloved Sierras and he had a very potent influence in shaping legislation on Immigration and Naturalization and on the Public Lands. He was an able, eloquent, militant, Christian statesman.

He and his beloved wife were married in their young manhood and womanhood and remained sweethearts to the end. As year succeeded year they became more and more in love with each other. He treated her with an undying affection and old-fashioned courtesy. She was a helpful companion and loving wife. Her high ideals and intelligent advice encouraged and assisted him in the battle of life. Together they achieved success and honor and made a host of true and loyal friends. He has bequeathed to her an unsullied name, an untarnished record, and sweet memories.

JOHN E. RAKER was a truly religious man. Religion is man's recognition of his dependence on and responsibility to God and of God's loving kindness. False religion depends on superstition, ignorance, intolerance, and fear. True religion is supported by reason, science, philosophy, and faith. Faith and love is the corner stone of all human and divine relationships. The family is maintained by faith and love; faith of the members of a family in each other; faith of the husband in the wife, the wife in the husband, and the children in their parents, and all bound together by love. Business depends on faith in the integrity of obligations. The perpetuity of our Government depends on the faith of the people in its institutions and their militant love of liberty. And spiritual progress now and hereafter depends on faith in the Omnipotent Creator and Preserver of the Universe whom we call God, in a love that believes in and comprehends the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, in a faith and love that is manifested by works.

JOHN E. RAKER had as unquestioning faith as that of the Patriarch Job, who said:

For I know that my Redeemer liveth and that He shall stand at the latter day upon the earth. And after my skin, even this body is destroyed, then without my flesh shall I see God, Whom I shall see for myself and mine eyes shall behold and not another, though my reins be consumed within me.

He has "fought the good fight of faith" and has entered into eternal life. We join with his beloved wife and bereaved relatives in their sorrow and mingle our tears with theirs in mourning, but we are comforted somewhat by the knowledge that he lived a good, conscientious, successful Christian life and "that a man's last day on earth is his birthday in eternity."

Out of the dusk a shadow, then a spark;
Out of the cloud a silence, then a lark;
Out of the heart a rapture, then a pain;
Out of the dead cold ashes, life again.

Mr. CURRY resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD on the life and character of Mr. RAKER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that all Members may be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD on the life and character of Mr. RAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In accordance with the resolution heretofore adopted, the House will stand adjourned until to-morrow.

Accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Monday, April 19, 1926, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

MONDAY, April 19, 1926

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our gracious heavenly Father, we come into Thy presence this morning recognizing that goodness and mercy have been our portion. We ask that we may the better understand our obligations. Thou art sparing our lives and Thou art giving unto us responsibilities of great importance; and we therefore beseech Thee that this day shall make a record in the councils of the country that shall be for the glory of Thy name and the uplifting of the Nation in righteousness. We humbly ask in Jesus Christ's name: Amen.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Monday, April 5, 1926, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

ANNUAL MESSAGE OF PRESIDENT GENERAL MRS. ANTHONY WAYNE COOK, DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as a part of my remarks, the annual message of the president general, Mrs. Anthony Wayne Cook, of the Daughters of the American Revolution. This address was delivered this morning at the opening session of the Thirty-fifth Continental Congress held in Washington to-day.

Mrs. Cook stands for America at her best. She is the peer of any of the gentlewomen who have foregathered here with their fellow members and delegates from every State and Territory of this Union, including those chapters in foreign and distant lands. Her sympathies and her vision are as infinite as her graces and virtues are intellectual and cultivated. She and her compatriot members in this great society have achieved fame at an unusual and sacred place—the Anglo-Saxon fireside. Like all true-hearted American women, they possess tact without diplomacy, courtesy without servility, and frankness without abruptness.

This Nation to-day rests not on the material achievements of man but on the homes of our country, where Christianity and morality are made the maxims of youth, and where the family life is but a miniature of what the broader life of the world should be.

The women composing this historical society, Mr. President, are intensely American, and ever devotedly loyal to the great truths—the whole truth always—upon which our fathers and mothers have builded. They will guard the gates, and in these restless days down in the lower regions of turmoil, it is they, and they only, who can and will keep burning those ideals without which civilization yields and passes, and anarchy, red-handed anarchy, comes into its own.

I ask that the address of the president general be printed in the Record at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The address is as follows:

ANNUAL MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT GENERAL, DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION, MRS. ANTHONY WAYNE COOK, DELIVERED AT THE OPENING SESSION OF THE THIRTY-FIFTH CONTINENTAL CONGRESS, HELD IN WASHINGTON, D. C., APRIL 19, 1926, AT THE NEW WASHINGTON AUDITORIUM

For the last time it is my duty, privilege, and pleasure to address the opening session of a continental congress as your president general. Mine has indeed been a happy time of service, overflowing with the joy of interested planning and successful fruition in all that has, during this period, pertained to the progress and development of our society. It has been a triennium of accomplishment, made possible because of unselfish and helpful counsel on the part of official associates and of members functioning through their individual chapters and States for the well-being of the society and through it in no small degree for the welfare of the Nation, the well-being of our fellow Americans, and in simple truth, I may add, of the world.

Such assemblies as this bring understanding and camaraderie and confirm the mutual faith and confidence which bind us together in ties not to be broken—ties of fealty to a common cause and devotion to a consummate ideal of service. Through those privileged to be present and to be of the congress, its spirit will be translated to the many thousands represented but not of our present fellowship. I, who so well know the fine mettle of our membership, am sure that those of us here present will with understanding, unflinching courtesy, and true esprit de corps graciously overlook the minor inconveniences which by chance or unavoidable oversight may temporarily be ours incident to the largest Continental Congress ever assembled in the history of our organization. Officially in attendance upon the floor of this auditorium this morning are delegates representing every State and Territory of the Union and those of chapters in distant and foreign lands. Some of you have journeyed literally thousands of miles by sea and land to participate in this congress. Not as one whom you have so signally honored, but as a coworker and associate in the cause, may I greet you and may I felicitate the Nation upon the spirit in which you have assembled for the sessions of this, the Thirty-fifth Continental Congress of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

The day is sacred to our purpose.

On such an April morning 151 years ago a New England countryside awoke to the alarm of a night-riding courier. Fearsome were the tidings. The soldiers of the King were coming. Dire and ominous events portended. Grim, purposeful men obeyed the summons and assembled in arms on Lexington Common under command of a great, tall, man, their captain—one who had seen service in the French wars. They were but seventy. The odds against them were great, but their inflexible purpose was greater. Needless was the leader's warning, "I will order the first man shot who runs away." No cravens, no iscarlots had answered Paul Revere's call that April morning!

The world knows the story. While human hearts are attuned to sentiments of patriotism, while human aspiration seeks loftier heights, that story can not fade. "In the sacred cause of God and their country" those doughty Colonials stood fast and "fired the shot heard around the world." A stone memorial, "Sacred to liberty and the rights of mankind," records their names and valor, and a mighty nation, dedicated to liberty and justice, is the living memorial of their devotion. Truly, "no man can suffer too much, and no man can fall too soon, if he suffer and if he fall in the defense of his country's liberty."

To-day we are assembled in the Capital of the Republic made possible by that sacrifice. We are—many of us—descendants of those "embattled farmers" whose blood crimsoned Lexington green that April morning long ago. The martyr patriots of 1775 fought valiantly and died sublimely that they might prove their undying convictions. Because of their courage and devotion the principles of Anglo-Saxon liberty and justice were not overborne, and liberty was proclaimed "throughout the land and unto all the inhabitants thereof."

We who are privileged to enjoy in security the manifold blessings of life in a land where law is administered with equality and with the consent of the governed should appraise it a sacred duty and our highest privilege to revere this day, April 19, and to admonish those who are to come after to enshrine it in sacred memory.

This year, the one hundred and fifty-first anniversary of Lexington and Concord, and the one hundred and forty-fifth commemoration of the surrender of Lord Cornwallis at Yorktown, is the thirty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the Daughters of the American Revolution as a national organization. Thirty-five years by way of contrast is but a brief span, yet what an astounding era of growth and accomplishment it is our proud privilege to chronicle.

The Daughters of the American Revolution are the Nation's greatest organized feminine group—an acknowledged asset in maintaining patriotic ideals and those helpful, law-abiding endeavors which contribute to the well-being of the individual and to the stability and stamina of the Nation. In this April, 1926, while we so justly rejoice in our well-earned place in the sun of American civic, patriotic, and educational achievement, let us remember in grateful reverence the organizers and charter members of our great society. Their untiring enthusiasm, their great vision, their brilliant, zealous effort, and the fortitude and disinterested purposes of those upon whom devolved the executive direction of the society during its formative years, laid broad and sure foundations upon which those who have come after have been privileged to build. Their faith, their hope, their courage, their vision, their judgment, their sublime confidence, and the righteousness of the causes they advocated were and are a never-failing source of inspiration to those of us who are now and those who may hereafter be intrusted with the duty, responsibility, and high privilege of leadership.

I am sure we all share a poignant regret that our beloved and patriotic shrine, Memorial Continental Hall, is no longer adequate to house our annual meetings. Yet, with this entirely appropriate feeling there is the compensatory congratulation that the growth which has overtaxed the facilities of our stately hall is in itself a thing in which we may all take joyful and thankful pride. Our good work is prospering and going on far in excess of even the most sanguine hopes of the founders.

No society can attain its highest development nor approximate its ideal of service unless it plans deliberately and definitely to include within its ranks the ultimate member. As individual members and as an organized group, then, it is incumbent that we omit no effort to enroll that ultimate member. To be a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution is to be allied with definitely constructive forces—forces striving to develop the highest and most responsive citizenship and to preserve under proper conditions those immemorial principles of personal and political liberty proclaimed in the Declaration of Independence and vouchsafed to every law-abiding citizen by the Constitution of the United States.

I can conceive of no greater privilege, nor can I envision greater opportunity for service.

In appraising the present and in forecasting the future of our own lives and the career of our society, let us consider the thought expressed in this ancient Sanscrit salutation to the Dawn:

For yesterday is but a dream
And to-morrow is only a vision,
But to-day well lived
Makes every yesterday a dream of happiness
And every to-morrow a vision of hope.

As to new problems and responsibilities that may present themselves, I believe it is sometimes not unprofitable to face a future for which we have not carefully planned in advance—to be brought, if I may so phrase it, to the very borderland of a "promised land" to enter upon and to possess which we must travel an uncharted course. Such efforts develop initiative and leadership. From them not infrequently come our happiest visions. Such experiences, too, almost invariably prove to be unfailing wellsprings of prudence and wisdom.

As an organization we have been a potent force in our land in the formation of public opinion, largely because we have been steadfast in our advocacy of sterling principles and have never swerved from the path of common sense or been influenced by the lure of false beacons which might have misdirected our energies. Let us continue our indorsement of that which is worth while in our national life, but let us refrain from giving this advocacy too lightly, too unadvisedly, or too frequently, lest, with its emphasis dulled, it lose its power and fail of its purpose. Particularly would I urge that the delegates and alternates be mindful of this suggestion during this congress when the pressure for indorsement will be insistent.

A most significant, and in its effect most far-reaching, activity in consonance with the ideals and purposes of our society are the annual oratorical contests held each June and open to friendly competition of high-school youth with the Federal Constitution as subject matter.

Originated and managed by Mr. Randolph Leigh, generously assisted by the cooperation of the newspapers of the country, these contests are making a profound impression for good upon teachers, pupils, and the public at large. This activity, I am sure, typifies one of the most helpful realizations of the dignity and essential worthiness of our institutions of democratic government that has enlisted our interest since the World War. It was a proud distinction conferred upon our society that the first of the "finals" for the award of national honors in this notable competition was staged in our historic Memorial Continental Hall three years ago next June.

Most appropriately the new auditorium to be erected by our society because of such a pressing need is, with the sanction and approval of this congress, to be named Constitution Hall.

This edifice is to stand as an enduring testimonial of the faith of the Daughters of the American Revolution in the soundness, virtue, and essential completeness of the Federal Constitution. I am confident that I voice the sentiment of our society and this congress in hoping that, upon its completion, Constitution Hall may serve as the forum for many future contests with the Federal Constitution as the theme.

Constitution Hall is to complement Memorial Continental Hall, our first national headquarters in the National Capital. Contributions, bequests, and the sale of bonds have assembled a fund of such proportions that it is now prudent that immediate steps be taken to realize our vision. I am most happy to announce that immediately following this morning's session the congress is to march to the site, in the rear of Memorial Continental Hall and the administration building, where it will dedicate the ground upon which our new auditorium is to be erected.

It is fitting and eminently appropriate that in so doing we consider the name chosen for this structure and its peculiar aptness in relation to the purposes and ideals of our society.

Constitution Hall is intended to serve as the eternal protest of the patriotic women of America against destructive attacks on the Federal Constitution. The Constitution is the direct result of the War for Independence. It is the Declaration of Independence written into organic law—the charter of American liberties. It came into existence after bitter experience had proved the futility and potential tragedy of loose confederation. Based upon careful adaptations from the State constitutions then in fairly successful function, the conferees of the Constitutional Convention evolved a system of balances and checks that mark the American Constitution as without a peer among the state papers of all time. Against the Constitution tempests of political strife, emotion, and passion have beaten in vain. It has withstood every test of time and circumstance. Its principles should be held inviolate. Such modifications and expansions of it as the growth of the Nation and the natural evolution of our system of government make necessary should be framed in harmony with the spirit of the original. It should be jealously guarded against radical attacks and attempts at subversion of its fundamentals, the inherent constituents of this great instrument of democratic government.

It is our desire, too, that Constitution Hall symbolize the belief of the Daughters of the American Revolution that we have not outgrown the Constitution. That it is neither archaic nor outworn. May that stately edifice impress upon all who look upon it the conviction that the Federal Constitution, notwithstanding all the good it has accomplished as an exemplar of free institutions, has not served its full purpose in the world; that it has yet before it a far and a fair goal, to be attained not by frequent change and amendment but through steadfast adherence to the principles laid down by its framers.

Let us recall the memorable words of Benjamin Franklin, spoken on the floor of the Constitutional Convention just before the vote adopting the finished work. Said he:

"Much of the strength and efficiency of any government in procuring and securing happiness to the people depends upon opinion, on the general opinion of the goodness of that government, as well as of the wisdom and integrity of its governors. I hope, therefore, for our own sakes, as a part of the people and for the sake of our posterity, that we shall act heartily and unanimously in recommending this Constitution wherever our influence may extend and turn our future thoughts and endeavors to the means of having it well administered."

With equal truth and to a like worthy purpose might our leaders to-day admonish us.

There should not be a high school, college, or university in this country that neglects to offer an inspiring, ably presented, prescribed course of study in citizenship and government. The enemies of our institutions have always recruited their ranks from among those ignorant of the true meaning of the principles of justice, liberty, and equality under law—the cardinal tenets of our national confession of political faith. As Daughters of the American Revolution it is our high privilege to serve as sentries, guarding the Nation against such peril from within; to foster and to protect and to pass on unimpaired the sacred heritage bequeathed us in the Declaration of Independence and the Federal Constitution.

Moreover, the time is at hand to inquire searchingly if business and industry, education, and government can withstand indefinitely the studied and unremitting assaults that result from loose thinking and thinly disguised socialistic teaching in the schools and colleges of the country. If we fail to shield our young people from these false lights; if we fail to warn them against these will-o'-the-wisps, are we not neglecting our duties as parents and elders responsible for the education, character building, and citizenship of our children? This is something, fellow members, we can not and must not overlook.

The responsibility is ours to insist—to see to it—that the colleges and schools faithfully present facts of history and government in the United States and inculcate both a reverence for truth and a proper understanding and appreciation of the high destiny for which the Republic was founded.

I hope, too, as I have previously declared, that the time will not be long postponed when the coming into the full estate of citizenship—its rights, duties, and privileges—on the part both of the native-born and the naturalized, may be fittingly observed as an event of high significance in the life of the individual and one of equal importance to the welfare of the Nation.

Proponents of radical doctrines are alert and adroit in their attempts to make our schools and the textbooks of history read by the school children of the country vehicles for propaganda in support of their pestilential theories.

We, of America, are justly proud that we live under a government which gives us greater freedom than that of any other nation in the world. A government which is giving men and women political equality and advantages such as can be obtained nowhere else in Christendom. A government where the youth of our land are heirs to life, liberty, and happiness. A government whose enduring pride it is that the children of the most obscure parentage, through their own merit and the medium of that great instrument of democracy, the public-school system of America, are enabled to rise to positions of power and trust, responsibility and attainment.

We would be poor citizens indeed if we should stand in the way to-day of any honest efforts which are being made by governments or by individuals to reach a common understanding of world problems or of those reconstructive measures which are likely to bring about world peace and prosperity. But, in my opinion, it behooves us to beware of the disloyal pacifist dreamer who desires a hearing before our church circles, our home and school organizations, or our club organizations with the plea, "I am sure you will be open-minded enough to hear both sides of the story—to have a forum, as it were, expressive of current opinion." Almost invariably you will find that you have let yourself in for an eloquent, skillful propagandist who will presently try to sweep you off your feet into passing a resolution stressing some specific plan which your good common sense warns you against, but which you do not oppose, either because you dislike to be conspicuous in your opposition or that it does not seem quite courteous to be at an absolute variance with the stranger guest within your midst.

To what purpose are such deliberate misrepresentations presented to our school children in the guise of historical facts, do I hear you ask? To intentionally distort the traditions of American heroism and patriotism; to make mockery and derision of the high motives and purposes of the patriots, thereby to destroy the natural instinct of veneration in every youthful American heart for the ideals and principles of the Republic and its institutions.

At this juncture in our national life we would do well to heed the admonition of General Washington to his officers upon the eve of one of the great pivotal crises of the Revolutionary War:

"Put none but Americans on guard!"

Let that be the watchword. Let that be the test of fitness for those who are to choose textbooks for the instruction of our school children. Only by this precaution shall we disarm the enemy within the citadel!

With most commendable purpose the American Legion, in splendid cooperation with 32 other patriotic societies, has prepared a two-volume textbook of American history for public-school children throughout the country. This work is called The Story of Our American People. No effort has been omitted to make its presentation entirely truthful and nationally acceptable. Perfection, to be sure, is not claimed for it, but none the less it is a practical approach to the attainable. It is designed to prevent sectional distrusts and misconceptions, to present an accurate survey and a just appraisal of our institutions, to foster faith in the purposes and ideals of our Government, to inculcate belief in its sincerity, to instill patriotism and unswerving loyalty to our United States.

The American Historical Association is likewise doing noteworthy work in fostering historical research and in assisting in the collection of source papers and historical documents—landmarks of American history. These are being properly safeguarded and placed in designated libraries, statehouses, courthouses, and museums. Thus historical truth is at once safeguarded against loss and decay and made easily attainable to the student. A praiseworthy purpose this—for truth shall keep us free!

The statement has been made recently that because of the flood of cheap literature which has inundated the land our young people's literary appetites have been so stultified that they are incapable of reading through to its conclusion a really worth-while book. Perhaps the remedy lies not alone in the judicious suppression of harmful reading matter or in a censorship over the press, but rather in the erection and maintenance of more public libraries which shall make accessible and attractive to our young people that type of helpful, beneficial adventure in fiction, history, and biography which they demand from books just as they crave it from life. A library often is a place where the spirit finds rest and refuge from the weariness of the workaday world, but it is more than that if it is properly used. It may become a place of mental recreation, a healthful playground for the fancy, a sanctuary where the living may commune with the choicest thoughts of those whose memories will never die—a school, and one of the best ever devised by the ingenuity of mankind. Let us have more of the right kind of books in a greater number of libraries all over this United States. Books in libraries where the librarians are imbued with the desire and the necessary feeling of responsibility to help make loyal, patriotic citizens out of the youth of to-day.

If America is to hold leadership in the world; if America is to meet and solve her domestic and internal problems, more thought must be given to public education. And a more generous policy must be pursued in appropriating funds for the building and equipping of schools and for the payment of salaries commensurate to the invaluable service rendered by teachers in the public schools—those to whom is entrusted the most vitally responsible function in government—the training of the future citizen of the Republic. It is indeed a far cry to the covered wagon of the pioneer, yet in all too many rural sections school facilities and equipment and teachers' salaries are but little in advance of what they were in the primitive days.

America will endure just so long as its public schools worthily endure. Democracy requires high intelligence and improved educational standards if it is to achieve its highest promise. The last, best hope, then, of America is the public school. School taxes, therefore, let us pay gladly and without stint. Let the paring knife of economy be applied here but sparingly.

From our earliest times the school and the church have been landmarks of American progress and prosperity. Our generation must not prove derelict in its responsibility to train the mind, health, and character of our young people through educational and religious training. Only thus may they be equipped to cope with the rapidly changing demands of modern life and thought. Let us not forget that for the highest type of citizen we are quite as dependent upon character as upon education.

Daughters of the American Revolution are continuing with more vigor and effectiveness than ever before their organized effort to bring new vision and the advantages of education and a recreated environment to that splendid strain of pure American stock resident in our southern mountains, until but recently debarred by isolation and natural barriers from contact with the rest of the country. Success has as well crowned our educational efforts in other sections. Loan scholarships have been made available to students in the colleges and universities of an increasing number of States, and the funds necessary have been raised for two girls' dormitories—one by the Massachusetts Daughters, at the American International College at Springfield, Mass., and the other by the National Society and Ohio Daughters, at Oxford College, Ohio, as a memorial to Caroline Scott Harrison, the first president general of our society.

The Bible was the book of books in the lives of the early settlers of America and of the founders of the Republic. "It was in a very real sense the great charter of all their liberties in the intellectual and political world, no less than in their moral and social." A Continental Congress representing in its assembly the people of all the Colonies went upon record as to their faith in it by indorsing a resolution to "import 20,000 Bibles from Holland, Scotland, or elsewhere into the different parts of the Union," upon the recommendation of its Committee of Commerce that "the use of the Bible is so universal and its importance so great."

If, as President Coolidge says, "We desire to be supremely American we must search out and think the thoughts of those who established our institutions. The education which made them must not be divorced from the education which is to make us." If, as we all profoundly hope, the Bible is to continue to be "the textbook of all spiritual education," I am persuaded it must be read daily, without sectarian comment, in all our schools. The Bible is not read enough. But for it in all likelihood there would have been but little reading among Christian people—no books, no magazines, no schools—for the translation of the Bible into the living languages was first responsible for a more universal desire to learn the art of reading. Reading the Bible daily, without sectarian comment, in my earnest opinion should never have been banished from certain of our public schools by law. A reverent reading of it—such as once prevailed—should be returned to the curriculum of the public schools. The eternal verities of the Bible should be instilled into the consciousness of every school child. With all our wealth; with all our marvelous achievements in applied science; with all our accumulated wisdom we must not forget—we of America—that that which the hands may handle is of the earth, earthy, but that which is of the spirit is everlasting.

Variety of racial strain has developed in America a truly remarkable people—strong, vigorous, and virtuous—and notwithstanding the pessimistic viewpoint of certain of their elders with respect to our young folk, there are finer possibilities than ever before in the youth of to-day. Each generation, to be sure, looks askance upon its young folk, convinced that they are doomed to dire misfortunes and downright ruin, and yet the world continues all the while to grow better and to become a finer and a kindlier place in which to live.

Our greatest potential asset as a nation is not alone in our wealth and natural resources, priceless as they are, but in the youth of our country.

Rather than continually searching out what's wrong with our young people, might it not richly repay our investigation to inquire what's right with the young folk and what's wrong with the elders? I think so. The youth of to-day is the leader of to-morrow. Why not face the facts? They are venturing forth gallantly, as youth has done since the world began, in quest of a promised land of ideals and dreams. What help and guidance are we giving them? Vain cavilling and querulous nagging—or inspirational leadership? Too much, quite, of the former and not nearly enough of the latter, I suspect. Perhaps we but reflect our own inferiorities, limitations, shortcomings, and failures. I wonder sometimes, too, if we have kept faith with our homes.

Home making and home-keeping constitute the greatest business in the wide world. They are primarily woman's business. Love is its first requisite—then infinite patience and time—time spent in the home; time to bring back to it the essentials of religion and of character building that should never have been permitted to escape from its sacred precincts; time for the children, their lessons, their associates, their reading, their amusements; time to set the right sort of example; time intelligently to widen the home horizon so that its inmates may not be unduly hampered by restrictions, but may look upon the home as an attractive haven, a bit of beauty and light and pleasure; time to make the home the place of refuge, comfort, and inspiration which God intended it to be, the sort of place—please God—it shall continue to be through a renewed zeal and consecration of the fathers and mothers of America. Let us have less rush and hurly-burly and distraction and more time for real living, and, I am convinced, we shall have better homes and young folk more content with them and happier in them.

Preeminent among the needs of the day is a renewed pledge of fealty to the ideals for which our hero dead have given their lives—if the principles of humanity, justice, freedom, and law observance are to prevail in the world. We of America are on trial. It is for us to show the world that freedom comes only through obedience.

In America we are at the crossroads as to law enforcement. There can be no negative conduct in relation to this great issue; for all conduct is positive. We are either for or we are against law observance and law enforcement. Let us search our hearts and ask ourselves: Do our lives exemplify the professions of our lips? We must face this fact squarely. We must understand that the actions of each day answer for us this question and have a very definite effect upon the national life of our day and time. Let it be understood that we can not pick and choose from among the laws those we will obey and those we will nullify in personal conduct.

Based upon a nation-wide survey conducted during my three-year term of service now coming to a close, it is my deliberate opinion that the people of America will never repeal the eighteenth amendment. Nor do I think we should. I am rather steadfast in the opinion that as Daughters of the American Revolution—members of the largest women's patriotic organization in the country—we should pledge ourselves not only to do whatsoever we can to prevent the repeal of the amendment, but to do our utmost by precept and example to aid and assist in its observance and enforcement. Let me remind you that our Union, that our present security and progress are predicated upon loyalty to the law and obedience of the law—not only lip service but daily action.

A welter of words and controversial claims are advanced by opponents and proponents of the amendment, but a statement compiled by insurance statisticians, neither advocates nor opponents but impartial fact finders, is significant. In 1917 the death rate among policyholders from alcoholism was 4.9 per cent for each 100,000. Five years later it was but 0.9 per cent, with the death rate due to such ailments as Bright's and heart disease—both indicated in alcoholics—showing a corresponding decline.

Moreover, all candid folk, whether friends or opponents of the amendment, must agree that the increased purchasing power of the public, so general since the war, has in no small degree been due to the amendment. Tremendous sums of money once spent for liquor have gone into other expenditures contributing to the greater happiness, comfort, and well-being of the national community. It is equally a matter of common knowledge that law enforcement without a militant public sentiment in support of it is impossible. The community, after all, is the basis of the Government, and law can never be administered by government alone. The individual—you and I—must insure honest and loyal respect for law by assuming the full responsibility of good citizens in putting the law into effect. I am convinced that as a nation we are about to do this completely, enthusiastically, and successfully. I am persuaded, moreover, that the American people have not lost their distinguishing virtue, love of fair play, and the square deal; and that they will neither surrender nor retreat!

Thrift has long been esteemed an American virtue. The World War gave the old idea a new significance and a new urge, and restressed a fact we seemed in danger of forgetting—that reckless and heedless spending is unintelligent. Daughters of the American Revolution are thoroughly committed to the opinion that as a nation and people we must earn, use, and conserve with judgment, economy, and thrift if we are to realize the utmost that is desirable in comfort, happiness, and financial independence. Such a practice will tend not only toward present prosperity and future protection but will provide against the tragedy of dependence and want.

By happy circumstance the week of our congress is coincident with "Tree conservation week," a campaign which continues to enlist the earnest support of our membership. Ably assisted by the generosity and valuable professional services of Mr. MARTIN L. DAVEY and his corps of expert tree-life savers Daughters of the American Revolution are saving to posterity at least one historic tree each year. This is a work in every way worthy of our continued interest, one which we hope may be extended and broadened in its scope.

Since the first America has been a staunch advocate of world peace, Daughters of the American Revolution are steadfast in the belief that while it is the manifest duty of every citizen to foster the cause of peace, both at home and abroad, it is nothing short of supremest folly and criminal negligence to fail or to neglect to see to it that our national defense is at all times entirely adequate to cope with any untoward emergency. This, we believe, is an all-inclusive insurance, entirely prudent and commendable. Our Army and Navy and air defense should at all times be so sufficient as to equipment and so efficient as to training as to form a protective nucleus capable of rapid expansion in time of need. In the memorable words of Daniel Webster let me remind you that "God grants liberty only to those who love it and who are always ready to guard and defend it." Through adequate preparedness shall we best contribute to the peace of the world, keep faith with those who sleep in Flanders and its kindred battle fields and righteously maintain the strength and glory of this Republic.

Daughters of the American Revolution have given a strong impetus to the preservation of the Nation's vital records—historical documents and papers. As a result of our patient, careful research, authentic visualization is given the interesting and inspiring life histories and heroic deeds of the past.

Due to the foresight and effort of our organization, those who travel over the historic trails and highways of the country may read with interest and pride the annals of our early days. Monuments and markers preserve for the traveler the storied tradition. Historic sites and famous old houses have been determined and permanently marked by various States and chapters. In the vast open areas of the West as well as in the more densely populated East the old pioneer trails and landmarks are being preserved and their stories of daring and hardship and heroism made part and parcel of the great American tradition. This activity will assist in keeping alive a splendid concept of the self-denial, love of liberty, and righteousness which inspired those who had a part in the winning, the making, and the preservation of the American Union.

As Daughters of the American Revolution, ours is a proud heritage from our patriot ancestors of Revolutionary days.

How best may we prove ourselves worthy descendants?

Shall it not be in contributing our utmost toward a better citizenship and a greater America—an America fearlessly maintained, valiantly defended and protected from the clutching, blood-lustful hand of the anarchist, an America cherishing by active law observance and the maintenance of Christian ideals, the great principles of democracy and constitutional government—principles upon which our Republic was founded and upon which it had so magnificently endured?

On this day, reminiscent of Lexington and Concord, if our faith in the high purpose of our national ideals has weakened or wavered let the recollection of the courage and devotion of the men of 1775 teach us anew that "an ideal vowed is never lost." May we draw an inspiration from that recollection to reconsecrate ourselves to the observance of the law, both in spirit and in deed. May we not only resolve to be but in very truth become worthy citizens, united in efforts to make our communities the dynamic units of self-government they were intended to be, and can become with a definite purpose and will to perform on your part and mine.

In speculating upon the ultimate growth, progress, and destiny of our national society, let us remember that most of our undertakings are purposely and quite invariably continuing purposes. From their very nature they take on more and more concrete form as they develop and broaden in scope and usefulness. I trust that our civic and patriotic program will never become entirely fixed. Rather let it always be larger than city, State, or section, yet flexible enough to be adaptable to time, circumstance, locality, State or National need.

As individuals and as an organization we believe in the fundamental soundness of the social, economic, religious, and educational life of America. We have trust and confidence in the men and women called to leadership in its national and communal activities. We have an abiding faith in the great heart of the American people. We believe in the permanence of the American Government because of its justice and fairness in assuring to its "citizens both the right and the opportunity to improve their personal condition." And we believe in the institutions of America so admirably calculated to conserve the life, the liberty, the happiness, and the property of the American citizen.

When we behold the emblem of our country, the flag of the greatest Nation in the world to-day, let us resolve, as did our Revolutionary forefathers, that it shall ever wave over a free and liberty-loving people; that it shall ever represent the highest ideals of manhood, the loftiest standards of womanhood, the purest principles of social democracy. May its folds, blessed by Almighty God and glorified by the blood of patriots ever hold aloft the torch of freedom as a beacon light guiding mankind in its struggles for human freedom and human advancement.

Now and always it is my hope and my prayer for our beloved society that God will give each of us some share in working out His eternal purpose; that He will fill our weakness with His strength; that He will touch our hearts with His divine love; that He will direct our footsteps—keep us in ways that are wise and happy and teach us to hold fast the time-tested ideals cherished by our forefathers. May we ever be mindful that it is our duty righteously to defend the rights they maintained and bequeathed to us at so great a cost and so tremendous a sacrifice. Moreover, I pray that He will help us constantly to develop new resources of mind and spirit, so that we may be broadly visioned and generous to our neighbor's point of view. Bless us, that we may grow in Thy knowledge and power, and enable us as members and as an organization to render now and in the years that are to come a finer, a better service than it has been ours in the past to perform. Grant this, Dear Lord, I reverently ask, for Thy Name's sake. Amen.

THE TRANSPORTATION PROBLEM

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the Record an address delivered by the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] on the 15th instant, in New York City, before the National Council of Traveling Salesmen's Associations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered. The address is as follows:

ADDRESS OF HON. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON, OF ARKANSAS, AT THE BIGGER AND BETTER BUSINESS DINNER OF THE ASSOCIATE DIVISION OF THE NATIONAL COUNCIL OF TRAVELING SALESMEN'S ASSOCIATIONS, HOTEL PENNSYLVANIA, NEW YORK, APRIL 15, 1926

SOME PHASES OF THE TRANSPORTATION PROBLEM

Senator ROBINSON spoke as follows:

"Notable as have been the changes during recent years in the commercial and industrial institutions of the United States, they have in no degree impaired the effectiveness or diminished the value of skillful salesmanship. The most intelligent survey of prospective conditions yields no indication that the business of the commercial traveler will soon become obsolete or decline substantially in importance. The constantly increasing complexity of living conditions, particularly in the centers of population, seem to assure that his services will be augmented both in value and influence.

"THE TRANSPORTATION PROBLEM

"The relation of transportation to public comfort and prosperity is readily discerned. The public health and safety are inseparable from the prompt distribution of agricultural and manufactured products. Despite the employment of new agencies for the carriage of goods and passengers, such as the automobile, the motor truck, and the airplane, railroads are destined to continue to be the principal instrumentalities through which the surplus products of various communities may be filtered into the places where they are demanded. If railway operations should suddenly cease, millions would immediately suffer discomfort, and within less than 30 days be reduced to poverty and hunger.

"It follows that sound public policy not only justifies, but requires that the railways be safeguarded against undue impairment of earnings, and that whatever adjustments in the form of reductions in charges for the carriage of freight and passengers are effected, should be made with proper consideration for the general public interest, which requires prompt and adequate railroad service. Nevertheless, excessive and unjust rates are destructive of enterprise and prevent development. Any policy intended to strengthen the credit of railway securities without due regard to the relation between the charges imposed and the effectual distribution of commodities in response to the law of supply and demand, will in the end defeat its own purpose and result in reducing, rather than in increasing earnings.

"RAILROAD EARNINGS"

"While railway earnings, in an address appropriate to this occasion, can not be discussed in detail, some facts of outstanding prominence may be mentioned. The total mileage in the United States of class 1 roads increased in 1925 over 1924 by only 656 miles, which implies almost complete suspension of construction. This slowing-up process may be attributed to a combination of causes, but is chiefly ascribed to changes in public policy—stricter governmental regulation designed to eliminate new railroad enterprises of doubtful necessity or questionable earning power.

"With respect to class 1 roads, freight revenues for 1925 aggregated $4,553,065,290, as compared with $4,349,036,142 for 1924, an increase of $204,029,148. There appears to have been a slight decline in passenger earnings for 1925 over 1924, the figures for the first year being $1,055,913,165, as against $1,076,688,006, a reduction of $20,774,841.

"The railway operating revenues, which include freight, passenger, mail, express, all other transportation, incidental and joint facility, total $6,186,608,567 for 1925, whereas for 1924 they were $5,987,662,226. Thus it appears that the railway operating revenues increased $198,946,341.

"The 'Net railway operating income' for 1924 and 1925, respectively, was $986,017,759 and $1,136,984,243, representing an increase of $150,966,484.

"It is important here to note that the revenues for 1925 from the sleeping and parlor car surcharge amounted to $39,841,433, contrasted with $37,025,417 for 1924, an increase of $2,816,016.

"It may be admitted that the proper conclusions to be drawn from these figures, as to the elimination of the surcharge, from the standpoint of railway earnings, are affected with numerous considerations and arguments which for brevity's sake may not be here completely discussed. On the whole case it is clear that even if the discontinuance of the Pullman surcharge should result in material loss of revenues to class 1 roads, such discontinuance may be warranted as a measure of justice and as a means of stimulating travel on railways.

"INTERCHANGEABLE MILEAGE OR SCRIP COUPON BOOKS"

"Traveling salesmen and others who frequently contribute to railway passenger revenues sought in 1922 to compel by act of Congress the issuance by class 1 roads of interchangeable mileage or scrip coupon tickets at reduced rates. The history of this legislation is probably familiar to my hearers.

"The statute originated in the agitation for a form of reduced fares and the bill, as first presented, vested no discretion in the Interstate Commerce Commission.

"It was amended, however, so as to direct the commission to require the railroads subject to the act to issue such mileage or scrip-coupon tickets at just and reasonable rates and in such denominations as the commission might prescribe. This amendment was justified by its proponents on the ground that the Supreme Court of the United States had decided, in the case of Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway Co. v. Smith (April 17, 1899, 173 U. S. p. 684), that such legislation is discriminatory and constitutes a violation of the provisions in the Federal Constitution forbidding the taking of property without due process of law and denying the equal protection of the laws. The Lake Shore case did not involve an act of Congress. It held void, however, a statute of Michigan which required the railroad company to issue 1,000-mile tickets at a price below the maximum passenger fare authorized by law. The court said:

"Whether an act of this nature shall be passed or not is not a matter of policy to be decided by the legislature. It is a matter of right of the company to carry on and manage its concerns subject to the general law applicable to all, which the legislature may enact in the legal exercise of its power to legislate in regard to persons and things within its jurisdiction."

"In the case involving the Michigan statute the court discussed the voluntary issuance by railroads of interchangeable mileage tickets at reduced rates, and said:

"It is no answer to the objection to this legislation to say that the company has voluntarily sold 1,000-mile tickets good for a year from the time of their sale. What the company may choose voluntarily to do furnishes no criterion for the measurement of the power of the legislature. Persons may voluntarily contract to do what no legislature would have the right to compel them to do. Nor does it furnish a standard by which to measure the reasonableness of the matter exacted by the legislature."

"The amendment vesting discretion in the Interstate Commerce Commission was adopted in an effort to avoid the question of constitutionality which arose under the bill in its original form.

"The Interstate Commerce Commission, proceeding under the act directing that the railroads be required to issue mileage or scrip coupon tickets at just and reasonable rates, had hearings which lasted for several weeks and made findings of fact which proved fatal to their own decision that the rates resulting from a reduction of 20 per cent would be 'just and reasonable for this class of travel.'

"The railroad companies filed a bill in equity March 6, 1923, alleging that the order of the commission violated the fifth amendment and was inconsistent with section 2 of the interstate commerce act, requiring like charges for like service in similar circumstances. It was also claimed that the order was inconsistent with section 3 of the interstate commerce act, forbidding unreasonable preferences; and with section 15a of the transportation act, authorizing the commission to establish rates for rate groups that will earn a fair return upon the aggregate value of the property used in transportation.

"The Supreme Court said in part:

"The commission in its report pointed out that the net railway operating income for the seven months ended July 31, 1922, was below the return fixed as reasonable, discarded the supposed analogy between the carload rate and the interchangeable scrip of mileage ticket, intimated that the supposed benefit that the carrier might get from the advance use of the money would be more than offset by the increased expenses, and said that the question whether the scrip ticket would stimulate travel sufficiently to meet any loss that might result must remain a matter of speculation until an experiment was made."

"The court held that as a matter of law, considering the facts announced by the commission, the order constituted an abuse of discretion, and said:

"After thus excluding the grounds upon which the order could be justified, the commission held that the obvious spirit and apparent purpose of the law required that the experiment should be tried, and on these premises declared that the rates resulting from the reduction of 20 per cent would be 'just and reasonable for this class of travel.' It seems to us plain that the commission was not prepared to make its order on independent grounds apart from the deference naturally paid to the supposed wishes of Congress. But we think that it erred in reading the wishes that originated the statute as an effective term of the statute that was passed, and therefore that the present order can not stand." (U. S. v. New York Central R. R. Co., 263 U. S. pp. 608-611.)

"Thus the Lake Shore case, decided in 1899, rendered doubtful the power of Congress to compel the issuance of mileage or scrip coupon tickets at less than the regular passenger rates; and the New York Central case, decided June 21, 1924, held that the order of the commission directing the issuance of scrip coupon tickets at a reduction of 20 per cent was not enforceable, because of the absence of facts which would justify such an order.

"It is apparent that before you can secure benefits from the act of 1922, requiring mileage or scrip coupon tickets, the Interstate Commerce Commission must be convinced that the conditions which existed March 6, 1923, when its order was made, have materially changed. That, under the facts at a new hearing, no substantial loss in revenues would result from the issuance of mileage or scrip coupon tickets, because offset by increased travel, or that the earnings, present and prospective, justify the reduced rate recommended, even though material loss may result. It is to me doubtful, even under the decision in the late case referred to, whether it is necessary to show that no loss in revenue would result, provided the commission should find other facts upon which to base the conclusion that the issuance of mileage or scrip coupon tickets at reduced rates would constitute just and reasonable rates, inasmuch as the mileage book statute was passed after the transportation act and may, therefore, be considered as having modified the provisions of the latter as to what constitutes a fair return.

SOME REASONS FOR ELIMINATING THE SURCHARGE

"If business is to receive the encouragement and stimulus which we believe will result from reduced fares to traveling salesmen, the end may be more speedily accomplished through forbidding the collection of the surcharge rather than by new proceedings, either legislative or judicial, with respect to mileage or scrip. Prompted by your representatives, and convinced that the legislation is both fair and necessary, I have introduced and the Senate has passed on two separate occasions a bill to eliminate the Pullman surcharge. The measure was first passed through the Senate without discussion and by general consent. On the second occasion the whole subject was gone into. The vote by which the bill carried was overwhelming.

"In the House no action was seriously attempted with respect to the measure the first time the Senate passed it. The bill was pigeon-holed in committee. The House Committee on Interstate Commerce was so constituted that it was impossible to secure favorable action. The members of the committee were so decisive in their opposition that the greatest difficulty was encountered in forcing any consideration. At last, however, arrangements were effected by which a vote in the House was taken. The most powerful lobby I have seen during 25 years congressional experience appeared to fight the measure. Railroad lawyers, special agents, and trained lobbyists mobilized in the Capitol from every part of the United States and urged reasons—many of them fallacious and absurd—for the defeat of the bill.

"It was said that the first need is for the reduction of freight rates. The champions of farm organizations were prompted to join their resistance with that of the lobby, on the theory that farmers would soon be able to secure the advantages of reduced rates on their products if the Pullman surcharge were retained. Experience has shown the insincerity of this ground of opposition, because no notable reduction of freight rates has occurred or is in prospect.

"Again, it is claimed that the surcharge is based on a 'luxurious service' for which the plutocratic beneficiaries can well afford to pay an extra charge.

"Sleeping cars are just as necessary to the comfort of travelers as are hotels and restaurants. One is indeed hard driven for an argument who finds it necessary to contend that a passenger who spends a night in a Pullman berth enjoys an extraordinary benefit for which he should be required to pay as for a luxury.

"Labor leaders were induced to join the opposition on the ground that the surcharge repeal might prove the first step in a policy of reducing revenues to such an extent that increased wages would become impossible and reductions in pay would be threatened.

"These are illustrative of the grounds on which the lobby encompassed the defeat of the bill and perpetuated a charge for which no substantial service is rendered; a charge which a majority of the Interstate Commerce Commission found is excessive and unjust in whole or in part; a charge which has crippled business and prompted thousands of travelers to resort to busses and automobiles rather than be imposed upon.

"Members of the House who had themselves introduced bills identical with my own, and some of whom had printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and circulated throughout their districts speeches denouncing the Pullman surcharge as extortionate, changed their attitudes and voted against the bill. They could not resist the powerful and organized pressure which the lobby exerted. But for this pressure, the bill would have passed the House by a tremendous majority. It is a sufficient commentary to state the simple historical fact that the surcharge repeal failed in the House by a vote of 2 to 1.

"At the beginning of this session I reintroduced the surcharge elimination bill and had it referred to the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, where it is now pending. It seems probable that a favorable report may be secured and the bill again passed through the Senate, although it would encounter more opposition now than formerly.

"It is short-sighted policy for the railway executives to insist upon the retention of this unjust charge. Railroads generally are enjoying a period of great prosperity. Their earnings are speedily increasing. Net railway operating revenues are growing larger every year, notwithstanding alleged extravagance in expenditures. My conviction is unalterable that the surcharge has no foundation in either sound economic policy or justice."

SENATOR BURTON K. WHEELER (S. DOC. NO. 100)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney General, transmitting, in response to the first paragraph of Senate Resolution 171 (submitted by Mr. WALSH and agreed to March 25, 1926), certain information relative to expenses incurred in connection with the investigation of alleged offenses by Senator BURTON K. WHEELER, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE WHITE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. HATTIGAN, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 124. An act for the relief of the Davis Construction Co.; and

S. 3031. An act for the relief of George Barrett.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate severally with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 549. An act for the relief of John H. Walker;

S. 1039. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; and

S. 2368. An act for the relief of Ocean Steamship Co. (Ltd.), a British corporation.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2111) for the relief of Levin P. Kelly with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed bills of the following titles, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 658. An act for the relief of Harry Coventry;

H. R. 821. An act for the relief of Lewis Williams, formerly collector of internal revenue for the State of Idaho;

H. R. 1243. An act for the relief of J. H. Toulouse;

H. R. 1464. An act for the relief of Charles C. Hughes;

H. R. 1540. An act for the relief of Luther H. Phipps;

H. R. 1680. An act for the relief of Neff's Bank, of McBride, Mich.;

H. R. 1731. An act for the relief of John W. King;

H. R. 1897. An act for the relief of the heirs of the late Louis F. Meissner;

H. R. 1952. An act for the relief of T. Arthur Moore;

H. R. 2009. An act for the relief of C. M. Rodefer;

H. R. 2011. An act for the relief of William D. McKeefrey;

H. R. 2042. An act for the relief of Joseph L. Keresey;

H. R. 2254. An act for the relief of Howard A. Mount;

H. R. 2324. An act for the relief of Joe F. Jenkins;

H. R. 2329. An act for the relief of John A. Olson;

H. R. 2465. An act for the relief of Ella E. Horner;

H. R. 2744. An act to correct the military record of Charles E. Lowe;

H. R. 2933. An act for the relief of H. R. Butcher;

PETITIONS

Mr. JONES of Washington presented petitions of sundry citizens of Seattle and Spokane, in the State of Washington, praying for the passage without amendment of the so-called railway labor bill, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. WILLIS presented a resolution adopted by Division No. 1, Ancient Order of Hibernians in America, at Dayton, Ohio, favoring the passage of the so-called Phipps bill (S. 3533) to provide for the better definition and extension of the purpose and duties of the Bureau of Education, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the directors of the Painesville (Ohio) Kiwanis Club, endorsing the proposal for the extension of the east breakwater at Fairport Harbor, Ohio, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. CUMMINS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9829) to amend section 87 of the Judicial Code, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 615) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 3028) to divide the eastern district of South Carolina into four divisions and the western district into five divisions, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 616) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the second paragraph of the resolution (S. Res. 171) requesting information from the Attorney General relative to expenditures in investigations touching supposed offenses of Senator BURTON K. WHEELER, submitted an adverse report (No. 617) thereon.

Mr. McNARY, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9039) to amend section 8 of the act approved March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. p. 961), entitled "An act to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States, or with the United States, for the protection of the watersheds of navigable streams and to appoint a commission for the acquisition of lands for the purpose of conserving the navigability of navigable rivers," reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 618) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 2516) for the establishment and maintenance of a forest experiment station in Pennsylvania and the neighboring States, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 619) thereon.

Mr. GOODING, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 1344) to amend paragraph (11), section 20, of the interstate commerce act, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 620) thereon.

Mr. PINE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2855) for the relief of Cyrus S. Andrews, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 621) thereon.

Mr. TYSON, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2741) for the relief of the State of Ohio, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 622) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 598) for the relief of Alexander McLaren (Rept. No. 623); and—

A bill (S. 3555) for the relief of the Rochester Merchandise Co. (Rept. No. 624).

Mr. MAYFIELD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 546) for the relief of J. H. Toulouse, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 625) thereon.

Mr. PHIPPS, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (S. 949) to reduce the rate of postage on farm products, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 4013) granting an increase of pension to Thomas S. Millikin; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GOODING:

A bill (S. 4014) granting a pension to Ezra E. Howard; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 4015) granting an increase of pension to Alice Elwood (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CAMERON:

A bill (S. 4016) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to purchase certain lands from Babbitt Bros. Trading Co.; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

RELIEF OF FARMERS

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, during the period of the war this Government of ours found itself confronted with the problem of producing more of the foodstuffs which were essential in carrying on the war, and with that end in view the Government appealed in one way and another to the farmers of the country to produce more foodstuffs. To make it possible for them to enter into this increased production various channels of credit were opened by the Government to the farmers of the United States.

We have before us at this time a proposal to grant a settlement on the basis of about 25 cents on the dollar with a foreign nation which borrowed money from the United States for ostensibly the same purpose the farmers of America borrowed money during the same period. I wonder, I seriously wonder at this time, if the Senate is going to be consistent and if this Government of ours is going to be consistent. To ascertain that fact, I have prepared and send to the desk a joint resolution which I ask may be read, printed, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 95) providing that the United States make settlement of all debts arising from the World War, was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Whereas it is being made the policy of the United States of America to settle debts owing it by European nations for as little as 25 cents on the dollar and less as in the case of the debt of approximately $2,000,000,000 owing this Government by the Kingdom of Italy; and

Whereas such settlements are said to be justified; first, on the ground that no better settlement can be made and that such settlement is in accord with the ability of the debtor nations to pay; and second, that the loans involved were made to these debtor nations for the purpose of prosecuting a war in which the United States of America was mutually interested; and that therefore we owe liberal consideration in the collection of these debts: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the United States of America make settlement of all debts created as a result of the war and owing it by individuals and corporations at home as well as abroad, as in the case of the farmers of America, who borrowed extensively upon the encouragement of this Government through the channels of credit established by this Government, such as the War Finance Corporations, National Farm Loan Associations, Federal reserve system, and Federal land banks, etc.; and be it further

Resolved, That these settlements be made retroactive and upon the basis of property equities held by the farmer or other borrowers as of January 1, 1920, whether the farmer shall still hold these equities or shall have lost them through foreclosure or forfeiture on or since January 1, 1920; and be it further

Resolved, That a commission, the personnel of which shall be the same as the Debt Funding Commission, which has brought about the proposed foreign debt settlements with the United States, is hereby authorized to establish the machinery which it may deem necessary to work out the balances of corporations and individuals upon which to base settlements and that the basis of settlements offered these corporations and individuals be on the same terms as those offered the Kingdom of Italy in point of number of years offered for settlement and in point of interest charges and otherwise, so that the United States of America may be dealing with its own people at least as liberally as it deals with foreign debtor nations.

FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS OF AMERICAN CITIZENS WITH FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS

Mr. SHIPSTEAD submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 15), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to direct the Departments of State, Treasury, and Commerce, the Federal Reserve Board, and all other agencies of the Government which are or may be concerned thereunder, to refrain henceforth, without specific prior authorization of the Congress, from—

(1) Directly or indirectly engaging the responsibility of the Government of the United States, or otherwise on its behalf, to supervise the fulfillment of financial arrangements between citizens of the United States and sovereign foreign governments, or political subdivisions thereof, whether or not recognized de jure or de facto by the United States Government; or

(2) In any manner whatsoever giving official recognition to any arrangement which may commit the Government of the United States to any form of military intervention in order to compel the observance of alleged obligations of sovereign or subordinate authority, or of any corporations or individuals, or to deal with any such arrangement except to secure the settlement of claims of the United States or of United States citizens through the ordinary channels of law provided therefor in the respective foreign jurisdictions, or through duly authorized and accepted arbitration agencies.

RESIDENT ASSISTANT CLERK OF DISTRICT COMMITTEE

Mr. CAPPER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 205), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution No. 26, agreed to March 10, 1925, authorizing the Committee on the District of Columbia to employ a resident assistant clerk until the end of the first session of the Sixty-ninth Congress, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, hereby is continued in full force and effect until the end of the Sixty-ninth Congress.

CERTAIN FILES OF THE THIRTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS

Mr. SHIPSTEAD submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 206), which was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolved, That the following papers from the files of the Thirty-seventh Congress, third session, be transferred to the Minnesota Historical Society, St. Paul, Minn.:

Executive Document No. 7, Message from the President of the United States in answer to a resolution of the Senate of the 5th instant in relation to Indian barbarities in Minnesota (dated December 11, 1862);

Testimony received by and reports of the military commission which investigated the Sioux outrages in Minnesota in 1862;

Rough draft of S. 416, "For the relief of persons for damages sustained by reason of depredations and injuries by certain bands of the Sioux Indians";

Copy of S. 565, "For removal of certain bands of Sioux or Dakota Indians and the disposition of their lands in Minnesota and Dakota."

CORPORATE COMBINATIONS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I submit a resolution for reference to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I ask that it may be read from the desk.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 203), as follows:

Whereas there have been formed in recent years numerous industrial and other combinations on the basis of the acquisition either of shares of stock or of plants or other assets, and in particular the following: The Kelvinator, Nizer, and Grand Rapids Electric Refrigerator Corporations, the du Pont de Nemours and Viscoloid Cos., the Remington and Noiseless Typewriter Cos., the Corona and L. C. Smith Typewriter Cos., the Icy Hot and American Thermos Bottle Cos., the Congoleum and Nairn Cos., the Glinter, J. T. Connor, and O'Keefe chain grocery stores; and

Whereas the consolidation of Earl & Wilson and Cluett-Peabody Co. brought together two of the largest shirt and collar manufacturers in the United States; and

Whereas the National Dairy Products Co. has been steadily engaged in acquiring ice-cream plants in various portions of the United States; and

Whereas a series of mergers, combinations, and consolidations have been going forward in the baking industry; and

Whereas the Kardex Co., formed by a combination of three companies, has acquired control of the Library Bureau and the Globe-Wernicke Cos.; and

Whereas the American Rayon Products Co. claimed to have combined mills representing 50 per cent of rayon output with the avowed purpose of aiding in stabilization through lessened competition; and

Whereas in January of this year Mr. A. F. Myers, special assistant to the Attorney General, stated to the House Committee on Appropriations: "Notwithstanding all the years of legislation on the trust problem and all the years of endeavor in enforcing antitrust laws, I think it must be recognized that we are just on the threshold of the trust problem. You can not pick up a paper without reading of some merger in business, and, as you know, unless it appear that the merger would result in restraint of trade within the decisions in the Steel case, or unless it is brought about by stock acquisition which results in elimination of competition between two companies within the meaning of section 7 of the Clayton Act, there is not now any legislation covering the situation. Congress did legislate on the subject of mergers in section 7 of the Clayton Act when it provided that no corporation engaged in commerce should acquire all or any part of the capital of another corporation where the purpose or effect might be to eliminate competition, but we find in practically all these recorded instances at the present day that the companies buy not the stock of each other but the physical assets, and that, of course, takes the transaction out of section 7 of the Clayton Act"; and

Whereas the aforesaid precedent of the decision in the Steel Corporation case seems to be misconstrued in view of the more recent decision in the Lehigh Valley Railroad case, in which a much smaller control of the industry affected was held to be in violation of the antitrust laws; and

Whereas the intention of Congress in passing the antitrust laws was to prohibit all combinations of competitors that would substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly and increase of prices, whether by the acquisition of shares of stock or of plants or other assets; and

Whereas the profits from the issue of so-called watered stock by such monopolistic corporations is alleged to be one of the chief motives for their formation and an inducement to the charging of excessive prices for the commodities sold by them; and

Whereas it has been alleged that such combinations are in violation of the antitrust laws: Therefore

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission is directed to make an inquiry into the aforesaid corporations alleged to be organized and operated in violation of the antitrust laws and into all other important combinations of like character found during the last four years and to report to the Senate as follows:

(1) A description of the form and extent of each of the aforesaid combinations and such others of a similar character as may have been found.

(2) With respect to each of the combinations so described, (a) whether the effect or tendency of the combination has been substantially to lessen competition or to create a monopoly in any line of commerce in any section or community; (b) whether, and to what extent the effect of such combination has been to stabilize production and employment, as shown by (1) the proportion and growth of the production and sales of the combination in comparison with those of its competitors; (2) the prices and margins of profit on commodities sold; (3) the rates of profit on capital employed in the business; (4) the issue of securities in amounts in excess of the fair value of the property or earning power represented thereby, and the facts regarding the disposition of the same; (5) the total production in the Nation, and relative number of persons fully employed.

(3) What new form of Federal action whether legislative or administrative is recommended as most effective to regulate and control such corporate combinations, including legislation to prevent the issue of securities which are not justified by the fair value of the property or earning power of the issuing corporation, or respecting which adequate disclosure is not made regarding such value or earning power, to prevent speculative banking control, and to prevent excessive profits.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I submit for the RECORD, and also ask that there may be referred to the committee with the resolution, certain newspaper reports concerning the organization of each of the corporations listed in the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The newspaper reports are as follows:

KELVINATOR CORPORATION OF MICHIGAN

History: Corporation has been organized to take over the business and properties of the Kelvinator Corporation of Delaware and the Detroit Carrier & Manufacturing Corporation of Michigan. The combined companies will maintain their respective plants in Detroit. Over the period of the last several years the Kelvinator Corporation has purchased a large portion of its stamping and materials from the Detroit Carrier Co. The result and benefits of this consolidation will be numerous. Although Detroit Carrier & Manufacturing Co. will continue its present business, the surplus capacity of its large plant will be utilized to take care of the increasing volume of business and expansion of the Kelvinator Corporation. (Cumulative Daily Digest, citing official statement, February 6, 1925.)

Merger agreement: A merger of corporation and Nizer Corporation (Maryland) has been agreed upon by the dominant interests of both companies. As a condition of the merger, it is expected that Nizer will declare a small stock dividend to equalize its shares with those of Kelvinator, when they will stand at 253,750, after the conversion of the "A" stock. (Cumulative Digest, citing Wall Street Journal, November 11, 1925, p. 1.)

DU PONT DE NEMOURS CO.

Plans have been completed for the formation of company to manufacture and deal in pyroxylin, plastic products, and articles. Company, it is expected, will be chartered at Dover, Del., this week. Company will take over and carry on the business heretofore conducted by Viscoloid Co. (Inc.), with a plant at Leominster, Mass., and also the pyralin business heretofore conducted by E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., with plants at Arlington, N. J. (Cumulative Daily Digest, citing New York Times, April 7, 1925, p. 36.)

REMINGTON TYPEWRITER CO.

The company's assumption of control of the manufacturing and merchandising of noiseless typewriters through its 51 per cent ownership in the newly formed Remington-Noiseless Corporation should prove of great benefit to the Remington Co. and highly advantageous to the Noiseless. As a result of the affiliation, it is not overoptimistic to expect Remington earnings in two years to be among the largest in the company's history. (Cumulative Daily Digest, citing Wall Street Journal, February 27, 1924, p. 6.)

AMERICAN THERMOS BOTTLE CO. (M)

Reorganization plans: Plans for the reorganization of company and Icy-Hot Bottle Co. into a new Ohio company which will take over the assets of both companies provide for the continuance of the control of the new company by the present management for a period of four years, or until January 1, 1929. (Cumulative Daily Digest, citing Cincinnati Inquirer, February 27, 1925, p. 18.)

A circular sent to stockholders of company and the Icy-Hot Bottle Co., dated February 20, 1925, informing them of the plan to organize a new company under the laws of Ohio, said in part: "The physical properties of the American Thermos Bottle Co. are in good condition and have a capacity ample to care for the increased burden to which they will be put. As a result of the concentration of manufacturing effort, and by elimination of other operating charges and the increased volume of business which will be gained, it is to be anticipated that a real betterment may promptly be developed in the company's earning power. (Cumulative Daily Digest, citing official statement, March 18, 1925.)

AMERICAN RAYON PRODUCTS CORPORATION

New corporation plans completed: Plans have been completed for the consolidation of seven of the largest rayon manufacturing companies in New York into a new concern to be known as the American Rayon Products Corporation, organized under the laws of Delaware. The capitalization is $3,000,000. Among the companies which will enter the combination are the Knitted Textile Corporation, the Banner Silk Co., the Varyknit Co., Filtext Mills, Art Silk Mills, and the Crystal Mills. The merger will be sponsored by a large financial group, it became known April 21, which is expected to make public an offering in the near future of a block of the consolidated securities. * * * The capacity of the combined plants, according to the bankers, will be from 65 to 70 per cent of the Rayon knit goods used annually in New York. (Cumulative Daily Digest, citing New York Times, April 22, 1925, p. 34.)

CLUETT-PEABODY & CO. (INC.)

Acquisition: Purchase of Earl & Wilson (Inc.) by Cluett-Peabody & Co. (Inc.) was announced at Troy, N. Y., January 26, bringing about the merger of the two largest shirt and collar manufacturing concerns in Troy. It was said Cluett, Peabody & Co. (Inc.) had taken over the fiscal assets and the trade-mark of Earl & Wilson, and that Edgar H. Betts, president, would become a vice president of Cluett, Peabody & Co. The financial consideration involved was not made public. (Cumulative Daily Digest, citing New York Times, January 27, 1925, p. 5.)

NATIONAL DAIRY PRODUCTS CORPORATION (M)

President's statement in regard to acquisitions: President Rieck in the annual report to stockholders gives the following résumé of acquisitions: "During the past year the entire common stock of J. T. Castles Ice Cream Co., of Newark, N. J., and the Castles Ice Cream Co., of Perth Amboy, N. J., was acquired by your company, against which there were issued 40,000 shares of capital stock. In addition there was acquired the entire common stock of the W. E. Hoffman Co., which operates plants in Altoona, Phillipsburg, Tyrone, and Waynesboro, Pa., and the assets and business of the Durkin Ice Cream Co., of Waukegan, Ill. Since January 1, 1925, the entire assets of Moore Bros. Co., of Oil City and Meadville, Pa., and the assets and business of William Ohlhaber Co., of Aurora, Ill., were acquired. These acquisitions involved no further issue of National Dairy Products Corporation capital stock, the purchases having been financed out of earnings. In accordance with its established policy, your board of directors expects to add further properties during the year as advantageous opportunities arise." (Cumulative Daily Digest, citing official statement March 3, 1925.)

Acquisition: Corporation has acquired business of Chapelle Thompson Ice Cream Co., of Chicago, an old-established firm operating four plants, with a production last year of approximately 1,500,000 gallons. Acquisitions will effect substantial operating and marketing economies in connection with business of Hydrox Corporation, a National Dairy Chicago subsidiary. As acquisition was made by exchange of stock, no public offering of securities will be made. (Cumulative Daily Digest, citing Wall Street Journal, April 4, 1925, p. 6.)

NATIONAL DAIRY PRODUCTS CORPORATION

Contract for acquisition: Corporation has entered into a stock purchase contract to acquire later in November Sheffield Farms Co. and its affiliated companies, Sheffield By-Products Co. and Sheffield Condensed Milk Co. Supplee-Wills-Jones Milk Co. was acquired recently. (Cumulative Daily Digest, citing Wall Street Journal, November 10, 1925, p. 15.)

Corporation has acquired, through a merger, the assets of the Beyer Ice Cream Co. The Beyer Ice Cream Co. has extensive plants in Philadelphia and New York and has developed the largest ice-cream business in the country. (Cumulative Daily Digest, citing Wall Street Journal, January 5, 1926, p. 17.)

Control of Franklin Ice Cream Corporation has been obtained through the exchange of 22,000 shares of National Dairy Products Corporation stock for 22,000 shares of Franklin Ice Cream on a share for share basis. (Cumulative Daily Digest, citing New York Herald-Tribune, January 9, 1926, p. 12.)

KENNECOTT COPPER CORPORATION

Shareholders at special meeting April 9 authorized increase in capital stock from 8,000,000 shares to 5,000,000 of no par value and of capitalization from $15,000,000 to $25,000,000. Stockholders also authorized offer of exchange of stock of corporation for Utah Copper Co. stock on the basis of 1½ shares of Kennecott for 1 share of Utah. Should all the Utah shares be exchanged it would require 1,763,975½ shares of Kennecott. (Cumulative Digest, citing Wall St. Jour., April 10, p. 9.)

Corporation has acquired by recent exchanges about 95 per cent of the outstanding capital stock of Utah Copper Co. (Cumulative Digest, citing Wall Street Journal, July 15, 1925, p. 1.)

FIRST NATIONAL STORES, INC.

Company was organized August 25, 1917, in Massachusetts as the Ginter Co.; name changed to present title December 28, 1925. It is both an operating and a holding company and represents a consolidation of the business formerly conducted by the Ginter Co., the John T. Connor Co., and O'Keefe (M), Inc. (Cumulative Daily Digest citing official statement, January 20, 1926.)

Since the consolidation was effected the new company has closed about 25 old stores and opened 50 additional, making a net gain of 25 and giving the system just under 1,675 stores.

In 1925 company did a gross business of just under $49,000,000. With the additions of the Dorr chain, expansion of both the general and meat stores, and natural growth of the business company expects to do over $60,000,000 in 1926. (Cumulative Daily Digest, citing Boston News Bureau, February 11, 1926, p. 1.)

CORONA TYPEWRITER CO. (INC.)

Merger arranged. Arrangements were completed at Syracuse, N. Y., on December 16, 1925, for a $12,000,000 merger of the above company with the L. C. Smith & Bros. Typewriter (Inc.). Frank R. Ford, president of Ford, Bacon & Davis (Inc.), of New York, announced that his company, which a little more than a year ago acquired control of L. C. Smith & Bros. Typewriter (Inc.), has contracted to purchase a controlling interest in the stock of the Corona Typewriter Co. (Inc.). The new company will organize before the first of the year, Mr. Ford said, under a new firm name, although the trade names of the Corona portable typewriter and the L. C. Smith standard office typewriter will be retained. Headquarters will be in Syracuse. (Cumulative Daily Digest, citing Boston Herald, December 17, 1925, p. 2.)

RAY CONSOLIDATED COPPER CO. (M)

Stockholders of both company and Chino Copper Co. have voted in favor of absorption of Chino by Ray through exchange of one and two-thirds shares of Ray for one of Chino. Ray shareholders also ratified issuance of 1,500,000 shares of additional capital stock for this purpose, making authorized capitalization 3,100,000 shares, par $10. (Cumulative Daily Digest, citing Wall Street Journal, February 16, 1924, p. 3.)

CONGOLEUM-NAIRN (INC.)

President Foster states: "The merger of the Nairn Linoleum Co. and the Congoleum Co. (Inc.) has been completed and the vast production of the Nairn Linoleum Co. will henceforth be distributed through our selling organization." The merger gives Congoleum-Nairn (Inc.) a complete line of hard-surface floor coverings, combined inlaid and plain linoleums with congoleum rugs and floor coverings and should increase the volume of sales at a minimum of additional expense. (Cumulative Daily Digest, citing Wall Street Journal, December 4, 1924, p. 3.)

RAND-KARDEX CO.

Consolidation: New company. American Kardex Co. (Inc.) and the Rand Co. (Inc.) has been consolidated into the Rand-Kardex Co., manufacturers of metal office equipment, with capitalization of $10,000,000. James H. Rand, sr., will be chairman of the board of directors of the consolidation and James H. Rand, jr., will be president and general manager. (Cumulative Daily Digest, citing Iron Age, May 7, 1925, p. 1400.)

RAND CO. (INC.) (M)

Proposed merger: New company. Ten years of keen business rivalry between a father and a son will end on April 1, 1925, with the combination of the Rand Co. (Inc.) and the Kardex Co., both of Tonawanda, N. Y., under the name of the Rand-Kardex Co. (Inc.). The Rand-Kardex Co. will have an authorized capital stock of $10,050,000. Mr. Rand, sr., will be chairman of the board and Mr. Rand, jr., will be president and general manager. Mr. Rand, jr., said March 27 that a formal statement will be made to stockholders covering details of the merger and plan for exchange of stock on a pro rata basis. The merger gives the Rand-Kardex Co. factories in Canada and Germany, in addition to plants in the United States. (Cumulative Daily Digest, citing New York Herald-Tribune, March 28, 1925, p. 1.)

KARDEX-RAND CO.

Consolidation: President Rand, jr., announced June 30 that the Index Visible Co., of New Haven, Conn., had been consolidated with his company. (Cumulative Daily Digest, citing New York Times, July 1, 1925, p. 39.)

LIBRARY BUREAU

Acquired: The Library Bureau has passed into the control of James H. Rand, jr., president of the Rand-Kardex Co. Mr. Rand will consolidate the Library Bureau with the Rand-Kardex Co. He has already incorporated the new company, to be known as the Rand-Kardex Bureau, with a capitalization of $25,000,000. (Cumulative Daily Digest, citing Wall Street Journal, October 31, 1925, p. 13.)

Offer for stock: President Rand, jr., of the Rand-Kardex Co., under an agreement with N. B. H. Parker, F. Kingsbury Curtis, George Hewitt Myers, and Thomas Roberts, jr., has acquired 16,720 shares of common stock of Library Bureau and upward of 25,689 shares of L. B. Securities Co., a Maine corporation, and now offers $40 a share for such other common stock of the two companies as may be deposited in the National City Bank, New York, on or before December 26, 1925. (Cumulative Daily Digest, citing Boston News Bureau, November 2, 1925, p. 4.)

RAND-KARDEX BUREAU (INC.)

Company has now taken over the Globe-Wernicke Co., according to President Rand, jr. As a result, Mr. Rand, jr., said, the Rand-Kardex Bureau (Inc.) will be the largest distributor of business equipment in the world, both in sales volume and the number of employed. (Cumulative Daily Digest, citing New York Times, January 11, 1926, p. 44.)

AUNT JEMIMA MILLS CO.

Sale completed: The sale of company to Quaker Oats Co. was completed November 24 at a meeting of stockholders of company with representatives of the Quaker Oats Co. Price paid was $4,000,000. The milling plant will be continued in operation at St. Joseph. (Cumulative Digest, citing New York Times, November 25, 1925, p. 32.)

STANDARD OIL CO. OF INDIANA (M)

Oil situation confidence indicated: Company's acquisition of control of Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co. at this time is regarded by bankers as indicating great confidence in the oil situation by Standard. (Cumulative Daily Digest, citing Wall Street Journal, April 3, 1925, p. 3.)

To increase output: Through the acquisition of Pan American's Mexican properties, tankers, and transportation facilities, company will become one of the largest producers and marketers of fuel oil in the world. (Cumulative Daily Digest, citing New York Financial News, April 3, 1925, p. 1.)

STANDARD OIL CO. OF CALIFORNIA

Consolidation: Consolidation of the Pacific Oil Co. and the Standard Oil Co. of California was announced December 24 by Henry W. De Forest, chairman of the Pacific Oil Co. President Kingsbury, of the Standard Oil Co. of California and President Shoup, of the Pacific Oil Co. and the Associated Oil Co., issued supplementary announcements on the merger. The merger is subject to ratification by shareholders. (Cumulative Daily Digest, citing New York Times, December 25, 1925, p. 31.)

The proposed consolidation of Pacific Oil Co. with the Standard Oil Co. of California under one organization, to be dominated by the latter, is one of the most important consolidations ever planned in the history of the oil industry, according to opinions expressed December 25 by executives affiliated with some of the largest companies in the industry. In one quarter the consolidation, which is subject to the approval of the stockholders of each company, was considered more important than the recent consolidation of the Magnolia Petroleum Co. of Texas and the Standard Oil Co. of New York, because of the fact that the latter previous to the consolidation controlled 70 per cent of the capital stock of the Texas organization. (Cumulative Daily Digest, citing New York Times, December 26, 1925, p. 18.) * * * According to this executive the combination would place the Standard Oil Co. of California as second in rank to that of the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, the leader in the world's petroleum industry. (Cumulative Daily Digest, citing New York Times, December 26, 1925, p. 18.)

Mr. WALSH. I also ask that there may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce a brief article appearing in the January number of the Journal of the Academy of Political Science, by Prof. W. Z. Ripley, of Harvard University, whose standing in America as an economist has been recognized by his being called before a number of the committees of the Senate on a number of occasions, and who sounds a clarion note of warning in this brief article against the tendency exhibited by the organization of the combinations to which the resolution refers.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the proceedings of the Academy of Political Science in the city of New York, Vol. XI, No. 4, January, 1926; Trade Associations and Business Combinations; a series of addresses and papers presented at the annual meeting of the Academy of Political Science in the city of New York, October 28, 1925; pp. 143-146]

TWO CHANGES IN THE NATURE AND CONDUCT OF CORPORATIONS

(W. Z. Ripley, professor of political economy, Harvard University)

Two changes in the nature and conduct of corporations, characteristic of the postwar period, have a direct bearing upon the future of private business in its relation to the supervisory or regulating agencies of the State. They are both bound to increase the likelihood of an extension rather than a lessening of the powers and activities of such bodies as the Federal Trade Commission. Fundamental these changes are, inasmuch as they strike at the very taproot of our capitalistic system. For this system is founded upon the theory that the private as distinct from the common ownership of property best conduces to the public welfare, because such possession involves the giving of a gauge or guaranty by the owner to his fellow citizens for thrifty, efficient, far-sighted and public-spirited management thereof. His is the reward if he be successful. And he bears the loss in case of misdirection. Otherwise stated, it is the fundamental principle, interwoven throughout all human relationships that power and responsibility must ever be yoked together. It is because these two developments directly assail this principle that I hold them to be sinister and of grave public import.

The first of these changes is the divorce of the ownership of property, represented by securities emitted by corporations or trustees, from any direct accountability whatsoever for its prudent and efficient management. The second change is the wide and ever-accelerating diffusion of a considerable portion of this ownership, represented by stock holdings of employees and of the direct consumers, both of public utility corporations and of private business companies as well. The net result of both changes is the assumption of an absolute control by intermediaries—most commonly bankers, so called—in place of the former responsibility for direction which, theoretically at least, rested upon the shoulders of the actual owners.

Both these tendencies menace alike the welfare of the private owners themselves and of the working classes; and they put the public interest in the sound and straightforward management of these businesses in jeopardy—not because bankers, as such, are more frail than other people in general, but simply because the possession of uncontrolled power is always certain to entail abuse, whereby both innocent and guilty are alike dragged down. The result, therefore, unless present tendencies are taken in hand, will necessarily be the extension of the activity of such bodies as the Federal Trade Commission, acting for the protection of those who have unwittingly made themselves wards of the State in respect of their possessions.

The practical disappearance of the individual and partnership forms of business organization in favor of the corporation took place before the war. Almost a thousand companies are now listed on the New York stock exchange alone—163 railroads and 763 other corporations. The present transformation is merely in respect of the seat of power over their direction. All kinds of private businesses are being bought up by banking houses, and new corporations are being substituted for the old, in order that the purchase price (and more) may be recovered by sale of shares to the general public. But the significant change is that the new stock, thus sold, is entirely bereft of any voting power, except in case of actual or impending bankruptcy. General stockholders, to be sure, have always been inert, delegating most of their powers of election. But at worst they might always be stimulated to assert themselves, and, in any event, they all fared alike as respects profits or losses. Under the new style of corporation such general stockholders are boldly deprived of all rights in this direction and new preferred stocks are sold up to the hilt of the value of the assets, if not beyond. The issues are called preferred stocks. They are really bonds. And instead, as formerly, of being limited to a half or two-thirds of the tangible assets, no limit is now set, except the powers of absorption of the investing public.

Every kind of business is being swept into this maelstrom. Several public utilities, except railroads, chain and department stores, food-stuffs, washing machines, refrigerators, confectionery, make-believe silk stockings, toilet and beauty preparations, our daily bread, our cake, and our ice cream—even our home-made pies! Every conceivable article, of direct or indirect consumption, is covered by the change. The recent Dodge Bros. (Inc.) is typical. A banking house buys up a private business for, let us say, $146,000,000. This sum and more it recovers by the sale to the public for $160,000,000 of bonds, preferred stock, and 1,500,000 nonvoting shares of class A common stock. But not a single one of the 500,000 class B voting common shares is thus sold. The promoters have virtually paid themselves a handsome profit for the assumption of the entire directorial power, having mortgaged the property to the full amount of its original cost, including both assets and capitalized earning power.

Perhaps the baldest case of this sort is that of an artificial silk concern, which thus sold (let us hope?) 598,000 shares of nonvoting class A stock, reserving 2,000 of the total 600,000 shares as class B stock carrying exclusive voting rights. There is no concealment about it. But who, may we ask, has given a hostage to fortune for honest and economic management of the business? The promoters stand to lose only the amount of their stake—a minus quantity in dollars, leaving aside, of course, the moral obligation. It is the public stockholders who stand to lose their all in case of misdirection. And most of them have parted with any hope of participation in future profits over and above their fixed return by agreement in the subscription to forfeit all "preemptive" rights in the issue of new stock. How can there be other than a whirlwind of abuse of power under such conditions?

As for the second financial fashion—the wide distribution of stock to employees and to consumers of the corporation's product, whether electric service, steel, or what not—the effect is bound to be cumulative with that of insinuation of banking power between ownership and operation. Corporations have always been susceptible to control by concentration of voting power. Far less than half of the capital stock may be as effective for such control as possession of an actual majority. But it is elemental, requiring no proof, that the larger the number of shareholders the more easily may a small concentrated block of minority holders exercise sway over all the rest. With a dozen owners, probably 51 per cent will be necessary for dominance. With 300,000 scattered holdings, a possible 15 or 20 per cent of the votes can never be over-matched at an election. In 1923 there were 250,000 new stockholders registered in the electric light and power companies alone. The total number of stockholders in all sorts of concerns has almost doubled since 1900, rising to an aggregate of 14,423,000 in 1923. These shareholders now possess over $70,000,000,000 worth of stock at par on the showing of the Federal income-tax returns. Such possession used to be confined to the wealthy and the well-to-do class. Now it comprehends the small householder and larger number of wage earners. The former concentration of wealth is now yielding place to so wide a diffusion as to call for public recognition by way of legislation or oversight. But the important point to note is that the wider the diffusion of ownership the more readily does effective control run to the intermediaries, in this case promoters, bankers, or management companies. Until corrected by appropriate revision of our corporation law or practice this apparently healthful manifestation may contain the seeds of grave abuse.

The foregoing dangerous tendencies are much aggravated also by reason of the operation of a number of highly artificial legal devices which serve to isolate still further the property owner from control over his investment. The holding company, voting trusts, trusts set up for the living, the moribund, or the dead, the investment trust, and finally the intervention of the life-insurance companies as investing agents for their policyholders, each and every one of these has latterly insinuated itself to still further set off ownership from responsibility in management. It is all cumulative, and in the aggregate fraught with the gravest possibilities.

Many remedies for undue concentration of power or direction of corporations have been suggested. There is one which stands forth pre-eminently. Publicity of accounts and their standardization are likely to be most serviceable as a check upon otherwise unrestrained control. These millions of investors and the public, even if they have so confidently given their possessions over into the care of others, have a right to full and complete unmitigated information. There lies an appropriate function for a rejuvenated and enlarged Federal commission to discharge an obligation of the Federal Government to a great and in many respects a helpless body of our citizens. This may come about soon. It may be long delayed. But it will occur some day as one of the several necessary correctives for these existing practices.

COMMITTEE SERVICE

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE] be relieved from further service upon the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I take this action at the request of the Senator from Maryland. I now ask that the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. STUCK] be assigned to the Committee on Military Affairs in the place just made vacant by the retirement of the Senator from Maryland and that he also be named to fill a vacancy in the minority of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is agreed to.

AMERICAN-ORIENTAL MAIL LINE

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I submit a resolution and ask that it be read, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 204) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to as follows:

Whereas the American-Oriental Mail Line, consisting of five President type Shipping Board vessels operated between Puget Sound and the Orient, representing an original cost in excess of $31,000,000 and constituting the only American passenger-cargo line in the Pacific Ocean north of San Francisco, is proposed to be sold by the United States Shipping Board to R. Stanley Dollar for $4,500,000; and

Whereas confirmation of the proposed sale to Mr. Dollar would place in the hands of one concern the trans-Pacific shipping of San Francisco and the Pacific Northwest, the same interest having already purchased the service from San Francisco, thus establishing by Government action a monopoly in the Pacific; and

Whereas the president of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation after examination of proposals submitted to the board recommended that the board reject all bids because (a) the price offered is inadequate in comparison with former sales and in view of large actual profits in recent operations, (b) the terms upon which the ships are proposed to be sold do not protect the public interest, and (c) the interests of the Dollar Steamship Co. rests in California and the bid is generally disadvantageous to the Pacific Northwest and particularly to the port of Seattle; and

Whereas it is understood that the United States Shipping Board at the time it voted to sell the ships to the Dollar Steamship Co. had a supplemental bid of another bidder offering a higher price, which bid remained unopened; and

Whereas the assets of the United States Shipping Board are threatened with dissipation and it is reported that a substantially higher price could be obtained if new bids were invited: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the bid of R. Stanley Dollar and all other bids for the purchase of the vessels of the American-Oriental Mail Line be rejected; and that the United States Shipping Board should, in order to carry out the provision of section 7 of the merchant marine act of 1920 that "preference in the sale or assignment of vessels for operation on such steamship lines shall be given to persons who are citizens of the United States who have the support, financial and otherwise, of the domestic communities primarily interested in such lines," should either call for new bids in respect of the sale of such vessels or should reassign such vessels for operation to persons who are representative of and have the support, financial and otherwise, of the shipping and other interests of the Pacific Northwest.

WILLIAMSBURG (VA.) CELEBRATION OF BILL OF RIGHTS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives (H. Con. Res. 22), which was read, as follows:

Whereas the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration of Rights, written by George Mason, and commonly called the Virginia Bill of Rights, is to be celebrated in the city of Williamsburg, Va., the place of its adoption, on the 12th day of June, 1926; and

Whereas the said Declaration of Rights is recognized as one of the great liberty documents of all time, has served as a model for similar statements of fundamental principles contained in the constitution of many of the States of the American Union and in the early amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and has been an inspiration to liberty-loving people throughout the world; and

Whereas it is fitting that the Congress should be represented in the observance of such anniversary: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be, and is hereby, created a joint committee consisting of 10 members, 5 of whom shall be appointed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate and 5 by the Speaker of the House, to attend said celebration, for the purpose of representing the Congress of the United States.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, the resolution simply provides for the appointment of a joint committee of the House and Senate, without the expenditure of any money. They are to pay their own expenses and are to go to Williamsburg to commemorate on the 12th of June the adoption of the noted and famous Bill of Rights of Virginia, written by George Mason, which has been adopted in most of the State constitutions. Mr. Mason was also the father of the first 10 amendments to the Federal Constitution. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

ITALIAN DEBT SETTLEMENT

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I am prepared to address the Senate on the subject of the Italian debt settlement, but I should be glad to conform to any arrangement for the disposition of business this morning.

Mr. CURTIS. We took an adjournment Saturday afternoon and we would like to have the morning business disposed of first.

Mr. WALSH. Very well.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10198) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes, requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. FUNK, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. TINKHAM, Mr. GRIFFIN, and Mr. COLLINS were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10198) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. PHIPPS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, that it agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. CAPPER, Mr. GLASS, and Mr. KENDRICK conferees on the part of the Senate.

PERMANENT ASSOCIATION OF INTERNATIONAL ROAD CONGRESSES

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, on behalf of the chairman of the committee, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], I report an original joint resolution authorizing membership in the Permanent Association of International Road Congresses. I desire to have the joint resolution read at length.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 94) to authorize appropriations for the expenses of membership in the Permanent Association of International Road Congresses, and for other purposes, was read, the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any sums in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, not exceeding $3,000 per annum to enable the United States to accept membership in the Permanent Association of International Road Congresses, and such further amounts as may be necessary for the expenses of participation in the meetings of the congresses and of the executive committee thereof.

Mr. PHIPPS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the nature of the joint resolution?

Mr. PHIPPS. It is a joint resolution authorizing membership on the part of the United States in the International Road Congress. The joint resolution has been approved by the department, and the Budget Bureau has also passed upon it. This is merely an authorization for an appropriation. The joint resolution will have to go to the House of Representatives; and if it meets with its approval, then an appropriation will be in order. It involves the sum of merely $3,000.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I am trying to hear the statement of the Senator from Colorado, but other Senators about me have more voluminous voices than has the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PHIPPS. I was endeavoring to say to the Senator from Arkansas that the proposition is that the United States may have representation in the international road conferences along with the representatives of other nations.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Where are the conferences to be held?

Mr. PHIPPS. I am sorry I can not inform the Senator as to that, and I do not wish to guess at it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think the joint resolution had better go over, so that we may examine it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

PENSIONABLE STATUS OF SPANISH AND WORLD WAR VETERANS

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I send to the desk a concurrent resolution, which I ask to have read.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 14) was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 8132) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the war with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, or the China relief expedition, to certain maimed soldiers, to certain widows, minor children, and helpless children of such soldiers and sailors, and for other purposes, to incorporate therein the following amendments, viz:

On page 2, line 6, of the Senate engrossed amendment, after the word "Provided" and the comma, insert the following: "That any such person whose name was upon the pension roll on the 5th day of April, 1917, and who served 90 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the World War and was honorably discharged therefrom, shall upon making proof of such fact be replaced upon the pension roll and be entitled to receive all the benefits of this act: Provided further,"

On page 5, line 9 of said amendment, after the word "roll," insert the following: "or whose names was upon the pension roll on the 5th day of April, 1917,"

On page 6, line 1 of said amendment, after the word "law" and the comma, insert the following: "or whose names were on the pension roll on the 5th day of April, 1917,"

On page 6, line 5 of said amendment, after the word "roll" and the comma, insert the following: "or whose names are not entitled to be replaced on the pension roll under the provisions of this act,"

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I am about to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution just read, but before doing so I wish very briefly to explain its object.

Under the early pension laws for Spanish War veterans' pensions were given only in case of disability. A small number of such pensioners reenlisted when the World War broke out. Of course, they received no pension while they were in service during the World War.

Mr. FESS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Is this a concurrent resolution?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It is a concurrent resolution.

Mr. FESS. The bill to which it refers has passed both Houses of Congress, has it not?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is correct. This resolution proposes to direct the enrolling clerk to add the words indicated in the concurrent resolution in the engrossment of the bill, which has not yet occurred.

Mr. FESS. The bill is still before Congress?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes; the bill is still within the power of Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. This being a concurrent resolution, I think, under the rules, it should go to a committee. If it were a Senate resolution, it could be acted on immediately.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I made inquiry of a parliamentarian, and he informed me that it was not necessary to have the concurrent resolution referred to a committee. At all events, I am going to ask unanimous consent that the rule, if it applies to this case, may be waived. I think the Senator from Utah will agree with me that the concurrent resolution is a proper one, if he will let me make my explanation.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Pennsylvania may make his explanation.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. A very few Spanish War veterans who had been disabled and were given pensions reenlisted in the World War. Of course they received no pensions while they were in the service. When they were discharged from the service, at the conclusion of the World War, they were told by the Comptroller General, as I understand, or the accounting authority of the Pension Office at that time, that the fact that they were well enough to enlist in the Army during the World War proved that they were not disabled by their wounds in the Spanish-American War, and therefore automatically terminated their pensionable status.

The matter was brought to my attention Saturday after the bill had passed by a veteran who had a Spanish bullet through his right thigh and another one through his left arm, who walks with a considerable limp and has suffered from neuritis constantly since the Spanish War and yet enlisted as a private immediately when the World War broke out. How he passed the examination I do not know; but he did; he served with high credit and was discharged as a lieutenant at the end of the World War. He became connected with the aviation branch of the service, qualified as an aviator, and was on flying status practically throughout the whole of the World War. The wounds in his thigh and his arm which he received in the Spanish War and the neuritis which followed still persist.

There are very few of those cases; and all that the concurrent resolution will do by way of amendment to the bill is to provide that those veterans who had a pensionable status on April 5, 1917, and who served more than three months in the World War shall not thereby be deprived of the pensionable status which they had at the time of their second enlistment.

Of course they can not receive double compensation, because the World War veterans' act specifically provides that no person in receipt of a pension shall get any compensation under the World War act. So this will not in any way double up their pensions.

Mr. SMOOT. There is a general law now which provides that no veteran shall draw two pensions.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes; that is provided in the World War veterans' act.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, let me make an inquiry of the Senator. Why should the restoration of the pensionable status depend upon three months' service? Why should that qualification be put in?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Simply because I believe it covers every case and shows that there was a bona fide service in the World War. I know of no case where these men did not serve more than three months.

Mr. WALSH. There is no bonus or anything of that kind; but suppose the case of a man who did pass the examination, who was in the service for 30 days, and then it was discovered that he was unfit for service by reason of his former wounds; he would be excluded under the limitation to which I refer.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I see the Senator's point; but these words occur in all the pension acts, and I left them in in this case simply because the precedent had been established in other pension legislation.

Mr. WALSH. But the Senator is endeavoring to take care of an exceptional class of cases.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is true; and I would be willing to strike out those words.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a soldier, in the first place, had to have 90 days' service before he was entitled to receive a pension.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes; he had to have 90 days' service in the Spanish War; but what the Senator from Montana calls attention to is that the soldier should not really be required to have served 90 days in the second war; that the equities of the case are just as strong whether or not he served that length of time; and I think the Senator is right in that respect.

Mr. FESS and Mr. WILLIS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield first to the junior Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, what effect does the Senator think the concurrent resolution will have in a case where a Spanish War veteran enlisted and served in the World War and was wounded and is now on the compensation roll? Does the law cover the case so that he would not get compensation for service in the World War and a pension also as a soldier of the Spanish-American War?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If he was wounded in each war, he could take his choice as to which compensation he might receive.

Mr. FESS. But he would not be entitled to receive compensation for both?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Not for both.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President—

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield to the senior Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I fully agree with what the Senator said, and therefore his answer to the question I am about to ask is not material from my viewpoint. However, I am interested in learning if the Senator knows how many cases of this kind there are in this peculiar situation?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I have tried to find out. I think there are less than 20, but there may be as many as 20.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not think the information material; merely interesting.

Mr. TYSON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. TYSON. I should like to ask the Senator what effect will the adoption of the concurrent resolution have upon the pension bill which has been passed by both Houses? Will it have the effect of delaying it so as to jeopardize its ultimate passage?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It will not delay it in the least. The engrossing of that bill is now being started in the House, and I am advised that in all likelihood the concurrent resolution I have offered, if adopted by the Senate, can be acted on in the House to-day, and the engrossing can not be finished before to-morrow in any event.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

JOHN H. WALKER

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 549) for the relief of John H. Walker, which was, on page 1, line 5, after the word "appropriated," to insert "and in full settlement against the Government."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on House bill S264, the annual agricultural appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report, which was read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8264) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 28, 37, 41, and 44.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 13, 14, 17, 20, 21, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 42, 43, 46, 48, 50, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, and 63, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,653,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,678,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$750,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,940,653"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,477,763"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$12,300"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$495,004"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$368,290"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,333,055"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,908,055"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$500,220"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 39: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$588,480"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$507,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,016,230"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 47: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 50 of the bill, in line 10, strike out the words "this insect" and insert in lieu thereof the words "these insects"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,625,168"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 51: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$775,150"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,421,607"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$4,746,397"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendments numbered 54, 55, 56, 57, and 61.

J. P. BUCHANAN,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I desire to submit an inquiry to the Senator from Oregon.

The Senator will remember that a number of us appeared before the committee and urged an enlarged appropriation for the continuation of the tuberculin testing work. My recollection is that the committee recommended and the Senate adopted a provision for an increased appropriation of $2,000,000. Personally, I think the continuation of that work is of the very greatest importance. I think it is wise economy to make large enough appropriations to exterminate this disease, if it may be, rather than to try to handle it piecemeal.

I therefore inquire of the Senator what agreement was reached by the conferees touching this matter.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Ohio and referring for a moment to the historical phases of this item, I will state that the House allowed $4,103,000 for the eradication of tuberculosis in cattle. The Senate increased that amount to $6,000,000. When the conferrees met the matter was debated at length and the Senate conferees made a very determined and stout effort to retain the full amount appropriated—namely, $6,000,000, but the time came when an agreement had to be reached, and the Senate conferees agreed to a House proposal that the amount might be increased by the sum of $550,000.

At this time the bill carries the sum of $4,653,000 for the purpose of making the tuberculin test in cattle. This is an increase of $550,000 over the House bill. It is true that it is a decrease of practically a million and a quarter dollars from the bill as passed by the Senate, but let me again state to the Senator from Ohio that while the Senate conferees felt most sympathetic with this splendid work that is being done by the Department of Agriculture in cooperation with the States, we found determined resistance from the House conferees. Hence we have brought this item to the Senate for its consideration and approval or rejection.

Personally, as chairman of the conferees, I shall have no hesitation in going back into conference over the bill, if that is the expression and wish of the Senate, and trying again to increase the amount allotted; but under the circumstances and conditions as we found them I think the Senate conferees did all that could have been done and they did succeed in bringing about a substantial and material increase in this item.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, let me inquire of the chairman of the committee whether we did not also increase by a very considerable sum the amount of money that should be immediately available?

Mr. McNARY. Yes. I was speaking of the total sum appropriated. It is true that the amount made immediately available by the House bill was $200,000, and the Senate increased it to $750,000.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I do not desire at all to seem to criticize the conferees on the part of the Senate, but I do express very deep regret that they felt compelled to yield to the House conferees on this matter.

Here is the situation: We are trying to solve this problem piecemeal. We make a relatively small appropriation, which is expended in the tuberculin testing work in a particular locality; and in an adjoining State or an adjoining county, where nothing has been done, there is an infected area which, through importations of diseased stock, promptly will overthrow the good which already has been accomplished.

If this matter is to be handled at all, it ought to be handled by an appropriation large enough to enable the department to grapple with this question and to solve it once and for all. My own opinion is that these piecemeal appropriations are exceedingly poor economy; and while, as I say, I do not feel disposed to criticize the conferees on the part of the Senate—I know that they were interested in this appropriation, and I have no doubt that they did all that they felt they could do—yet I do feel that the Senate ought to express its approval of the original appropriation by sending this matter back to conference. I hope that action will be had.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am in hearty accord with what the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] has just said. There is not anything I can think of that is more important than the conservation of child life; and every time we find a case of bone or joint tuberculosis we know that that child has been infected by bad milk, by tuberculous milk.

I can think of no appropriation that the Government can make which more directly affects the health and prospects of the children and of the future citizens of this country; and I fully agree with what the Senator from Ohio has said. When we are making these large appropriations for material things we can well afford to do something to protect the lives of the little ones of this country. I believe, too, with the Senator, that the conferees should be asked to return to the House, and, if possible, to secure the adoption and approval of the larger appropriation for this particular work.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, as one of the conferees, I declined to sign the report which is now before the Senate because of the item now under consideration; and yet I do want to say for the conferees that every possible effort was made by them to secure from the House conferees a larger increase than was finally agreed upon, namely, an increase of $550,000 over the amount carried in the House bill. The fact is that the House conferees delivered an ultimatum to the Senate conferees. We very much desired that they take this matter back to the House and let the House express itself upon the item as carried in the Senate amendment. This was refused, and finally the offer was made to increase this amount by $550,000.

Mr. President, if the bill is sent back to conference I do not know whether or not any different situation will result, but I should like to see one more trial made. The situation is especially acute in the Northwest. The city of Chicago has recently passed an ordinance providing that no milk shall be sold in the city of Chicago except that from tuberculin-tested herds. The result is that in southern Wisconsin, which is very heavily infected, and where tests are being made very rapidly, there are now whole trainloads of condemned dairy cows, blooded cows, the very highest grade of stock, being sent to the Chicago stockyards for slaughter. The State of Wisconsin last year appropriated $750,000 as its share for indemnities and the testing and necessary expenses. That has already been exhausted. A session of the legislature was held last week to make a further appropriation, and $450,000 was appropriated by the State to take care of this very acute situation.

It does seem to me, as the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] has said, that when we are spending so many millions of dollars in other ways there ought not to be any objection upon the part of anyone to this comparatively modest increase that the Senate has provided for the conservation of human life; and at the same time, when we are talking about relief for the farmer, here is something that is substantial and practical, and will be of very great help to the dairy farmers of this country.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. The Senator then has some hope, as a member of the conference committee, that if this matter is sent back to conference a different and more favorable result may be obtained?

Mr. LENROOT. I am frank to say that one reason which impelled me not to sign the report was that I hoped some parliamentary way might be found by which this matter could be sent to the House and the House could have an opportunity to vote upon it. Of course, if we send it back to conference, we will confront the House conferees exactly as we did before. But I do think this may result, if we send it back to conference, that the attention of the Members of the House will be called to the matter, and there is a way in the other House whereby they can reach this question. If we send it back to conference, it may aid in enabling them to do so. No great delay will result. We can meet with the conferees, and, of course, if they take the position they took before, there will be nothing our conferees can do except again to report the action to the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I sincerely trust that this conference report will be recommitted to the conference committee. The situation in Wisconsin as described is very acute. As a matter of fact, before the Chicago ordinance went into effect estimates were made as to what would be the result of testing in the southern counties of the State, which are dependent largely upon the city of Chicago as a market for their products, and the program of testing was put into force. The results of the tests to date have shown that a very much higher percentage of reactors have been found in these herds than was anticipated. I merely suggest that for the consideration of the Senate, to indicate that the demand for funds for indemnity purposes may be much larger than is now anticipated.

In some instances the very finest herds in that section of the State have been found to react as high as 60 per cent, and the burden thus thrown not only upon the State but also on the farmers is at once apparent. I sincerely trust that the report will be recommitted.

In order that the Senate may have exact information concerning this matter, I ask that there be read from the desk the statement made by the Governor of Wisconsin with relation to the calling of the special session of the legislature, which convened last Thursday and which, as has been stated, increased the appropriation $450,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

STATEMENT OF BLAINE IN CALLING SPECIAL SESSION

The statement of Gov. John J. Blaine relating to the special session follows in full:

"The city of Chicago on or about December 22, 1925, passed an ordinance requiring that on and after April 1, 1926, milk and cream sold for consumption within the city of Chicago must be produced by herds that have passed a satisfactory bovine tuberculosis test. The number of cattle in herds in Wisconsin furnishing such dairy products for the city of Chicago is estimated to be 135,000.

"In order to save to the dairy farmers of this State their Chicago liquid milk market, it was determined by the commissioner of agriculture and the livestock sanitary board that every effort should be made to have such herds tested. Up to April 1 about 95 per cent thereof had been tested. Past experience in the testing work had led the livestock sanitary board to believe that the percentage of reactors in the counties furnishing the bulk of the Chicago milk would run from 4 to 18 per cent. Actual experience has demonstrated, however, that in some of the counties in the Chicago market area the percentage of reactors runs from 12 to 60 per cent.

"Due to the Chicago milk ordinance and the unlooked-for increase in number of reactors, an unusual demand has been made upon the indemnity funds. The State funds available for bovine tuberculosis eradication for the year ending June 30 next were $832,000. The intensive work required in testing to save the Chicago market for the Wisconsin dairymen made such inroads upon the indemnity fund that it will become necessary to discontinue the area test work unless an emergency appropriation is made. If the city of Chicago had not enacted its rigid ordinance, the funds available for indemnities were sufficient to carry on the ordinary regular work of the department. It is found, however, that to carry on the ordinary regular work of the department, especially the area testing, the department needs $450,000 to replace the funds taken from the regular appropriation in carrying on the work for the Chicago market area. The balance in the fund for tuberculosis eradication on April 1 was $462,728.01, the larger part of which, if not all, is required to meet past demands, and the livestock sanitary board, after careful analysis, recommends that $450,000 be appropriated as an emergency appropriation, so that the ordinary regular work for the eradication of bovine tuberculosis may go on for the balance of the fiscal year.

"Suggestions have been made, if a special session were called, to include many subjects. The subjects suggested, however, were all considered by the same legislature less than 10 months ago or are being considered by the interim committee. I do not feel justified in submitting such subjects, which would prolong the session, involving unnecessary expenditures by the State and personal inconvenience and expenses of the members of the legislature.

"The subject submitted involves a pressing emergency, and, in my judgment, the legislature will be able to dispose of it in a day."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not permit this matter to be passed over without making every effort to get the House managers to agree to the committee's suggestion. We have here to deal with something more than a public building or a good road. We have to do with human life—with the lives of these children—and I beg Senators when they vote on this matter to take into consideration the poor little crippled children who are struggling around the streets of the communities from which Senators come. I believe when Senators think of that they will not hesitate to vote to recommit.

I now move that this matter be recommitted to the conference committee for further conference with the House.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, if all discussion of that item is completed, there is another matter in the conference report to which I want to call the attention of the Senate.

The Senate Committee on Appropriations recommended an appropriation of $25,000 for a survey of the Gulf coast and South Atlantic region to study the mosquito whose existence is due to the marshes of Louisiana, which form about one-half the salt marshes of the whole country. I think the committee was unanimous in that recommendation, and the Senate was likewise unanimous; but the House conferees were divided as to whether the survey should be made by the Public Health Service or by the Agricultural Department, through the Bureau of Entomology.

I hope that when the conference report goes back the House conferees will agree to the Senate amendment, which was agreed to by all the agencies of the Federal Government, including the Secretary of Agriculture; Doctor Howard, of the Bureau of Entomology; Doctor Cumming, of the Public Health Service; as well as General Lord, of the Bureau of the Budget. The amendment was stricken down, I think, one-third of what was requested. I hope that when the report goes back to conference that item will be restored to the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think the report of the conference makes that item $10,000 instead of $25,000.

Mr. McNARY. No.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator what the amount is?

Mr. McNARY. The able Senator from Mississippi asked the Senate for an appropriation of $40,000 for the eradication of the salt-marsh mosquito. The Senator made a very favorable impression on the Senate committee, and they recommended $25,000. But we were not able favorably to impress the House conferees, and the result is that no appropriation is made for this matter.

Mr. FLETCHER. None at all?

Mr. McNARY. None at all.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think this is a very important matter. We talk about diseases in this country, but there is not an insect that is more poisonous and which spreads and distributes disease to a greater extent than the mosquito.

Mr. McNARY. May I at this point state to the Senator from Florida that the insect referred to here is not the mosquito that carries infestation. It does not carry malaria or any of the diseases. It is not that type of a bug. It is an annoying creature. It buzzes around and bites, but the bite while distressing is harmless.

Mr. FLETCHER. I would not want to trust any mosquito, as far as that goes. I do not care whether it is a salt mosquito or a stegomyia or any other kind. I think they are all dangerous, and they ought to be exterminated. It has been thoroughly demonstrated that they can be exterminated, and it can be done without very much expense. There ought to be a survey made and steps should be taken in that direction. I think this is a proper appropriation for us to make.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. FESS. The vote is on recommitting the conference report, is it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] to recommit the conference report.

Mr. CURTIS. Is a motion to recommit in order? I thought we had to vote on the question of agreeing or not agreeing to the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to recommit is in order. If the motion to recommit is agreed to, the same conferees will be appointed.

Mr. CURTIS. Has the Senate the papers?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The House has not acted on the report. The same conferees can take it up if the motion shall be agreed to.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, a further parliamentary inquiry. Was this a complete agreement?

Mr. McNARY. No, Mr. President; there were three items which were referred to the House for action.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York that the conference report be recommitted.

The motion was agreed to.

RELIEF OF STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 2733, for the relief of the State of North Carolina. This is a bill of much importance to certain Federal and State officials in North Carolina.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill be read so that I may look at the report.

Mr. SIMMONS. The bill provides—

That the State of North Carolina and the United States property and disbursing officer of the National Guard of the State of North Carolina are hereby relieved from accountability for 175 folding canvas cots, property of the United States, valued at $430.50, which were loaned by such State to the mayor of New Bern, N. C., for the use of persons rendered homeless and destitute as a result of a conflagration in that city in December, 1922, and which were lost or rendered unfit for service.

Mr. SMOOT. I have read the report, and I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to state that the fire occurred in my town. I was present on the day it occurred. It destroyed between 300 and 400 homes, mostly in the colored settlement, and rendered between 1,000 and 1,500 families destitute. Nothing was saved in the conflagration. The city, through its mayor, applied to the adjutant general of the State for the loan of some cots at Camp Glenn, a few miles from the city. It was several months before we could build enough houses to accommodate the people who had lost their homes, and during that time 175 of the cots were practically rendered valueless, or destroyed, or lost.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRAUDULENT ADVERTISING BY STATE CORPORATIONS

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 515, the bill (S. 2606) to prohibit offering for sale as Federal farm-loan bonds any securities not issued under the terms of the farm loan act, to limit the use of the words "Federal," "United States," or "Reserve," or a combination of such words, to prohibit false advertising, and for other purposes.

I will state that both the Federal Farm Loan Board and the Federal Reserve Board are very anxious to have action upon the bill. It is a simple measure. Its title explains its purpose, which is to prevent the fraudulent advertising of Federal farm-loan bonds by private State corporations. It also prevents the State corporations from using the words "Federal" or "United States" or "Reserve" in their organization. The Federal Reserve Board has had brought to its attention many instances of State corporations that have organized and used the word "Federal" or "United States" for the express purpose of misleading the public.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no bank, banking association, trust company, corporation, association, firm, partnership, or person not organized under the provisions of the act of July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act, as amended, shall advertise or represent that it makes Federal farm loans or advertise or offer for sale as Federal farm-loan bonds any bond not issued under the provisions of the Federal farm loan act, or make use of the word "Federal" or the words "United States" or any other word or words implying Government ownership, obligation, or supervision in advertising or offering for sale any bond, note, mortgage, or other security not issued by the Government of the United States or under the provisions of the said Federal farm loan act or some other act of Congress.

SEC. 2. That no bank, banking association, trust company, corporation, association, firm, partnership, or person engaged in the banking, loan, building and loan, brokerage, factorage, insurance, indemnity, or trust business shall use the word "Federal," the words "United States," or the word "reserve," or any combination of such words, as a portion of its corporate, firm, or trade name or title or of the name under which it does business: Provided, however, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal Farm Loan Board, the Federal Trade Commission, or any other department, bureau, or independent establishment of the Government of the United States, nor to any Federal reserve bank, Federal land bank, or Federal reserve agent, nor to the Federal Advisory Council, nor to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States, nor to any bank, banking association, trust company, corporation, association, firm, partnership, or person actually engaged in business under such name or title prior to the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. That no bank, banking association, or trust company which is not a member of the Federal reserve system shall advertise or represent in any way that it is a member of such system or publish or display any sign, symbol, or advertisement reasonably calculated to convey the impression that it is a member of such system.

SEC. 4. That any bank, banking association, trust company, corporation, association, firm, or partnership violating any of the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be subject to a fine of not exceeding $1,000. Any person violating any of the provisions of this act, or any officer of any bank, banking association, trust company, corporation, or association, or member of any firm or partnership violating any of the provisions of this act who participates in, or knowingly acquiesces in, such violations shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be subject to a fine of not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both. Any such illegal use of such word or words, or any combination of such words, or any other violation of any of the provisions of this act may be enjoined by the United States district court having jurisdiction at the instance of any United States district attorney, any Federal land bank, joint-stock land bank, Federal reserve bank, or the Federal Farm Loan Board or the Federal Reserve Board.

SEC. 5. That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall for any reason be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder of this act, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POSTAL SERVICE IN ALASKA

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 8192) authorizing the designation of postmasters by the Postmaster General as disbursing officers for the payment of contractors, emergency carriers, and temporary carriers for performance of authorized service on power boat and star routes in Alaska. It is a bill to which there should be no objection, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That postmasters may be designated by the Postmaster General as disbursing officers for the payment of contractors, emergency carriers, and temporary carriers for performance of authorized service on power boat and star routes in Alaska.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask that Orders of Business Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They will be passed over. The clerk will state the next bill on the calendar.

The bill (H. R. 6559) for the construction of certain public buildings, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, a few moments ago the able Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] stated that he desires to address the Senate on the Italian debt settlement. I do not wish to deprive him of that privilege or other Senators of the pleasure of listening to him. In order that the bill which has just been announced may remain the unfinished business, I desire to yield to the Senator from Montana for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. If that course is going to be pursued, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Italian debt settlement bill be temporarily laid before the Senate for the purpose of enabling the Senator from Montana to address the Senate upon that subject.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I do not desire to object, but it was my understanding that we were going to work on the calendar until 2 o'clock. Why can we not do that?

Mr. SMOOT. I only made my request on the basis of the statement that the Senator from Montana desires to speak at this time.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not object, but I understood it was agreeable to the Senator from Montana to proceed with the calendar until 2 o'clock.

Mr. WALSH. I should be very glad to have the Senate work on the calendar until 2 o'clock.

Mr. FERNALD. Then I withdraw my request.

Mr. SMOOT. And I withdraw my request, too.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next bill on the calendar.

The bill (S. 1824) for the relief of R. B. Swartz, W. J. Collier, and others was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2526) to extend the time for the refunding of taxes erroneously collected from certain estates was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator who introduced the bill, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WILLIAMS], to make some explanation of the bill. I will say to the Senator that the reason why I make the request is that a similar bill was referred to the Finance Committee and I think that is where this bill ought to have gone. If the Senator has not the matter in mind right now, I ask that it may go over temporarily until he looks it up.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGHAM in the chair). The bill will be passed over temporarily.

The bill (S. 2336) to reimburse Commander Walter H. Allen, civil engineer, United States Navy, for losses sustained while carrying out his duties was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The present occupant of the chair is interested in the bill and would like to have it go over.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well; I withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1859) for the relief of Patrick C. Wilkes, alias Clebourn P. Wilkes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1929) to provide home care for dependent children in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will some Senator give an explanation of the bill? The senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] is not here, and he is interested in the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. The junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], my recollection is, asked on a previous occasion that the bill go over. As he is absent and the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] is likewise absent, I ask that it may go over, if my colleague [Mr. CAPPER] is willing.

Mr. CAPPER. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. I join in the request because my colleague is anxious to be here when the bill is considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2607) for the purpose of more effectively meeting the obligations of the existing migratory bird treaty with Great Britain by the establishment of migratory bird refuges to furnish in perpetuity homes for migratory birds, the provision of funds for establishing such areas, and the furnishing of adequate protection of migratory birds, for the establishment of public shooting grounds to preserve the American system of free shooting, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BAYARD. The junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is unavoidably absent to-day. He has offered several amendments to the bill. In his absence to-day I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say also that the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is very much opposed to the bill and desires to be present when it is considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

WALLER V. GIBSON

The bill (S. 1459) for the relief of Waller V. Gibson was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, their widows, and dependent relatives, Waller V. Gibson, who was a member of Troop C, Second Regiment United States Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 15th day of December, 1898: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask that the formal reading of any unobjected bill may be dispensed with.

Mr. SMOOT. There may be some of them that should be read.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I mean in cases where there is no objection, that the formal reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMPLETION OF TOMB OF UNKNOWN SOLDIER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 51) providing for the completion of the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in the Arlington National Cemetery was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let the joint resolution go over.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I have allowed the joint resolution to remain on the calendar because an opportunity has not presented itself for its consideration. I want now to announce that I shall try to get early consideration of the matter and to have it determined one way or the other just as soon as possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

PENSIONS FOR SURVIVORS OF INDIAN WARS

The bill (H. R. 306) to amend the second section of the act entitled "An act to pension the survivors of certain Indian wars from January 1, 1859, to January, 1891, inclusive, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1917, as amended, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, on page 2, line 18, to strike out the words "Provided, That the want of a certificate of discharge shall not deprive any applicant of the benefits of this act," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to pension the survivors of certain Indian wars from January 1, 1859, to January, 1891, inclusive, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1917, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 2. The period of service performed by beneficiaries under this act shall be determined: First, by reports from the records of the War Department, where there are such records; second, by reports from the records of the General Accounting Office showing payment by the United States, where there is no record of regular enlistment, or muster into the United States military service; and third, when there is no record of service or payment for same in the War Department or the General Accounting Office by satisfactory evidence from muster rolls on file in the several State or Territorial archives; fourth, where no record of service has been made in the War Department or General Accounting Office and there is no muster roll or pay roll on file in the several State or Territorial archives showing service of the applicant, or where the same has been destroyed by fire or otherwise lost or where there are muster rolls or pay rolls on file in the several State or Territorial archives but the applicant's name does not appear thereon, the applicant may make proof of service by furnishing evidence satisfactory to the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice that the bill was reported by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER]. Can the Senator tell me why the amendment was agreed to by the Committee on Pensions as it appears on page 2, in lines 18 and 19? That language has been in all acts heretofore referring to Indian war pensions. I certainly shall ask that the amendment be disagreed to and that the bill be passed as it came from the House.

Mr. FRAZIER. The bill was reported according to the recommendation which was made to the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that without the words in the bill as it came from the House we might as well not pass the bill. The Indian war veterans have no specific discharge certificates, and every bill that has ever been passed before contained the exact words put in by the House in this bill and proposed to be stricken out by the committee. The men were called out hastily, did their fighting and came back, and never thought of getting a specific discharge.

Mr. FESS. Is not that what the amendment provides?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it says "that the want of a certificate of discharge shall not deprive any applicant of the benefits of this act." The committee proposes to strike out that language, and I do not want to have it stricken out. I want it exactly the same as similar bills which have been passed.

Mr. FESS. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I had a different impression, but I find what the Senator from Utah is maintaining is just what apparently was recommended by the former report, and that is what I would be in favor of, too.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill at this time, but I wish it distinctly understood that the committee amendment to the bill is to be disagreed to. Otherwise I do not desire that the bill shall pass. Let us vote down the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NEELY subsequently said: Mr. President, in behalf of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who is unavoidably absent, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which H. R. 306 was passed earlier in the day be reconsidered.

The object of this request is to give the Senator from Utah an opportunity, when he returns, to speak to an amendment which he has offered to this bill, and which is pending. The object of his amendment is to liberalize the bill and to extend its provisions to veterans other than those who are mentioned in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from West Virginia on behalf of the Senator from Utah is granted and the vote by which the bill was passed is reconsidered.

SILVER PURCHASES

The bill (S. 756) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to complete purchases of silver under the act of April 23, 1918, commonly known as the Pittman Act, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIS. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being objected to, the bill will be passed over.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, the bill having been passed over, I merely desire to say that, while I should not ask for its consideration under the five-minute rule, I wish to serve notice that at the first convenient opportunity I shall ask to have the bill taken up for consideration.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT

The bill (S. 2808) to amend section 24 of the interstate commerce act, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIS. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

M. BARDE & SONS (INC.), PORTLAND, OREG.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2098) for the relief of M. Barde & Sons (Inc.), Portland, Oreg., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$34,291.58, balance due" and to insert in lieu thereof "$32,600 to," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $32,600 to M. Barde & Sons (Inc.), of Portland, Oreg., on a contract with the United States to remove from the channel of the Columbia River the wreck of the steamship Welsh Prince.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1897) to reinstate John P. Gray as a lieutenant commander in the United States Coast Guard was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I should like to see that bill passed, and I think it ought to pass, but the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], I know, has opposed it heretofore and has asked that it lie over. Under the circumstances I will have to ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3321) to increase the efficiency of the Air Service of the United States Army was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair asks that that bill be passed over.

The bill (S. 2306) to provide for the prompt disposition of disputes between carriers and their employees, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 7906) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, etc., and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

OPENING OF STREET FROM GEORGIA AVENUE TO NINTH STREET NW.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2043) to authorize the opening of a street from Georgia Avenue to Ninth Street NW., through squares 2875 and 2877, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President, I should like to offer certain committee amendments to the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The legislative clerk read the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was, in section 1, on page 2, line 8, after the word "cost," to strike out the article "an" and to insert the word "and," so as to make the section read:

Be it enacted, etc., That under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of Chapter XV of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within six months after the passage of this act, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary to open a street, approximately 80 feet in width, from Georgia Avenue to Ninth Street NW., to include all of lots 895, 898, 896, 899, 927, 925, 923, 928, 882, 883, and 884 in square 2875, and the south 80.84 feet front by full depth of lot 931 in square 2877; Provided, That of the amount found to be due and awarded by the jury in said proceeding as damages for, and in respect of, the land to be condemned for said street opening, plus the cost and expenses of the proceeding hereunder, such amount shall be assessed as benefits by the jury against the Washington Railway & Electric Co. and the Capital Traction Co., respectively, in such proportion as the jury may find said companies to be benefited by the opening of said street and the improvement in the railway trackage conditions incident thereto as hereinafter provided, which said assessment shall be valid and subsisting liens against the franchises and properties of said railway companies, and shall be a legal indebtedness of said companies in favor of the District of Columbia, and the said lien or liens may be enforced in the name of the District of Columbia by a bill in equity brought by the said commissioners in the Supreme Court of said District or by any lawful proceeding; and such amount shall be assessed by the jury as benefits, and to the extent of such benefits, against the lots, pieces, or parcels of land on each side of said street and against any and all other lots, pieces, or parcels of land which the jury may find will be benefited by the opening of said street under the provisions of said subchapter 1 of Chapter XV of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia.

Mr. SACKETT. I ask that the amendments offered by me on behalf of the committee may now be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments proposed by the Senator from Kentucky will be stated.

The first amendment proposed by Mr. SACKETT was, on page 2, in lines 13, 14, and 15; it is proposed to strike out the words "and the improvement in the railway trackage conditions incident thereto as hereinafter provided."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment proposed by Mr. SACKETT was, in section 3, page 3, line 13, after the word "That," to insert "when-ever, in the judgment of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, it is deemed in the public interest"; in line 14, after the word "Company," to insert the word "shall"; and, in the same line, after the word "be," to strike out the words "and it hereby is."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment proposed by Mr. SACKETT was, in section 4, page 3, lines 23, 24, and 25, after the word "date," it is proposed to strike out the words "that all the land authorized to be condemned as provided for herein shall have been acquired by the District of Columbia," and in lieu thereof to insert "the said Washington Railway & Electric Co. is ordered by said Public Utilities Commission to construct tracks and make connections as provided in section 3 of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Kentucky a question. It is not intended by the bill to open up a street through what we know as Walter Reed Hospital, is it?

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President, I should like to say in regard to the bill that it provides for the opening of a street off of one of the entrances to the ball park. There is a long block of 2,800 feet which needs to be bisected so that automobiles and pedestrians may pass through. The amendment which I have proposed has been offered at the request of the committee which examined the place. Under the amendments the street railway company will not be required immediately to lay their tracks in the street, but that matter will be left in the hands of the Public Utilities Commission, which may order them to do so whenever the commission shall deem it to be necessary.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS FOR EXTRA LABOR AT NAVY YARDS

The bill (S. 491) for the allowance of certain claims for extra labor above the legal day of eight hours at certain navy yards certified by the Court of Claims was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am sorry, of course, to have to ask that this bill go over, but I promised the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that if he were not present I would ask that the bill go over. Therefore I make that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ESTATE OF JOHN STEWART

The bill (S. 1450) for the relief of the estate of John Stewart, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $2,000 to William L. Browning, administrator of the estate of John Stewart, deceased, late civil engineer, for extra compensation for services rendered by him to the Government in connection with the Potomac Flats case.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice that the bill was introduced by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER]. I will inquire of him what extra services were rendered by John Stewart to the Government to entitle his estate to $2,000.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the services were rendered by this man a good many years ago in connection with an important case known as the Potomac Flats case. Similar bills have been passed six times by the Senate and three or four times by the House of Representatives. It was sent here originally by Secretary Elihu Root and had the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury as well. Every Committee on Claims of the Senate during the last 12 years has made a favorable report on it. There ought not to be any objection to it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELLA H. SMITH

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2192) for the relief of Ella H. Smith, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment on line 4, after the word "pay," to insert "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Ella H. Smith, postmistress at Wynne, Ark., an office of the second class, the sum of $3,700, which amount was lost by burglary without fault of hers, and which she repaid to the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] to explain the bill.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I shall be glad to do so. A similar bill passed the Senate on a previous occasion without objection, but did not happen to be reached on the calendar in the House in time to be enacted into law.

The facts of the case are these: Mrs. Smith, a widow, was postmaster at Wynne, Ark. The office at that place was made a central accounting office, but the help furnished was not sufficient to take care of the work. During the sale of the war savings stamps she was compelled to keep them in a bank because there was no safe equipment in the office. Several people had access to them, and the office itself was also subject to a robbery. When the accounts were checked up it was found that $3,700 were missing, and it was never possible to discover how or when the theft had occurred. No suspicion ever attached to Mrs. Smith. She mortgaged a little home which she had and paid the amount, and this is an attempt to give her back the money.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF BENJAMIN BRAZNEILL

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 769) for the relief of the estate of Benjamin Brazneill. It directs the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to reopen and allow the claim of the Braddock Trust Co., executor of the estate of Benjamin Brazneill, late of Pittsburgh, Pa., and refund $2,323.47, the balance of taxes illegally collected under existing laws and decisions.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HUNTER-BROWN CO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1304) for the relief of Hunter-Brown Co.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JONES of Washington subsequently said: Mr. President, reverting to Order of Business No. 271, being the bill (S. 1304) for the relief of Hunter-Brown Co., I notice that, apparently, according to the terms of the bill itself, these people are to be reimbursed for moneys they expended in prosecuting their claims. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, and that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Washington to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed will be reconsidered, and the bill will be passed over.

ROYAL HOLLAND LLOYD, AMSTERDAM, THE NETHERLANDS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2992) for the relief of the Royal Holland

Lloyd, a Netherlands corporation of Amsterdam, the Netherlands. It provides that the claim of the Royal Holland Lloyd, owners of the Netherlands steamship Zeelandia, against the United States for damages alleged to have been sustained as a result of the refusal of the Federal authorities to grant clearance to the vessel during the period from October 17, 1917, to March 21, 1918, may be sued for by the Royal Holland Lloyd in the United States Court of Claims, and that court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit to judgment, but such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to appear and defend for the United States, and suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GERSHON BROS. CO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 945) for the relief of Gershon Bros. Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on line 5, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$58,379.96" and insert "$5,078.11," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,078.11 to Gershon Bros. Co., of Atlanta, Ga., as just compensation and in full settlement and satisfaction of its damages and loss incurred and suffered by it when the building which it occupied was, on December 3, 1918, under authority of the national defense act, commandeered and taken possession of by the United States Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT CODE

The bill (S. 2981) to amend section 553 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS

The bill (S. 3300) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the war with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, or the China relief expedition, to certain widows, minor children, and helpless children of such soldiers and sailors, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, that bill, I think, should be indefinitely postponed. The Senate has passed the House bill on the same subject.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senate passed the House bill on the 14th of April.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I suggest that the Senate bill remain on the calendar, for the reason which was stated the other day by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. I will inquire if the bill has finally gone to the President and been approved? Does the Senator from Utah know as to that?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether the President has approved it or not.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, a few moments ago reference was made to this matter. The bill has not gone to the President and been approved, but the Senate this morning adopted a concurrent resolution, offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], proposing in enrolling the bill to change certain of its provisions.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill is still in the House, then, I presume?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I suggest that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be passed over.

TRUTH IN FABRICS

The bill (S. 1618) to prevent deceit and unfair prices that result from the unrevealed presence of substitutes for virgin wool in woven or knitted fabrics purporting to contain wool and in garments or articles of apparel made therefrom, manufactured in any Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or transported or intended to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce, and providing penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I should like very much to have this bill taken up, not to-day, but at an early date. The bill has been before the Committee on Interstate Commerce for several years; and finally, after extended hearings and full consideration, the committee has reported the bill in a form which I think eliminates most of the objections that heretofore have been urged against this proposed legislation.

The measure is supported by all the farm organizations of the country; it is urged also by many of the consumer organizations; and I think it is only fair that, after having been before Congress so many years, it should have consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that there is nobody who would rather support the wool industry than I, as my State is so deeply interested in it; but I do not want to approve of legislation that I know is absolutely impossible of enforcement.

As a manufacturer, I want to say to the Senator from Kansas that as the bill now reads it is absolutely impossible of enforcement; and I think that when the bill comes up, if it ever does—and I never want it to come up unless I am here—I can demonstrate to every Senator who will listen to what I have to say that it is impossible of enforcement or being put into successful operation.

No one approves more than I do the object of the bill, and I will support any legislation looking to that end; but this bill can not prove practical. It will cost more to enforce it than twice the cost of the goods.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, can the Senator in a sentence or two point out wherein it can not be operative or put into execution?

Mr. SMOOT. I should have to begin at the beginning with the fleece of wool and carry it through every step of manufacture, and tell you what will happen in the carding room and what will happen in the spinning room and what will happen in the weaving room and what will happen in the finishing room, and why it can not possibly be carried out successfully.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I venture to express the hope that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] will persist in his effort to get this matter before the Senate. I have heard such conflicting opinions expressed that, while I have great confidence in the judgment and wisdom of the Senator from Utah, if he is right it is a most amazing thing that practically all the farm organizations in the country, and particularly the grange, the people in our section of the country who are interested in woolgrowing, who have been studying this question for years, are absolutely unanimous in the view that this would be helpful legislation and that the law would be enforceable. I hope we can get the question up here, and if the Senator can demonstrate what he says he can demonstrate I hope he will be given an opportunity to do it. Personally I do not believe he can do it. I believe this legislation can be enforced.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have worked in every department of a woolen mill, beginning with the assorting of wool and going on to the finished cloth, and then I have sold the cloth; and I say now that the bill in its present form can not be enforced unless you have some individual empowered to enforce it in every mill where the goods are made; and even then it could not be technically complied with. The only way it could possibly be accomplished would be to make the cloth out of virgin wool and never use a single, solitary particle of that wool a second time, from the time it is washed in the washer until it is finished; and what would the goods cost if that were done? The cost would be prohibitive.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, let me inquire of the Senator from Kansas whether this question of the practicability of the legislation was considered by the committee.

Mr. CAPPER. It certainly was. The bill was referred to a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, headed by the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS]. The hearings covered a period of several weeks. Experts who were supposed to be familiar with the very questions that the Senator from Utah has raised were before the committee. It is my own opinion now that a reading of the report made by the committee and of the hearings and a discussion of the bill will demonstrate that the Senator from Utah is not correct in his belief that it can not be enforced.

Mr. WALSH. Can the Senator tell us some of the experts who urged that the measure is a practicable one?

Mr. CAPPER. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS], who had charge of the hearings, can probably furnish more definite information as to just what came out at the hearings.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I do not know how to classify the experts. We had a great array of testimony from every phase of the industry, from the manufacturer and the grower, as well as from people not at all identified with textile work. One line of evidence that was pressed considerably was from the Bureau of Standards. We asked a representative of that bureau to determine whether it would be possible to take the fabric after it was woven and determine what was in it. His testimony was somewhat adverse, in that he said that it would be rather difficult. He did not want to be understood as stating that it could not be done, but that it would be quite difficult to do it. There were others—I do not know whether they would be classified as experts or not—who claimed that it could be done.

Mr. WALSH. Were they familiar with the process of manufacturing?

Mr. FEES. I could not say as to that. I might state further that there was at the hearings a representative speaking for a large group of industries in the way of cleaners; and he stated that one of the most commanding reasons for the passage of the bill is that in the cleaning process the defective element in the garment would not stand the process, and that the cleaner therefore would subject himself to damage for having ruined a garment when the real source of the damage was shoddy or something that was less substantial than the fabric of which the garment was supposed to be made.

It was along that line that some of the manufacturers were in favor of the legislation. Usually the textile people were against the bill as it was originally introduced. The Senator from Utah says the bill as now written is not susceptible of enforcement. I want him to understand that the bill as now written is not nearly so difficult of enforcement as the original draft, because the original draft required everything to be labeled, while this draft requires only the mixed goods to be labeled.

I hope the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] will use his privileges under Rule VIII, the next time the matter comes up, to bring it before the Senate and have it definitely decided. It has been before the Congress for 15 years.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I should like to ask what is the status of this measure now; because if it is up for consideration, I certainly desire to address the Senate in respect to the bill.

Mr. CAPPER. I have asked that the bill be taken up; but in view of the fact that only a few minutes remain of the morning hour, which, of course, would not give sufficient time for discussion, I am going to suggest that the bill go over temporarily. The next time we are considering the calendar I hope the bill will be taken up, and I shall make a motion for its consideration at the first opportunity that that motion can be presented.

Mr. SMITH. While I am on my feet I want to make just one statement.

I was a member of a subcommittee appointed to consider this bill at two sessions of the Congress; and I think we gave more consideration to this bill than perhaps any other that was ever submitted to our committee. After we had had exhaustive hearings, and had listened both to those who manufactured wool and to those who produced wool, it was the opinion of the subcommittee, regardless of where its members came from or of any unavoidable bias they might have, that such legislation was totally impracticable in our commercial life.

When the bill is up, at the proper time, I am going to give the Senate the benefit of the study I have made of the bill, without any prejudice one way or the other, and call attention to the difficulties that were presented to us.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the pending bill is quite different from the measure that was considered by the committee of which the Senator from South Carolina was a member. This is, in fact, a compromise measure; and, as I said at the beginning, it eliminates many of the objections that were raised to the original bill.

Mr. SMOOT. But the fundamental principles of the original bill are in this bill, Mr. President.

Mr. SMITH. Identically. They have eliminated some of the difficulties, but they certainly have left the fundamental difficulty right there.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President, the fundamental principle of this bill is absolutely correct and sound, because every man who buys any piece of merchandise has a right to know what he is buying; and that is all that this bill proposes. I hope that some arrangements can be made to give this important piece of legislation proper consideration. It can not be disposed of or be given proper consideration here in the morning hour; and as a member of the steering committee I am going to urge that a date be fixed for taking up the bill, so that it can be properly considered.

I listened to much of the argument presented before the committee, and I want to say that the best evidence that was given there to the effect that it could be enforced and was practicable came from manufacturers themselves. As far as the farmers are concerned, it is a piece of legislation that they have been demanding for years. The same opposition that appeared against this legislation appeared against the pure food bill. It is along the same lines and the same principles, and it ought to be given a trial. If it can not be enforced, possibly the Senator from Utah, with all his knowledge of the industry, can offer some amendments that will make it practicable and enforceable. I think it can be enforced; and I want to say to the cotton growers of the South that I am satisfied that this legislation is entirely in the interest of the cotton growers. Above everything, the man who buys cloth that is represented to be all wool and a yard wide ought to know whether it is wool or whether it is shoddy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MILTON F. NICHOLSON

The bill (S. 2033) to provide for the advancement on the retired list of the Navy of Milton F. Nicholson was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the chairman of the Naval Committee is here. I have examined this report, and this appeals to me as a very meritorious case.

Mr. HALE. I think it is a very meritorious case.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the Senator from Utah will withdraw his objection after the bill has been explained.

Mr. SMOOT. There will have to be some good reason given.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is a good reason.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, this bill simply rectifies a mistake which the Navy Department made at one time. This is a case of an officer of the regular Navy who was retired in July, 1925, on account of injury received in the line of duty. Prior to the time he was retired he had made the grade for promotion and had the right to take a physical examination for that promotion. The department, however, did not have him examined and he went before the retiring board. Had he taken the physical examination for promotion and failed to pass the examination, under existing law he would have been retired in the advanced grade of junior lieutenant. He did not do so, and therefore he was retired as an ensign instead of as a junior lieutenant.

Mr. SMOOT. I see from the report that he did not take an examination because of physical disability.

Mr. HALE. Incurred in the line of duty.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Ensign Milton F. Nicholson, United States Navy, retired, shall have the rank and receive the pay and allowances of a lieutenant, junior grade, on the retired list of the United States Navy. Such rank shall take effect on August 7, 1925, and such pay and allowances shall be paid from and after such date.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL ARBORETUM

The bill (S. 1640) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to establish a national arboretum, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

NORWEGIAN BARK "JANNA"

The bill (S. 1729) to authorize the payment of an indemnity to the Government of Norway on account of the losses sustained by the owners of the Norwegian bark Janna as a result of a collision between it and the U. S. S. Westwood was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be paid to the Government of Norway, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as a matter of grace, and without reference to the question of liability therefor, as full indemnity for losses sustained by the owners of the Norwegian bark Janna, or any other parties peculiarly interested, as a result of a collision between it and the United States ship Westwood on October 31, 1913, the sum of $45,978.36, as recommended by the President in his message of May 31, 1924.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NORWEGIAN STEAMSHIP "JOHN BLUMER"

The bill (S. 1732) to authorize the payment of an indemnity to the Government of Norway on account of the losses sustained by the owners of the Norwegian steamship John Blumer as a result of a collision between it and a barge in tow of the United States Army tug Britannia was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be paid to the Government of Norway, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as a matter of grace, and without reference to the question of liability therefor, as full indemnity for the losses sustained by the owners of the Norwegian steamship John Blumer, or any other parties peculiarly interested, as a result of a collision between it and a barge in tow of the United States Army tug Britannia on January 9, 1921, the sum of $4,040.39, as recommended by the President in his message of May 31, 1924.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL RESERVATION AT HINGHAM, MASS.

The bill (S. 3227) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to dispose of sand and gravel from the naval ammunition depot reservation at Hingham, Mass., was announced as next in order.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL BANKING ASSOCIATIONS

The bill (H. R. 2) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the consolidation of national banking associations," approved November 7, 1918; to amend section 5136 as amended, section 5137, section 5138 as amended, section 5142, section 5150, section 5155, section 5190, section 5200 as amended, section 5202 as amended, section 5208 as amended, section 5211 as amended, of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and to amend section 9, section 13, section 22, and section 24 of the Federal reserve act, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FESS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MARTHA E. BRACE

The bill (S. 3259) authorizing the enrollment of Martha E. Brace as a Kiowa Indian and directing issuance of patent in fee to certain lands was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There seems to be an amendment to this bill which is entirely different from the bill as originally introduced. The chairman of the committee is not here, and I ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 718) authorizing an appropriation to be expended under the provisions of section 7 of the act of March 1, 1911, entitled "An act to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States, or with the United States, for the protection of the watersheds of navigable streams, and to appoint a commission for the acquisition of lands for the purpose of conserving the navigability of navigable rivers," as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2858) to fix the salaries of certain judges of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. FESS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

FEES OF JURORS AND WITNESSES IN UNITED STATES COURTS

The bill (H. R. 120) fixing the fees of jurors and witnesses in the United States courts, including the District Court of Hawaii, the District Court of Porto Rico, and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST FARMERS' COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATIONS

The bill (S. 2965) to prevent discrimination against farmers' cooperative associations by boards of trade and similar organizations, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments, on page 3, line 22, after the word "association," to strike the words "of producers or landowners, corporate or otherwise" and to insert the words "corporate or otherwise, composed substantially of producers of agricultural products"; on page 4, to strike out lines 10 to 20, both inclusive, as follows:

Sec. 3. Any such cooperative association or any such organization whose duly authorized representative is excluded from such membership and privileges by any board of trade referred to in section 2 of this act may sue in the appropriate United States district court for a mandatory injunction compelling such board of trade to admit such duly authorized representative to such membership and privileges. The United States district court in whose jurisdiction such board of trade is operated or maintained shall have jurisdiction to issue such mandatory injunction and to award such incidental damages as it may deem appropriate.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Sec. 3. Any such cooperative association or any such organization whose duly authorized representative is excluded from such membership and privileges by any board of trade referred to in section 2 of this act may sue in the United States district court in whose jurisdiction such board of trade is operated or maintained for a mandatory injunction compelling such board of trade to admit such duly authorized representative to such membership and privileges and for any damages sustained, and such court shall have jurisdiction to issue such an injunction and to award such incidental damages as it may deem appropriate.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That when used in this act (a) the term "agricultural products" means agricultural, horticultural, viticultural, and dairy products, livestock and the products thereof, the products of poultry and bee raising, the edible products of forestry, and any and all products raised or produced on farms and processed or manufactured products thereof, transported or intended to be transported in interstate and/or foreign commerce.

(b) The words "board of trade" shall be held to include and mean any exchange or association, whether incorporated or unincorporated, of persons who shall be engaged in the business of buying or selling agricultural products or receiving the same for sale on consignment.

(c) The words "interstate commerce" shall be construed to mean commerce between any State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia, and any place outside thereof; or between points within the same State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia, but through any place outside thereof, or within any Territory or possession, or the District of Columbia.

(d) For the purposes of this act (but not in any wise limiting the foregoing definition of interstate commerce) a transaction in respect to any article shall be considered to be in interstate commerce if such article is part of that current of commerce usual in dealing in agricultural products whereby they are sent from one State with the expectation that they will end their transit, after purchase, in another, including, in addition to cases within the above general description, all cases where purchase or sale is either for shipment to another State or for manufacture within the State and the shipment outside the State of the products resulting from such manufacture. Articles normally in such current of commerce shall not be considered out of such commerce through resort being had to any means or device intended to remove transactions in respect thereto from the provisions of this act. For the purpose of this paragraph the word "State" includes Territory, the District of Columbia, possession of the United States, and foreign nation.

(e) The word "person" shall be construed to import the plural or singular, and shall include individuals, associations, partnerships, corporations, and trusts.

(f) The act, omission, or failure of any official, agent, or other person acting for any individual, association, partnership, corporation, or trust, within the scope of his employment or office, shall be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such individual, association, partnership, corporation, or trust, as well as of such official, agent, or other person.

Sec. 2. No board of trade whose members are engaged in the business of buying or selling agricultural products or receiving the same for sale on consignment in interstate commerce shall exclude from membership in, and all privileges on, such board of trade, any duly authorized representative of any lawfully formed and conducted cooperative association, corporate or otherwise, composed substantially of producers of agricultural products, or any such representative of any organization acting for a group of such associations, if such association or organization has adequate financial responsibility and complies or agrees to comply with such terms and conditions as are or may be imposed lawfully on other members of such board: Provided, That no rule of a board of trade shall forbid or be construed to forbid the return on a patronage basis by such cooperative association or organization to its bona fide members of moneys collected in excess of the expense of conducting the business of such association.

Sec. 3. Any such cooperative association or any such organization whose duly authorized representative is excluded from such membership and privileges by any board of trade referred to in section 2 of this act may sue in the United States district court in whose jurisdiction such board of trade is operated or maintained for a mandatory injunction compelling such board of trade to admit such duly authorized representative to such membership and privileges and for any damages sustained, and such court shall have jurisdiction to issue such an injunction and to award such incidental damages as it may deem appropriate.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I should like to have a word of explanation of this bill. Is the Senator from Kansas prepared to make a statement regarding it?

Mr. CAPPER. The bill was prepared by the Department of Agriculture in response to a demand from cooperative grain companies throughout the West doing business with the smaller board of trade. Under the futures trading act the cooperatives already have the privileges of contract markets. There are now 11 of these contract markets, but there are about 55 other markets in the United States—smaller grain exchanges—which do not come under the futures trading act. Cooperatives distributing patronage dividends are being arbitrarily excluded from these boards of trade. This bill simply gives to cooperatives the same rights in the smaller boards of trade already enjoyed by cooperatives doing business in the contract markets. The bill was prepared, as I said, by the Department of Agriculture. The officials of that department came before the Committee on Agriculture and urged its passage. I know of no reason why it should not be favorably acted on by the Senate.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the Senator from Kansas if these boards of trade are bodies organized under the Federal statutes?

Mr. CAPPER. They do not come under the futures trading act, as do the contract markets.

Mr. BAYARD. They are not created under the Federal incorporating laws?

Mr. CAPPER. They are not. In my own State, for instance, the State of Kansas, there are six small boards of trade which would come under the jurisdiction of the bill now before us. They can exclude cooperatives at will, because the Department of Agriculture has no control whatever over them. Cooperatives in the eastern part of my State enjoy the privileges of the Kansas City Board of Trade; but the cooperatives in the western part of the State have no rights in these smaller grain exchanges.

Mr. BAYARD. The thought in my mind, and what I was suggesting to the Senator, was this: Suppose one or two or more of these boards of trade within the Senator's State were conducting a business entirely intrastate, and one of your cooperative associations came along and desired to become a member for the purpose of transacting its business in one or more of those associations. What right has the Federal Government to pass a law insisting upon this purely local organization, doing a purely intrastate business, being received in the membership? What power have we in regard to it?

Mr. CAPPER. We certainly have power, because all of these grain exchanges are at times engaged in interstate business.

Mr. BAYARD. The thought in my mind is whether or not this proposed statute would be constitutional to that extent.

Mr. CAPPER. The Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture prepared the bill with great care, and at the committee hearing no question was raised as to its constitutionality.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES RITZEL

The bill (H. R. 5858) for the relief of Charles Ritzel was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STORAGE OF THE WATERS OF THE PECOS RIVER

The bill (H. R. 3862) to provide for the storage of the waters of the Pecos River was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let that go over.

Mr. COPELAND. The senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] wishes that this bill may go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I hope the Senator will withhold his objection to the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is too important a measure, involving an appropriation of millions of dollars, to be taken up and considered in five minutes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It has been approved by the Irrigation and Reclamation Committees of the Senate and the House and has passed the House unanimously.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not care to withdraw the objection.

Mr. SHEPPARD. In order that the Senator may consider the merits of the matter, let me say the bill does not create a new irrigation project. It merely provides for storing a normal water supply for districts already in existence, already fully settled, which were seriously damaged by the action of the Federal Government in establishing a Federal irrigation project about 65 miles north of these districts on the same river.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I may have no objection to the bill, but it seems to me it is too important to take up and consider in five minutes.

Mr. COPELAND. May I say to the Senator from Texas that the senior Senator from New Mexico asked that the bill go over, because he wishes to be present when it is considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ELBERT KELLY AND OTHERS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2168) for the relief of Elbert Kelly, a second lieutenant of Infantry in the Regular Army of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill was considered on April 8 and amended, on page 1, line 8, by inserting the words "Orestes Cleveland, a second lieutenant of Infantry, and James Harrison Dickie, a second lieutenant of Field Artillery." The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 2, line 1, to strike out the word "him" and insert in lieu thereof the word "them," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the contemplation of an act of Congress approved June 10, 1922, entitled "An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service," Elbert Kelly, a second lieutenant of Infantry, Orestes Cleveland, a second lieutenant of Infantry, and James Harrison Dickie, a second lieutenant of Field Artillery, in the Regular Army of the United States, shall be entitled to such credit for service performed by them as therein provided for officers in the service on June 30, 1922.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Elbert Kelly, Orestes Cleveland, and James Harrison Dickie, second lieutenants in the Army of the United States."

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 66) to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign-trade zones in ports of entry of the United States, to expedite and encourage foreign commerce, and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The bill can not be disposed of in three or four minutes, so it will have to go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 9037) validating certain applications for and entries of public lands, and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would like to have the bill explained. In the absence of an explanation, I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 201) authorizing the removal of the gates and piers in West Executive Avenue between the grounds of the White House and the State, War, and Navy Buildings was announced as next in order.

Mr. FERNALD. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2839) for the relief of Capt. James A. Merritt, United States Army, retired, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JAMES MADISON BROWN

The bill (H. R. 6874) for the relief of James Madison Brown was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

R. H. KING

The bill (S. 1356) for the relief of R. H. King was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask that the bill may go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will the Senator withhold his objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. A bill similar to this has already passed the Senate to-day, for the relief of another postmaster under similar circumstances. Congress has granted relief in a number of similar instances. The postmaster in this case has made good the loss, and it practically bankrupted him to do so. There was no dishonesty on his part in connection with the defalcation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Postmaster General reports that the postmaster was negligent in the manner of handling post-office accounts and cash.

Mr. SHEPPARD. He may not have been as vigilant as he should have been, but Congress has pursued the custom of voting relief in cases of this kind.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1860) for the relief of F. G. Proudfoot was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that that may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1650) for the relief of M. W. Hutchinson was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is an adverse report on this bill, and I ask that it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 115) for the relief of the owner of the steamship Neptune was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that that may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CARIB STEAMSHIP CO. (INC.)

The bill (S. 1727) for the relief of the Carib Steamship Co. (Inc.) was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $9,982.60 to the Carib Steamship Co. (Inc.), owner of the American steamship Carib, as compensation for and full satisfaction of all claims of said company for damages sustained by the steamship Carib and by said company, as its owner, as a result of a collision between the said steamship and the U. S. S. Wachusett on February 8, 1919, in the roads at the port of St. Nazaire, France, a naval board of investigation having placed the responsibility for said collision upon the Wachusett and the Naval Board of Review having fixed the damages sustained by the Carib at the said sum of $9,982.60.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will not the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] explain the bill?

Mr. BAYARD. The bill is for the relief of the Carib Steamship Co. by reason of the fact that during the war a Government-owned and operated boat fell afoul of the steamship Carib, I think somewhere off the coast of France. A naval board of inquiry found that the accident was entirely the fault of those operating the Government vessel. This merely restores them to their rights.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (H. R. 6559) for the construction of certain public buildings, and for other purposes.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bayard	Ferris	McKellar	Shipstead
Bingham	Fess	McLean	Shortridge
Blease	Fletcher	McMaster	Simmons
Borah	Frazier	McNary	Smith
Bratton	Gillett	Mayfield	Smoot
Broussard	Gooding	Neely	Stephens
Bruce	Hale	Norbeck	Swanson
Butler	Harris	Nye	Trammell
Cameron	Harrison	Oddie	Tyson
Capper	Hellin	Overman	Walsh
Caraway	Howell	Phelps	Warren
Copeland	Johnson	Pine	Watson
Couzens	Jones, N. Mex.	Ransdell	Weller
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Reed, Pa.	Williams
Deneen	Kendrick	Robinson, Ark.	Willis
Edge	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.
Edwards	La Follette	Sackett
Fernald	Lenroot	Sheppard

Mr. PHIPPS. I desire to announce that my colleague, the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. MEANS], is absent because of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLEASE in the chair). Sixty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President—

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Italian debt settlement bill be laid before the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I object.

Mr. WALSH. I hope the Senator from Mississippi will not object.

Mr. HARRISON. I want the Senator from Utah to move to take up the debt settlement bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no.

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Italian debt settlement bill (H. R. 6773) be taken up for consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Mississippi objected to my request to take it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Italian debt settlement bill.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, it was the understanding that if we took up anything else in place of the Italian debt settlement bill, at any time we wanted to take up the Italian debt settlement for discussion we could do so.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I ask at the present time. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] stated to me that he very much preferred to speak upon the bill when it was before the Senate rather than to speak upon the public buildings bill. I said then that I would ask unanimous consent that the Italian debt settlement measure be temporarily laid before the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. I want the Italian debt settlement bill laid before the Senate. That is what I am asking to have done, and the Senator is objecting.

Mr. SMOOT. I am objecting to making it the unfinished business and displacing the present unfinished business now before the Senate. There is no necessity for it. The Senator from Montana, of course, could address the Senate upon the subject of the Italian debt settlement without asking that that measure be laid before the Senate, but he asked me to have the Italian debt settlement bill laid before the Senate in order that he might speak directly upon it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, in view of the conversation which took place when the public buildings bill was laid before the Senate and made the unfinished business, I hope the Senator from Mississippi will withdraw his motion.

Mr. HARRISON. Both the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Utah know that there are certain Senators here who are very much opposed to the public buildings bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. I have moved that the Italian debt settlement bill be laid before the Senate. There was an understanding that when anyone wanted to talk on the Italian debt settlement question that bill would be laid before the Senate. That was the understanding, and I have simply asked that it be carried out, and the Senator from Utah objects to it.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I asked that it be laid before the Senate, and the Senator from Mississippi objected.

Mr. HARRISON. I objected because I want the public buildings bill laid aside for the present.

Mr. SMOOT. That is for the Senate to determine. If the Senate wants to lay aside the public buildings bill, then Senators will vote favorably on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi. I do not deny that the Senator from Mississippi has a right to make the motion. He is perfectly within his rights in making the motion he has made. I asked that the unfinished business now before the Senate be not displaced, but that we temporarily lay it aside for the purpose of allowing the Senator from Montana to address the Senate on the Italian debt settlement. If the Senator from Mississippi still objects and wants a vote on his motion, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, for information, what is the motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Italian debt settlement bill?

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PHIPPS (when Mr. MEANS's name was called). My colleague, the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. MEANS], is absent on account of illness.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (when Mr. PEPPER's name was called). The senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] is paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. STECK]. If the senior Senator from Pennsylvania were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. Not knowing how he would vote, I transfer my pair to my colleague [Mr. MEANS] and vote "nay."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] and vote "nay."

Mr. McNARY (when Mr. STANFIELD's name was called). My colleague, the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD], is absent from the city. If present, he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to announce that the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. GILLETT. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] and vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD], who is absent. I do not know how that Senator would vote, if he were present, so I withdraw my vote.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. EANSR] is detained on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 44, as follows:

YEAS—19
Borah	Harrison	Nye	Stephens
Bratton	Howell	Overman	Trammell
Ferris	McKellar	Ransdell	Tyson
Frazier	Mayfield	Robinson, Ark.	Walsh
Harris	Neely	Smith
NAYS—44
Bingham	Fernald	La Follette	Sackett
Bleuse	Fess	Lenroot	Sheppard
Broussard	Fletcher	McLenn	Shipstead

Dale	Harreld	Pittman
Dill	Heflin	Reed, Mo.
du Pont	King	Schall

So Mr. HARRISON'S motion was rejected.

INDEBTEDNESS OF ITALY TO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. SMOOT. Now, Mr. President, I again ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside and that the bill providing for the settlement of the Italian debt may be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRISON. Out of courtesy to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], I will not object.

Mr. SMOOT. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate House bill 6773.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6773) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Kingdom of Italy to the United States of America.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have no sympathy and little patience with the oft-repeated plea that the United States should forgive to its late allies the whole or some part of the debt due from them because they were fighting our war. Late dispatches from London tell us that one Philip Snowden advanced on the floor of the House of Commons the idea that the loans should be regarded as contributions by the United States in view of its tardiness in entering the war. If my memory is not at fault, this same Philip Snowden was himself somewhat tardy in getting into the war. I should not notice these animadversions on either the justice or the magnanimity of America emanating from foreign sources were it not that they are echoed by some sections of the press in this country and reflected in arguments made on this floor. I deny that any of the nations with which we became associated against the Central Powers were fighting our war. It was a European quarrel, pure and simple, into which we were reluctantly drawn by reason of the invasion of our rights in the prosecution of it by one set of the belligerents. It is idle to attempt to apportion the responsibility for the sanguinary and devastating conflict.

My conviction that Germany was the chief offender has never been shaken, but the view once industriously inculcated and widely accepted that her enemies were blameless long since passed into the class of fiction. The war sprang out of the jealousies, the rivalries, the hatreds, the ambitions of the governing classes of the various nations of Europe, arising out of racial, linguistic, and religious differences past and present, shared to a greater or less extent by their people as a whole, respectively, and intensified by bloody and barbarous conflicts extending as far back at least as the dawn of history. In the passions thus excited neither the Government nor the people of the United States participated to any degree. We were in perfect amity with all the nations eventually becoming parties to the titanic struggle, not only nominally but in very truth. We had no quarrel with any of them; there existed between us and none of them either enmity or rivalry calling for military preparedness. There existed no controversies of any character not readily resolvable, as in the past all like differences had been resolved, by diplomatic negotiation or some form of arbitral procedure. On the other hand, Great Britain and Germany had regarded each other for years as potential enemies, so that it had become the settled policy of the former to build two battleships for every one laid down by her continental rival. The Berlin-to-Bagdad railway scheme had aroused apprehensions in England as to the future of her Indian possessions, and the rivalry in commerce of those two powers had become acute. It is needless to descant upon the sad heritage of hatred and vengefulness resulting from the reciprocal invasions through the centuries of France and Germany that history records. Russia's dream of dominating the waters connecting the Black Sea with the Aegean and exercising a hegemony over all the Slavic states continued to animate the counsels of the last of the Czars. The oppression of her Latin subjects by Austria fed the consuming ambition for the redemption of "Italia Irredenta" and made more easy the purchase of the repudiation by Italy of her alliance with the Central Powers through the secret treaty which came so near wrecking the peace negotiations at Paris.

I protest that the war was a European war; it was not ours, and its character is not changed by the fact that had the result been otherwise Germany might have been in a position with every disposition to march boot and spurred through the world. We should still have been protected against any warlike purposes she might have entertained against us by 3,000 miles of ocean, with no certainty that the conquests she madly hoped for would not be a handicap rather than an aid to her. We did, indeed, enter to make the world safe for democracy, that the people of the nations might in the future, through their representatives, pass upon the supreme issue of peace or war, rather than some ambitious autocrat or prince, but it would have been quixotic on our part to interfere upon any such ground, no offense upon the part of any of the belligerents having been directed against us. If the expectations indulged by our people in that regard were but feebly realized, if at all, the fault was not ours. Notwithstanding the generous impulses that stirred the hearts of the American people in taking up arms, and the high hopes with which they were animated touching the future peace of the world, through the enterprise in which they enlisted, what man is bold enough to assert that we ever would have got into the fray, or should have got into it, were our rights as neutrals strictly observed by the belligerents? Whether it was our war or one strictly European into which we were unfortunately drawn by the way in which it was prosecuted, having no share in the controversies giving rise to it, if it is to be regarded in any sense as an open question, is made plain by considering who became its beneficiaries. France recovered Alsace and Lorraine and divided with Great Britain a vast territory in Asia formerly a part of the dominion of the Turk, pursuant to a secret treaty between those two powers, which, with Belgium, took over the German colonies in Africa.

Italy extended her boundaries northward to the summit of the Tyrolean Alps, and the Adriatic, at her instance, became all but an Italian lake. It is unnecessary to mention the matter of reparations in money or movables, nor to dwell upon the very reasonable inference that the hope of the territorial acquisitions eventually effected tempered the horror and dismay with which Germany's precipitation of the conflict was regarded by those nations to which she threw down the gauge of battle. Anyway, the general partitioning which took place and the contentions attending its accomplishment makes ridiculous the assertion that anyone was at any time fighting our war.

I refer to this subject reluctantly. I have no disposition to dwell upon it, but I can not sit idly by while my country is traduced as a Shylock for insisting upon liquidation of sums loaned by it to its allies for the prosecution of the war, in which we eventually became jointly engaged with them, and to repair its ravages, the imputation resting upon the perfectly baseless proposition that they were fighting our war.

There is another line of argument pursued in support of the extraordinarily generous settlement for which our approval is asked by the pending bill somewhat allied to that which has been considered. Copious quotations are made from speeches of Members of both Houses of Congress delivered while the bill authorizing the loans was in course of passage, the purpose of which addresses was to commend the measure and to dissipate any opposition that might arise founded upon the fear or belief that the nations to which the loans were to be made might not be able, in view of their magnitude, the vicissitudes of the war, and the impoverishment likely to follow from it to repay the advances to be made. Generally the speaker to whose remarks so much importance is now attached indicated that in view of the dire necessity of the nations allied with us in the war, the purposes to which the funds were to be devoted, and the interest we had in common with those thus associated with us in bringing the war to a successful termination, however risky any loan authorized by the act might be, however, it might be attended with peril of total loss, he was nevertheless in favor of the measure.

The senior Senator from Utah referred in opening the debate on the pending bill to comments along the lines indicated by the senior Senator from North Carolina, the chairman of the Committee on Finance, on reporting the bill for the act pursuant to which the loans were made, obviously to predispose Senators to assent to the proposal to abate to Italy three-fourths of the debt confessedly due from her to the people of the United States. It will be borne in mind, however, that Senator SIMMONS was arguing not that our Government make gifts, but that it make loans to our allies. He may have been willing to make gifts or to regard some undefined portion of the sums to be advanced as gifts, but no such course was proposed by him or by anyone else. The intent and purpose of the Congress is to be gathered from the legislation it enacts, and not by what one or more of the 96 Senators or 435 Representatives may have said in debate. Even in the event of ambiguity in the language of the statute the debates on its passage are regarded as a doubtful source of enlightenment. Congress was not asked to advance any money by way of gift, and it may be said with safety that it would not have done so had it been asked. Every consideration now invoked to induce the view that the advances ought to be looked upon, in part at least, as gifts, or as contributions by the Government of the United States to the common cause, was equally forceful at the time the legislation was before Congress and at the time the loans were made. The world peril the Entente Allies had arrested, the sacrifices they had made, the losses they had sustained, as now recounted, were then fresh in the memory of every Member of Congress. The trials they were still to endure were in the main easily to be imagined. And yet it was not conceived that Congress could be induced upon any such ground to pour billions gratuitously into their treasuries to be expended at their will. Still it is apparent that the view is entertained abroad, and to some extent on this side of the water, that our Government should now act as though it had or ought to have adopted such a spendthrift policy. The considerations adverted to as a reason for the abatement to the creditors of our Government of a part of the debts due from them were not advanced at the time the loans were effected. The funds were asked for by the borrowing nations, the obligation to repay was entered into, and the honor of the nations involved stands pledged for its redemption.

There is no basis offered on behalf of Italy upon which the Congress of the United States can justify to the people for whom it acts, and who themselves were obliged to borrow the money loaned, any abatement of the sums due except, if it be the fact, that the debtor is unable to meet its obligations. In the main it is upon that ground appeal is made for the approval of the settlement which has been negotiated with Italy, in effect that her obligation be regarded as discharged by payments extending over a period of 62 years, the present worth of which is a sum equivalent to approximately 26.2 per cent of the debt. It is said that in view of the paucity of the natural resources of that country, the capital of which was for centuries the capital of the world, she is unable to pay more. That question has been elaborately discussed and I am not disposed to dilate upon it. Conceding the fact to have been established, it is argued that the adjustment of the transaction on the terms proposed would contribute to the stabilization of the finances of Italy and more or less of Europe in general, and so promote the rehabilitation of industry still suffering from the disorganization incident to the war, affording a much-needed outlet for our surplus products. This aspect of the case, I confess, makes a strong appeal to me. I may have been misguided in my views concerning the proper policy which the United States should pursue with reference to the nations of Europe since the armistice; but it has been my steady conviction that our country is vitally concerned, not alone on humanitarian but on economic grounds in the complete pacification of that theater of war, and my attitude concerning international problems that have been before us has been uniformly colored, if not controlled, by that conviction.

The four leading products of my State—wheat, copper, silver, and meats—all go abroad, the major portion of the surplus to the countries of Europe. If the substance of their people is consumed in devastating wars or eaten up in maintaining huge standing armies instead of being devoted to the development of productive enterprises, if by reason of political disturbances or financial derangements industry is at a standstill or is seriously handicapped, the people of my State suffer. Italy, it is true, is without a domestic supply of coal, the source of the marvelous development industrially of the manufacturing nations of Europe and America. But she is rich in undeveloped water power, the utilization of which would make enormous demands for the copper of Montana. Our durum wheat, a drought-resisting variety of that grain, is highly prized by the people of Italy by reason of its adaptability to the preparation of macaroni and other like dishes in favor among them. If there were any reasonable grounds for believing that the political, economic, and industrial conditions in Italy would be materially improved by approving the settlement negotiated by the Debt Commission with the government of that country, I should be powerfully persuaded upon national grounds, as well as some peculiar to my State, to indorse it without any critical analysis of its terms to ascertain whether it measured up fully to the tests said to have been applied of Italy's capacity to pay. But I am convinced we have no such assurance. On the contrary there is abundant ground for believing that what we are asked to do is simply to assist Mussolini, now master of Italy, supreme dictator as must be admitted, to arrange his finances that he may precipitate another war or bluster about until the fear, if not the belief, of such purpose on his part is general, strengthening his position at home through concessions wrung from feeble, war-worn neighbors that yield to the dread of a renewal of the carnage of which they have such ghastly memories.

Ambassador Houghton, called home to acquaint the President more intimately than the usual means of communication would permit with the conditions in Europe having a more or less direct bearing upon the disarmament conference, in which the United States is invited to participate, reported, as he was quoted by representatives of the press whom he met by appointment, that "the whole of Europe regards Premier Mussolini with the utmost distrust. His utterances," he continued, "are taken very seriously in European capitals with the result that there are turmoil and thoughts of war all over Europe." Undoubtedly the ambassador had in mind, among others, the swashbuckling speech he made early in February last, in which he threatened that an Italian Army might go through the Brenner Pass on the boundary between his country and Austria to avenge some offense given in speech by an irresponsible official of Bavaria, adding in that connection something about "two eyes for the loss of one" and "a whole set of teeth for the loss of one tooth" and characterizing the Locarno pacts, to which his Government was signatory, while still Europe was hailing them as its salvation, as something "soft, evanescent, and even hypocritical."

It was charged in the debate in the House of Commons on the failure to carry out the Locarno pacts by the admission of Germany to the league with membership in the Council, that responsibility for the debacle did not rest alone on Brazil, which insisted on being accorded contemporaneously with Germany a permanent seat in the Council, it "being well known on the Continent," the speaker declared, "that the real voice behind it all was the voice of Mussolini." American papers note as particularly significant that this statement so publicly made by Ashmead-Bartlett, startling as it was, drew no comment from either the Prime Minister or the Foreign Minister.

Although a denial has come from Brazil of continental inspiration of her obduracy, it is noteworthy that no disclaimer has been issued by Mussolini. Ex-Attorney General Wickersham on his recent return from Europe, where he attended a meeting of the commission which, under the auspices of the league, is inaugurating the work of the codification of international law, in a public address declared Mussolini to be "the greatest menace to the peace of the world to-day," adding that "it is evident that when the Italian leader sees his control slipping he plans to enter upon a program of territorial expansion that will force his subjects to continue to lend their support." This view is no idle dream. The purpose is boldly proclaimed by the Fascist press. Thus, La Tribuna, a Roman paper, of January 6 last, says:

In what direction, then, can Italy look for her industrial development and the means of supporting her too many children? . . . The industry of a country without raw materials has natural limits which are not very wide and which can be easily reached but not passed over. This is the national deficiency that is becoming burdensome. At the present moment France refuses to give us raw iron. Tomorrow, if she can establish with Germany a metallurgical trust on the Rhine, she will impose on us a monopolistic price for her iron. Profiting by the peace treaties, England had already imposed on us her monopolistic prices for coal. Moreover, the same England, together with the British Empire, the United States, and even conquered Germany, has practically closed its markets to our exportation with its new protectionist tariffs. From all this we have the fatal result of a serious disequilibrium in our commercial balance. . . . We are face to face with a true and proper economic servitude which can not do otherwise than translate itself into a political servitude also. Now, in such conditions it would be dangerous to delude ourselves into thinking that Italian industry can go on developing in proportion to the increase in the population or to close our eyes to the threatening import of the consequences that will affect the political liberty of Italy. . . .

That is the great Italian problem which will not brook postponement. To it we must add that of our strategic freedom in the Mediterranean, which is a problem not less grave, and that of Italian nationality, which in more than one point of the Mediterranean is in serious peril. But let us confine ourselves to the first and greatest problem. If she does not wish blindly to continue on the road to ruin and servitude, it is clear that Italy must lay hands on raw material which will be her own, and lands of her own for purposes of colonization, it being understood that this is to take place outside of Europe. It is not less clear that nobody is going to cede us these things gratuitously. Therefore, if we are not ready one day to perish, we shall be forced to seize them. And to seize them necessarily and in the first place means a modification of the present map of the Mediterranean and in general the extra-European imperial map. And this change must necessarily come through an act of force.

The naval plans of Italy contemplate something more than freedom in the Mediterranean mentioned in the article to which reference has been made. A copyright dispatch from Rome to the Chicago Tribune, bearing date March 7, reports an interview with the Italian secretary of state of the navy from which the correspondent draws the conclusion that, in view of the polemics of the Fascist press for the construction of a fleet to dominate the Mediterranean, plans for the modernization of the navy of Italy have that end in view. I send to the desk a copy of the article referred to and ask that it be printed as an appendix to my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit A.)

Mr. WALSH. There is enough substance in the program of Italian naval expansion to excite the alarm of Great Britain, as shown by an article appearing in the Washington Herald of April 5, from the pen of Maj. Gen. Sir R. Maurice, chief of operations of the British general staff during the war, who, arguing for disarmament, points out that Britain's expenditures on her army and navy approximate what they were costing her when the great war was imminent—necessarily so, he insists, because of the disturbed state of affairs on the Continent. Having called attention to the higher range of prices, he adds:

But the most important reason of all is that despite the League of Nations, despite the Locarno pact, despite the welcome appearance of Germany at Geneva, the world in general and Europe in particular is in a very disturbed state. Emperor William's shining armor is no longer in evidence, but Mussolini's clenched fist is flourished in turn in the faces of Greece, Serbia, and Germany.

France has 1,300 airplanes in the service of her army; Italy has embarked upon a great program of air expansion and has voted money for 80 squadrons of approximately 1,300 machines, the same number as France.

Italy is not within bombing range of our shores, but she is casting covetous eyes on Malta, and some of Mussolini's hot-heads talk openly of an Italian Mediterranean.

Sensibly he remarks, continuing his argument:

But the best reason of all for limiting armaments is that the accumulation of armaments and competition in armaments were the direct causes of the World War. With Europe in the state in which it was in 1914, if the archduke had not been murdered, something else would have caused the armies to march.

Obviously the domination of the Mediterranean by Italy contemplates wresting from her such control as Great Britain now exerts from Gibraltar and Malta to keep the route to India open and from France such as she exercises to insure passage to and from her African colonies.

According to the soldier just quoted, Italy's air establishment even now, desperately poor as she is, according to the supporters of the pending measure, rivals that of France, or the money has been voted to make it so, this particular activity being a feature of the reorganization of her army. That arm is by no means being neglected, while the navy is being reconstructed and strengthened. Two days after the appearance of the article mentioned, on March 10, the press carried another dispatch from Rome telling of a further ambitious project of what our militarists call "preparedness." It is so ominous in character that I venture to present it in full as follows as it appears in the New York Times:

ITALY TO EXPAND ARMY AS FINANCES PERMIT—MUSSOLINI TELLS THE SENATE THAT TIMES ARE UNCERTAIN—WE MUST BE PREPARED

ROME, March 9.—After speeches by Marshals Cadorna and Diaz, Italy's commanders in chief in the World War, by Generals Caviglia and Giardino, who were army leaders in the conflict, and by Premier Mussolini in his capacity as Minister of War, the senate, by an almost unanimous vote, approved to-day the group of seven laws constituting the army reform proposed by Signor Mussolini.

In his speech the Premier said that when Italy's financial condition improved the number of divisions would be increased, bringing the standing army to 250,000 men, and added that "these are uncertain times and we must be prepared."

About a year ago the senate showed such hostility toward an army reform measure proposed by General Digiorgio, then Minister of War, whose plan was somewhat similar to that which was approved to-day, that Premier Mussolini hastily withdrew the bill before a vote was taken.

The main points of Signor Mussolini's army reform are a standing army of 220,000 men, while General Digiorgio proposed an army of only 140,000; compulsory military service for six months, while General Digiorgio proposed only three months; the adoption of a so-called tertiary division composed of three regiments instead of four; and written and oral examinations for all officers before promotion.

All of the speakers showed themselves favorable to the reform except General Caviglia, who criticized the adoption of the tertiary division, but expressed himself satisfied on all other points.

There being no criticism to answer, Signor Mussolini limited himself to explaining some points of the reform. Any army reform, he said, must necessarily knock against the rock of Italy's financial resources. It was not a question of devising a perfect army reform, he added, but of the best way of spending a fixed sum of money.

Justification for a standing army of 250,000 men, nearly twice the number of the Army of our great Nation of approximately 120,000,000 people, to be supported by the bankrupt, poverty-stricken Italians, consists in the fact that, to use the language of Mussolini, "these are uncertain times and we must be prepared." The contributions made by him to remove the uncertainty which unhappily prevails have been neither signal nor noteworthy, if indeed, as is asserted by the responsible observers whose comments have been quoted, he has not been one of the prime factors in continuing and fomenting it. His Tripoli speech bristles with bellicose bluster. The Kaiser never rattled his saber more ominously. He usually brandished his sword against imaginary enemies about to or yearning to invade the Fatherland. Mussolini's bugle blast is a call to conquest, to attack, not defense.

My voyage—

He said—

must not be interpreted as a mere administrative act, but as it is, an affirmation of power of the Italian people, a manifestation of the force which originates in Rome, and which extends from Rome to a glorious and triumphant littoral.

Again he said:

Fascist Italian Tripoli! You represent here Italy, which is daily more prosperous and powerful. Rome carries the beacon lamp of strength to the shores of the African sea. No one can stop our inexorable will.

And then he continued:

You understand me more for what I have not said than for what I have said. Only this language is possible in Fascist style.

The Associated Press report adds:

What the premier left unsaid was proclaimed by the militantly imposing welcome accorded him far more loudly than it could have been in words.

And then, telling in detail of the military display and of exercises all having a military note reviewed by the distinguished visitor, the dispatch concludes:

With this over, he seemed to tighten his jaw, and glanced at the correspondents as if to indicate that Italy's first determination is to follow ancient Rome's road toward empire.

It is asserted that it is no affair of ours what kind of a Government Italy may have, nor may we complain if the fact be that it is autocratic rather than democratic, despotic rather than popular. And that is quite true so far as its internal administration is concerned, though the rule has not been adhered to with marked rigidity in the case of Russia.

It is, of course, none of our business whether, as generally proclaimed, the last vestige of liberty has disappeared under the Mussolini régime, whether freedom of speech and of the press remains but a memory, or whether the ruling order is maintained by protected murder and practices akin thereto, as indicated in a dispatch from Paris under date of April 5 telling of the death there of an Italian patriot, a scholarly man of mild though stirring eloquence, from the effects of a beating inflicted by adherents of Mussolini, from whose views and rule he chose to dissent. The story is so fraught with lessons that I ask a copy of it may be printed in the Record as a further appendix to my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit B.)

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, of course it is none of our business as to the kind of internal administration the Government of Italy gives its people, but when the Government of the United States is asked to forego three-fourths of a debt due to it from Italy, amounting to $2,042,000,000, we may well inquire—indeed, the Members of this body would be derelict if they did not diligently inquire—whether the course proposed is likely to contribute to the peace of the world or to still further disturb it. The Corfu incident is not forgotten. The provocation in that case was great. The mouthings of the Bavarian Pan German may have been exasperating, but the reprisal in the one case and the retort in the other have filled Europe with alarm. Mussolini may not intend war; his swashbuckling speeches may be mere bluster; but no nation neighbor to Italy can afford to or will take chances. It is not going to disarm unless he retires or mends his ways.

The nature of the transaction for which our approval is asked by the pending bill is not fully appreciated from the assertion that the present worth of the payments to be made by Italy amounts to 26 per cent, approximately, of the debt. Our Government is paying $4\frac{1}{4}$ per cent interest on the money loaned to Italy, amounting to \$2,042,000,000, on which it pays interest at 1.1 per cent, an annual loss to us of something more than \$64,000,000. If we shall succeed in refunding our debt at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, as some sanguine financiers say we shall, the American taxpayer will put up annually \$49,000,000 more for the money loaned to Italy than she returns for the use of it, a loss in the aggregate running into billions. If this loss is borne by all the people of the United States, each his ratable share, it lays upon Montana on the basis of its present population the staggering burden of over \$250,000 a year. Were the payment to be made directly out of the State treasury no one would defend it, but the load is carried by the people just the same, the money being collected by the Government at the customhouses and through the income-tax machinery, the immediate taxpayer then collecting it of the ultimate consumer, directly or indirectly in the added price demanded for the wares the former sells. It must not be forgotten either that over one-third of the great sum loaned to Italy, some \$800,000,000, was advanced after the armistice.

I can not be stampeded by the argument advanced in various ways to conceal its character as a threat that we can take what has been offered or take nothing. No nation can carry on in our times under the cloud of repudiation. If the Italian debt is not settled on the terms now proposed, it will be suing in less than five years for a satisfactory adjustment. Without any prompting from this side France, according to press reports, is about to make another attempt to agree on terms for the settlement of her obligations. Neither am I perturbed by the assertion that the good will of the nations of Europe is worth the sacrifice we are called upon to make. No particularly commendable spirit has been exhibited in view of the prospect of a settlement upon the liberal terms proposed, no gratitude is displayed for our coming to the rescue of their cause when it was desperate or for the consideration shown them in connection with the loans they so eagerly sought from us, and precious little for the aid we extended to relieve the destitution which followed in the wake of the war.

Our experience has not been such as to justify the belief that had we at the outset done what they want us to do and have always wanted us to do, cancel the debt entirely, a more friendly regard would be felt toward us. The most that can be said is that the hostility which has been displayed might not have been so marked, since their attitude has always been that such a course should be pursued by us as a duty, as a matter of right on their part, not as a matter of grace on ours. But that time has passed, and the idea of cancellation has been repudiated by us from the beginning. We could not purchase their good will now by total cancellation, and we certainly can not by partial cancellation.

It will be prudent in considering arguments in favor of the Italian settlement to remember that upon the approval of it by the commission a loan of $100,000,000 was secured through the Morgan firm by Italy on which she pays better than 7 per cent interest. Obviously the value of the bonds issued in evidence of that loan will be materially enhanced if the pending bill becomes a law. Without any direct evidence one may shrewdly suspect that not a little of the propaganda in favor of it is referable to that transaction and some of the public sentiment to the present holders of those securities calling for 7 per cent interest while those to our Government to be issued pursuant to the settlement, if it shall be approved, bear but 1.1 per cent, said to be all Italy can possibly pay.

Regardless, however, of the want of any generous response to the unparalleled philanthropy of America toward the stricken people of Europe, their appalling losses make a powerful appeal in support of the debt settlements that have been arranged, which might turn the scale were it not for the doubt troubling some of us as to whether in the case of Italy their plight will not be aggravated by any material improvement in the finances of the Italian Government and the world be brought again face to face with the cataclysm of war. If the Congress of the United States desires to do something for the people of Italy as distinguished from the Government of Italy, let it pull down the wall erected by the tariff act of 1922 to the level of the rates of the Underwood-Simmons Act, as to the commodities of greatest value and amount imported from that country. I have caused a computation to be made from which it appears that duties exacted by our Government on the leading imports from Italy above what would have been paid had the law it displaced been continued amounted in the year ended June 30, 1925, to upward of $4,300,000, almost as much as Italy will pay annually, should the bill before us become a law, for the next five years.

It must be recognized by all that whatever Italy pays on the debt due the United States must be paid in goods produced by her people. Increasing the duty on imports from that country is equivalent in every essential respect to increasing the rate of interest on the debt. If, the obligation having been incurred and the rate of interest fixed, it were possible for the United States to increase the rate it would be inconceivable that it would do so. The morals of our people would revolt at such a proposal, and the world would be shocked if it were entertained by our Government. Yet without a qualm we burden the transfer of the products with which they must discharge the debt to the extent of upward of four millions annually above what it bore under the law when the debt was contracted, to say nothing of the near destruction of the trade they then enjoyed with us in respect to imports of a number of their leading products. We demand payment of the debt and then impose prohibitory tariffs, which make it impossible for them to pay. The duty on lemons, for instance, having been raised from the equivalent of one-half cent per pound, as fixed by the act of 1913, to 2 cents per pound, as prescribed by the act of 1922, in excess of 50 per cent ad valorem, the importations dropped from $5,918,724 worth in 1914 to $943,890 worth in 1924. Importations of macaroni that underwent an increase from 1 cent to 2 cents per pound, approximately 50 per cent ad valorem, fell from 121,924,372 pounds in 1914 to 3,625,372 pounds in 1924.

Relief to the people of Italy along the lines indicated would be alike honorable to us and just to them. Give them an opportunity to trade with us on reasonable terms and there would be no occasion for the largess contemplated by the bill before us.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I call attention to the fact that under the last tariff act there was a tariff of 60 per cent on straw hats. Under the flexible provisions of that tariff act the President of the United States has recently increased the tariff on straw hats selling at a price of $9.50 per thousand or less from 60 per cent to 88 per cent.

Mr. SIMMONS. And they come from Italy.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Of course the northern part of Italy was the section of the country chiefly concerned.

Mr. WALSH. I thank the Senator for the additional information.

It was frankly confessed by the proponents of the act of 1922 that the conditions under which world trade was then being carried on were so abnormal and unstable that it was impossible to fix rates of duty conforming with reasonable accuracy to principles upon which they contended tariff legislation should be enacted. The depression of the German mark and other European currency was offered as a reason for rates which could not otherwise be defended or excused. The dramatic language of the Senator in charge of the bill which became that law in opening the discussion of it before this body will be recalled. On that occasion he said:

We have been often advised, and the advice is well founded, that of all times in our history this is the very worst time to formulate and put into effect a new tariff measure; but, Mr. President, it is equally true that of all times in the history of the country this is the time in which a protective tariff is most needed to sustain our American industries and our millions of people dependent upon them.

It was largely because of the fluctuations in the rates of exchange from which the world was then suffering that made it "the very worst time to formulate and put into effect a new tariff measure." The framers of the law took a bond of fate, however, by boosting the rates to unheard-of heights with an implied promise that they would come down if experience justified reduction under the operations of its so-called flexible provisions. In the same speech it was said:

With the rapid changes going on in the world in the cost of production, in the fluctuation of exchange, in the increase of labor's cost in some cases and decrease in others, any rate which we may now establish as being the proper rate may be found to work an injustice either as against the American manufacturer or the American importer.

Take note that, as viewed by Senator McCumber, the controversy was one between the American manufacturer and the American importer, not one between the American manufacturer and the American consumer. His rights and interests seem to have been forgotten, but the importer was to have justice done him, for the speaker continued:

We have attempted to meet this by a provision permitting the Executive, on a finding of fact that the rates are so high that they amount to an embargo or are unjust or too obstructive to fair competition and fair commerce or so low that our industries are being destroyed, to lower or advance the rates within fixed limits to meet those situations.

In the light of the history of the provision thus promised, as disclosed by the investigation now in progress, was there ever a more flagrant case of holding the word of promise to the ear and breaking it to the hope? Vast changes have ensued since but no evidences of any disposition to depart from a stand-pat policy are yet discernible.

The chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, who so resolutely urges the legislation upon which we are called upon to act, stated repeatedly upon this floor before he was appointed to membership on the Debt Commission that he could and perhaps would demonstrate that it would be to the financial interest of the United States to cancel all war debts due us. Whether that conviction influenced him in any degree in his acts as such member is a matter of speculation. That he discharged his duty as such obedient to the command of the law as he saw it no one questions, but he is known as an uncompromising, high protectionist, and must recognize that if the debts are ever to be paid they must be paid in the product of the debtor nations, and that every obstacle to the admission of such reasonably removable without peril to American industry must be removed. To demand at one and the same time a prohibitive tariff and liquidation of the war debt is contradictory and useless.

MODERNIZED NAVY GOAL OF FASCISTI, SIRIANNI ASSERTS—NO INCREASE FORERUNNEN, BUT OBSOLETE UNITS ARE TO BE REPLACED—DOMINANCE IS SOUGHT IN THE MEDITERRANEAN—NATION MUST BE ABLE TO GUARD ITS 5,589 MILES OF COAST, ADMIRAL HOLDS

ROME, March 7.—Italy's naval program foresees no increase in the fleet, but modernization through the replacement of its many obsolete units with the more modern types of smaller craft.

The present economic state does not allow Italy to construct the superdreadnaughts permitted it under the terms of the Washington naval agreement. Therefore, it must concentrate on lighter vessels. But when conditions permit Italy intends to regain its naval power in the Mediterranean.

The ministry of marine is inclined toward the theory that the suppression of submarines would give large fleets more domination of the seas and relegate the weaker navies to still weaker positions.

Those are the more important points emphasized in an interview with Admiral Sirianni, undersecretary of state of the navy, upon whom the writer called to clear up the conflicting statements regarding Italy's building program which have been appearing in the Italian press.

Admiral Sirianni's declarations are most important in view of the polemics of the fascist press demanding the construction of a fleet to dominate the Mediterranean. The protection of vital interests of defense and domination is back of the Italian naval plans, the interview indicates.

"I am much pleased to grant an interview to a representative of a foreign paper," began Admiral Sirianni. "Italy can only benefit by the wider publication of the intensive effort it is putting forth toward the reconstruction and rehabilitation of all that the war and the long period of slack discipline among the people have destroyed.

GEOGRAPHY BASE OF NEEDS

"Italy's naval needs arise directly from its geographical situation and its special requirements, whose importance are evident, even from superficial consideration," he said. "You need only to glance at the map. Our country is inclosed within its limits by the national barrier of the Alps, which the nation, inspired by the value of what are its rights, has been able to conquer—the frontier assigned to it by nature. On every other side it is surrounded by the Mediterranean, and only by that sea, whose gates have been held by other powers.

"If you will consider that Italy has 9,000 kilometers (5,589 miles) of coast, on which are situated important cities open to attack; that it is not rich in cereals; that it lacks raw materials; that both of these things come to it over the sea; that it has scattered all over the world millions of its sons who carried their tenacious industry into foreign lands; if you will consider that its population has a yearly increase of approximately 400,000; that this makes it a vital necessity for it to further industries and foreign export, without which, bereft of colonies as it is, Italy would have, perforce, to break from its limits, you will form your own judgment as to whether each of these facts taken separately would not of itself call for a strong navy.

TO STOP DEPRECIATION

"If this is so, is it not a logical sequence that when they are viewed collectively it should be firmly asserted that there is no nation holding interests on the Mediterranean whose interests are equal to and certainly not greater than ours?"

"Why is Italy considering an increase in its navy, and what is its goal?" I asked.

"The statement that Italy is considering a definite program of immediate development in the navy is not based on facts," the admiral answered. "The only truth in this regard is that the country is rather anxious regarding the rapid depreciation that will be suffered by the fleet during the next few years, owing to the increasing deterioration of units in service and the decreasing value of the battleships, which are models long out of date, as regards tonnage, and the caliber of the discarded ships built during the war, and finally on account of the restricted program of new construction allowed by a scanty naval budget, which is not sufficient for the replacement of the units which must be laid aside.

"Our budget for the navy, exclusive of the sundry services outside the field of military activities, does not reach the sum of $30,000,000. This amount must cover all coastal services. Without seeking a further comparison, you should only look at the budget of the German Navy, which, notwithstanding the restrictions imposed on its armaments, amounts to more than $40,000,000.

"You can see for yourself that it is impossible for us, with the budget assigned to the navy, to dispose of a fleet important enough to correspond adequately with those bare needs recognized at the Washington conference, as those of a power with the degree of importance of France, for instance.

"It is evident that this state of things can only be intermediary; that is, one of waiting. When a need of a real nature asserts itself

It never fails to impose a call. Italy will recover its rank as a potent naval power in the Mediterranean." (Copyright, 1925, by the Chicago Tribune.)

AMENDOLA, BEATEN BY FASCISTS, DYING—MUSSOLINI ACCUSED BY FORA OF INSPIRING ATTACK ON DEPUTY IN JULY, 1925—WAS FLEEING FROM A MOB—MOTORISTS AMBUSHED HIM AFTER TROOPS DEPARTED
[From the World's Bureau. Special cable to the World]

PARIS, April 5.—Deputy Giovanni Amendola, leader of the Italian Constitutional Party, who was attacked by Fascisti at the watering place of Montecatini last summer, is reported from Rome to be dying as a result of his injuries.

Anti-Fascisti repeatedly have accused Premier Mussolini of marking Amendola for suppression.

AMENDOLA LED AVENTINE OPPOSITION AGAINST MUSSOLINI'S FASCISTI

The attack on Deputy Amendola, inflicting injuries from which he has never recovered, occurred the night of July 20, 1925. It was the second time he had been beaten; the first having been shortly before the murder of the socialist deputy Matteotti. It was charged the men who killed Matteotti had organized the attack on Amendola.

Amendola was the leader of the Aventine opposition which was boycotting the Chamber of Deputies with its Fascist majority. He had been Minister of War in the Facta cabinet, which held office just before the Fascist revolution.

Last July he went to Montecatini for the cure. According to the official account of the incident, a large crowd, learning of his presence, stormed his hotel and was held off by carabinieri until Amendola could escape to his room. The mob could not be dispersed, but Fascist leaders persuaded them to allow Amendola to leave town in peace.

Accompanied by a truck load of troops, he started by automobile for Pistola. After escorting him through the Montecatini crowd, the troops left and the deputy drove on alone with his chauffeur and secretary.

At a lonely point on the road their car was forced to stop by two other machines blocking the way. As they slowed down a dozen or more men leaped from behind the hedge, clubbed Amendola severely, and escaped. He was brought back to Rome and was in the hospital for several weeks.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I intend to take no more than a moment of the time of the Senate to reply briefly to the remarks that have been made by the Senator from Montana touching the effect of the existing tariff rates and suggesting that lower rates ought to be established. Let me call the attention of the Senate to some of the facts as they exist. For instance, let me take our exports to Italy first, and then I shall call attention to our imports from Italy.

During the period of 1910 to 1914 we exported sixty-six million per year. In 1924 under the existing law we exported one hundred and eighty-seven million. For 1925 the value was $205,000,000. Those were our exports. From 1910 to 1914 the average of our imports from Italy were $51,000,000. Then followed the war. Coming down to 1924, under the existing tariff act we find that we imported $75,000,000, and for the year 1925 $102,000,000. In other words, we exported in 1925 in value twice as much as we imported. The imports in value in 1924 as compared with the 1910 and 1914 average were $102,000,000 as against $66,000,000.

The Senator may say what he will as to the result of our tariff act upon Italy, but the only falling off of any of the 10 principal commodities that we import occurs in the quantity of lemons. I think the Record will show that we had some Democratic votes for the duty on lemons. I remember that the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] pleaded here on the floor of the Senate that it was necessary to increase the duty, and the Senators from California also insisted that if we were going to maintain that great industry in the United States, an industry of California and the South, the one-half cent on bulk lemons never would do it. The rate was increased. The result, of course, has been that Florida and California have largely furnished the lemons to the United States instead of Italy furnishing them. Italy, however, is still shipping them in bulk.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course the Senator helped the Senator from California and the Senator from Florida in that matter?

Mr. SMOOT. I did, and very gladly did so.

Mr. HARRISON. What was the increase on lemons in that act?

Mr. SMOOT. I will tell the Senator exactly what it was. Under the Underwood-Simmons law the duty on lemons in packages of not over 1½ cubic feet is 18 cents per package; 1¼ to 2¼ cubic feet, 35 cents per package; 2½ to 5 cubic feet, 70 cents per package; over 5 cubic feet or in bulk, one-half cent per pound. Those were the rates under the act of October 3, 1913.

Under the act of 1922 the classifications as to the cubic feet were eliminated and a duty of 2 cents a pound imposed on lemons.

Mr. HARRISON. It was an increase in percentages of about what, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. SMOOT. I should judge, taking it all in all, that it would be about 99 per cent.

Mr. HARRISON. That is the least fraction under a 100 per cent increase?

Mr. SMOOT. That is true. Not only that, I will say to the Senator, but it was shown by the Senator from California and the Senator from Florida that without that increase the industry could not exist in the United States.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask what quantity of silk has heretofore been imported from Italy?

Mr. SMOOT. The quantity imported from Italy in 1912 was 2,058,000 pounds.

Mr. HARRISON. What was the value of that silk?

Mr. SMOOT. And in 1925 the importation was 1,929,000 pounds.

Mr. HARRISON. What character of silk does that include?

Mr. SMOOT. That is raw silk.

Mr. HARRISON. Has the Senator the figures as to silk apparel or goods made out of silk?

Mr. SMOOT. That is not one of the principal commodities imported from Italy.

Mr. HARRISON. That is one of the commodities imported.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall have to add up the figures, and will do so in just a moment.

The raw silk imported from Italy for 1925 was valued at $12,120,815 and in 1924 it was valued at $7,320,670.

Mr. HARRISON. So that there was an increase of about $5,000,000 in 1925 over 1924. The situation is improving in Italy.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the situation is improving in the United States.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator says the situation is improving in the United States. The figures quoted by the Senator from Utah show that we imported $5,000,000 worth more of silk in 1925 than in 1924, as I understand.

Mr. SMOOT. That is correct; that is what I said.

In spun silk we imported from Italy in 1924 $205,810 worth and in 1925 we imported $620,599 worth. Of silk fabrics we imported from Italy in 1924 $342,515 worth and in 1925 we imported $345,017 worth.

Mr. HARRISON. What were the figures as to the importations for 1912 and 1913?

Mr. SMOOT. I have those figures only as to raw silk; I have not the figures as to the other varieties. I will assure the Senator from Mississippi, however, that they were very much less during the years he has mentioned, because at that particular time conditions were not very prosperous in the United States. We had in 1913 and 1914 a Democratic tariff, as the Senator from Mississippi knows.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; and the people were afraid of a Republican administration coming in. May I ask the Senator what was the increase in the tariff on raw silk and on silk fabrics in the act of 1922?

Mr. SMOOT. Raw silk was free in that act, and it always has been free.

Mr. HARRISON. What was the tariff on silk products?

Mr. SMOOT. On silk products I think it was 45 per cent.

Mr. HARRISON. That is an increase.

Mr. SMOOT. Silk products were never imported free of duty.

Mr. HARRISON. What was the increase?

Mr. SMOOT. I think that the tariff on silk products was 45 per cent under the Democratic administration and 45 per cent under the Republican tariff; that is, on silk-woven goods.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator states there was no increase in the tariff in the McCumber bill on silk or silk goods.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the tariff was the same under both bills, though I have not the act here.

Mr. HARRISON. Is the Senator from Utah sure about that?

Mr. SMOOT. I rather think that is true; there might have been a small increase.

Mr. HARRISON. I think just the contrary. That is why I am asking the Senator from Utah the question.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Mississippi remembers when the Democratic tariff bill was under consideration that we had a Democratic Senator from New Jersey, and the Senator from Mississippi remembers, does he not, that that Senator from

New Jersey always took a great deal of interest in the duties on silk.

Mr. HARRISON. Just before we enacted the McCumber tariff bill we had a Republican Senator from New Jersey and we have a Democratic Senator now.

Mr. SMOOT. That sometimes happens.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. And vice versa. It happens oftener, of course, that a Democratic Senator gives way to a Republican Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. Well, there will be a striking exception as the result of the coming elections in November.

Mr. SMOOT. I prefer to take somebody else's opinion as to that, because I have heard the Senator from Mississippi express himself to that effect so often that he actually believes that what he states before each election will happen.

Mr. HARRISON. I know it ought to happen.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Mississippi actually believes it will happen, and he prophesies it, but it seldom comes true.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Utah also believes it, does he not?

Mr. SMOOT. Only once in a while some local situation brings that about; that is all, Mr. President. It is not because there is really a change of sentiment amongst the people.

Mr. BORAH. If they shall fall in any other way, the Republicans will seat a Democrat when he gets here.

Mr. SMOOT. The Republicans will seat him if he is entitled to have the seat, and if he is not so entitled we will not seat him.

Mr. HARRISON. We will never have the assistance of the Senator from Utah in seating a Democrat when he ought to be seated.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator voted the other day to seat a Democrat.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Utah did?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I misspoke myself.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood the Senator from Utah was going to vote that way, but when he voted he did not vote that way.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Mississippi is always "understanding." He is the most prolific Senator in this body for always "understanding" things, but they never happen.

Mr. HARRISON. I had hoped that the Senator from Utah would vote right but he did not.

Mr. SMOOT. The trouble is that the Senator from Mississippi always "understands" it to be the way he wants it to be; not the way the facts are, but the way he thinks he would like to have them; and it is really a pleasure to follow the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Utah is trying to get away from the question I asked him.

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all.

Mr. HARRISON. But I am not going to permit him to do it. I asked the Senator what increase there was in the tariff on silk goods under the McCumber tariff bill.

Mr. SMOOT. To tell the truth, I have not the figures here. I could obtain them; but I really do not believe there was any increase, but slight, if any.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, if the Senator can not answer the question, very well.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Unless the Senator from Utah is a very great expert he can not answer the question after he reads the paragraph in the act of 1922. I have it here before me, and, with the permission of the Senator from Utah, I should like to read it.

Mr. SMOOT. I have sent for a copy of the act.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have it right before me and have it marked. Will the Senator yield to me so that I may read it?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Paragraph 1201 reads as follows:

PAB. 1201. Silk partially manufactured, including total or partial degumming other than in the reeling process, from raw silk, waste silk, or cocoons, or silk and artificial silk, and silk nolls exceeding 2 inches in length; all the foregoing not twisted or spun, 35 per cent ad valorem.

PAB. 1202. Spun silk or schappe silk yarn, or yarn of silk and artificial silk, and roving, in skeins, cops, or warps, if not bleached, dyed, colored, or advanced beyond the condition of singles by grouping or twisting two or more yarns together, on all numbers up to and including number 205, 45 cents per pound, and in addition thereto ten one-hundredths of 1 cent per number per pound; exceeding number 205, 45 cents per pound, and in addition thereto fifteen one-hundredths of 1 cent per number per pound; if advanced beyond the condition of singles by grouping or twisting two or more yarns together, the specific rate on the single yarn, and in addition thereto 5 cents per pound cumulative; if bleached, dyed, or colored, the specific rate on unbleached yarn, and in addition thereto 10 cents per pound cumulative: Provided, That any of the foregoing on bobbins, spools, or beams shall pay the foregoing specific rates, according to the character of the yarn or roving, and in addition thereto 10 cents per pound: Provided further, That none of the foregoing single yarn or roving shall pay a less rate of duty than 40 per cent ad valorem: And provided further, That none of the foregoing two or more ply yarns shall pay a less rate of duty than 45 per cent ad valorem. In assessing duty on all spun silk or schappe silk yarn, or yarn of silk and artificial silk and roving, the number indicating the size of the yarn or roving shall be determined by the number of kilometers that weigh 1 kilogram, and shall in all cases refer to the size of the singles: And provided further, That in no case shall the duty be assessed on a less number of yards than is marked on the skeins, bobbins, cops, spools, or beams.

Now I trust that the Senator from Mississippi has the information which he desires, and I give the Senator from Utah the rest of the afternoon to tell us what it means. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is not a word in paragraph 1202 but has a meaning.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; "a meaning all its own."

Mr. SMOOT. Every word in it is absolutely necessary in order to cover the importation of different sizes and kinds of silk. The wording of that paragraph is just as necessary as the wording of any paragraph there is in the whole act.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Will the Senator tell us now just what is the duty on silk?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I can tell the Senator what the duty on any one size of silk is; but the duty varies, depending on whether it is fine-drawn silk or a coarser silk, just as the duties upon woolen yarns change with the size.

I will say to the Senator from Mississippi, however, that that has nothing to do with silk-woven fabrics. The duties on those commodities are in entirely different paragraphs.

The next paragraph in the tariff act covers thrown silk, and the one following that covers sewing silk, twist, floss, and silk threads or yarns, and the succeeding one covers woven fabrics.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the Senator find that the increases in the McCumber law range from 60 to 90 per cent over the prior law?

Mr. SMOOT. Not on silk goods.

Mr. HARRISON. On silk fabrics and wearing apparel?

Mr. SMOOT. No; paragraph 1205 reads:

Woven fabrics in the piece, composed wholly or in chief value of silk, not specially provided for, 55 per cent ad valorem.

In the Underwood-Simmons bill the duty was 45 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it would be interesting, though incomprehensible, to read paragraph 1213, which also relates to the tariff on silk. May I read it?

Mr. SMOOT. That is about the same as the other paragraph, but covers artificial silk instead of the regular raw silk. One is made from cellulose, while the other is produced by a worm. That made from the cellulose, I will say to the Senator, is artificial silk, while that made by the worm is the real silk.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Paragraph 1213 is comparatively simple.

Mr. SMOOT. It is about the same as the other paragraph.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is nothing like so difficult as the paragraph of which the Senator from Utah has just given such a lucid explanation. Paragraph 1213 reads as follows:

Artificial silk waste, 10 per cent ad valorem; artificial silk waste, not further advanced than silver or roving, 20 cents per pound, but not less than 25 per cent ad valorem; yarns made from artificial silk waste, if singles, 25 cents per pound; if advanced beyond the condition of singles by grouping or twisting two or more yarns together, 30 cents per pound; yarns, threads, and filaments of artificial or imitation silk or of artificial or imitation horsehair, by whatever name known and by whatever process made, if singles, 45 cents per pound; if advanced beyond the condition of singles by grouping or twisting two or more yarns together, 50 cents per pound; products of cellulose, not compounded, whether known as visc, cellophane, or by any other name, such as are ordinarily used in braiding or weaving and in imitation of silk, straw, or similar substances, 55 cents per pound; but none of the foregoing yarns, threads, or filaments, or products of cellulose, shall pay a less rate of duty than 45 per cent ad valorem. Knit goods, ribbons, and other fabrics and articles composed wholly or in chief value of any of the foregoing, 45 cents per pound and 60 per cent ad valorem.

Now, I should like to know what rate of duty that paragraph and paragraph 1202 carry, as compared with the rate of duty under the Simmons-Underwood tariff bill, if the Senator can tell us—what the increase in per cent ad valorem is.

Mr. SMOOT. I should judge about 12½ per cent increase.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. On both paragraphs?

Mr. SMOOT. On both paragraphs.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The increase is the same. Well, Mr. President, the Senator from Utah may be correct. I am absolutely powerless to question the accuracy of his statement.

Mr. SMOOT. On the woven fabrics—that is, a completed piece silk shipped into this country, generally from Japan, sometimes from Italy, but great quantities of it from Japan, carloads of it—the duty is 55 per cent ad valorem, while in the Underwood tariff bill it was 45 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator that I have the figures of a tariff expert, and he says that the increase on silk fabrics and wearing apparel in the McCumber bill over prior law was between 60 and 90 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. The expert, whoever he was, informed the Senator wrongly.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator says he does not know exactly. The expert says the increase is between 60 and 90 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. If I had made a statement here without being positive of it—if I had made it before I looked at the rate, and had made an error—I would have been reminded of it by the Senator not once but perhaps a hundred times during the discussion of a tariff bill; so I am very careful not to make mistakes.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator finds that he has made a mistake, I hope he will change the Record.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not made any mistake.

Mr. HARRISON. I say, if he finds that he has made a mistake, I hope he will change the Record.

Mr. SMOOT. It is here, Mr. President.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not desire to take up the time of the Senate for more than a few minutes, but I want to put in the Record an article on the present financial and industrial condition of Italy, as found in what is known as "Trade Winds." This is the February number, 1926. The article is written by a gentleman by the name of O. D. Foster.

The publication is issued by the Union Trust Co., of Cleveland. Mr. Foster says that he secured his information from the International Chamber of Commerce, the United States Department of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, the Credito Italiano, the American Chamber of Commerce for Italy at Milan, the Italy-American Society, the Italian Power Co., Senator E. Conti, and others. The article is replete with facts and figures, and I think any Senator who is at all interested in this subject will be deeply interested in reading this article.

I read a paragraph or two.

Mr. Foster begins his article by saying:

In many ways the war was a benefit to Italy rather than a detriment.

I assumed, Mr. President, when the writer began his article in this style, that he was going to discuss particularly the acquisition of territory, but I find that that item in the development of Italy and in the growth of Italy is omitted entirely, and he confines his remarks to the industrial and economic condition of Italy proper.

Mr. Foster goes on to say:

It is a conservative estimate to say that Italy has at least quadrupled the productive equipment she had before the war.

Speaking of the electric-power capacity of Italy, he says:

The amount of capital invested in Italian plants for the production of electric power before the war was 700,000,000 lire. At the present time approximately 4,500,000,000 lire is invested in this industry.

On page 21 the article says:

Italy has always been a leader in the automobile industry. As far back as 1920 she exported 11,320 motor lorries and automobiles valued at about 500,000,000 lire.

He proceeds to give the development of the industry up to the present time.

Upon page 23 he gives an account of the shipping industry in its present development and the textile industry, and I observe that Mr. Snowden, in his speech in the House of Commons the other day, said that the textile industry in Italy had become a real competitor of the textile industry of the British Empire.

There is also an account of Italy's cotton industry and her silk industry; and the article covers the entire industrial and financial and economic condition of Italy in a very comprehensive way.

I ask unanimous consent to have this article inserted in the Record, and I trust Senators will find time to look it over. I am satisfied that if these facts and figures are correct—and I have every reason to believe that they are, because the writer gives his authority—we will have difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that Italy can not pay more than 26 cents on the dollar of her indebtedness of $2,042,000,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the article will be printed in the Record.

The article is as follows:

[From Trade Winds for February, 1926]

ITALY HAS TAKEN NEW LIFE SINCE THE WAR

By O. D. Foster

[NOTE.—The writer wishes to extend credit for information secured from the International Chamber of Commerce, the United States Department of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, the Credito Italiano, American Chamber of Commerce for Italy at Milan, Italy-American Society, the Italian Power Co., Senator E. Conti, and others.]

In many ways the war was a benefit to Italy rather than a detriment. For years she had depended on the other countries, principally Germany, for coal, machinery, and mechanical information. With clever foresight Germany had not failed to take advantage of this situation. Together with the machinery and coal, she sent the men to man the machines. At the time the war broke out Italy's industries were heavily manned with German experts. It was a tie which compelled her to be an aily. With the opening of the war, dissensions arose, and when these men were called to arms and German resources were shut off, Italy was obliged to think for herself and to discover some other means of securing credits, materials, and mechanical equipment for which up to that time she had depended on her neighbors. Conditions compelled her to turn within herself, and it is a conservative estimate to say that Italy has at least quadrupled the productive equipment she had before the war.

Looking for a minute at Italy's principal handicaps it is easy to see why she has always been in such a difficult economic position. Italy's total reserves of coal are estimated at 340,000,000 tons, and her petroleum deposits are scarce. The only beds of coal and lignite of any real importance are those in Tuscany and Istria, and the most accessible deposits produce a lignite which has only one-fifth to one-third of the calorific value of soft coal. She is also seriously hampered by lack of raw materials. Literally until the last few years Italy has had nothing to sell that was of great importance. She needed coal for her locomotives and her power stations, ore to make iron and steel, and cotton for her looms. She had scanty mineral resources—for her subsoils are poor in minerals—she had large areas of swamps, and her country was mostly arid, rocky, and mountainous, therefore transportation was difficult. This in part accounted for the fact that even as recently as 1875 she had practically no railroad system.

Hampered with such scanty internal resources it was the irony of fate to give her such a large population, for Italy is actually burdened with man power. Each year there is an estimated increase of half a million in the population over and above the death toll. This offers the reason for her enormous exodus, for her people can not find sufficient work to make their living in their own country. Italy has lost millions of people by emigration in the last quarter of a century. One year alone emigration reached 900,000 persons. But this has left her even richer, for these emigrants are continually sending money back to those at home, the total amount often running as high as a billion gold lire a year. These sums have helped build her railroads, her bridges, and her manufacturing plants. Since our immigration laws became so strict, Italy has been put to it to know what to do with her people, her present population having reached 40,000,000.

With conditions at this pass and a race as emotional and colorful as the Italian, they naturally moved along the lines of least resistance and developed the artistic side of their temperament. Italy turned her resources to art and craftsmanship and became the art center of the world. In effect this was much the position in which she stood at the outbreak of the war.

With her coal supplies shut off Italy was virtually in a panic. Intensely patriotic, with a highly developed sense of kinship, she demanded to care for her own. Second only perhaps to Italy's taste for art is her flair for engineering. Under the emotional strain of war all the imagination and fervor of her temperament was turned to the development of her resources. Her engineers saw in her swiftly running rivers a vital source of potential power. They set about developing it. Back as far as 1892, through her power station at Tivoli, Italy had demonstrated her first example of long-distance power transmission for industrial purposes. Now, she went to work in earnest to develop her white coal, for Italy's population and army must be clothed and fed.

Even in 1911 Italy possessed 40,305 engineering shops which employed 274,570 workers and were equipped with 77,000 horsepower. Power for these shops was a big problem. Italy went to work. By 1920, 406 hydroelectric power stations with a capacity of over 300 horsepower each had been erected and 83 were in the course of construction. Most of these were in northern Italy. Their completion brought the total power available to 1,531,199 horsepower. This power was vitally necessary for Italy's development. All the capital which could be secured was put into hydroelectric development and the amount of electrical energy now being produced amounts to more than three times that generated before the war. It has doubled since 1920. In proportion to her size and population Italy leads the world in the utilization of hydroelectric energy. She has literally been forced to this development in order to compete with other nations industrially, for the cost of steam power in Italy is about four times that of electric power.

The amount of capital invested in Italian plants for the production of electric power before the war was 700,000,000 lire. At the present time approximately 4,500,000,000 lire is invested in this industry. Before the war the cost of electric power in the manufacturing industries amounted to 10 to 15 per cent of the cost of production, whereas to-day it has been reduced to an expense of only 6 to 7 per cent. The same may be said of the electricity used for illuminating purposes.

The supply of potential hydroelectric energy in Italy is equal to 40,000,000 tons of coal annually. Up to now her largest import of coal has been 11,000,000 tons a year. Water-power possibilities in Italy are roughly computed at 4,000,000 kilowatts. One and one-quarter million were in use in 1918 and an additional million are under construction for development. It is said that the saving in coal accomplished by the development of 1,000,000 kilowatts amounts to over 1,000,000,000 lire.

The northern section is the seat of the greatest manufacturing development, one reason being that here there is access through mountain passes to France, Switzerland, and Austria. Practically two-thirds of the power available lies in this section.

Piedmont, which is the heart of the great industrial section, includes the city of Turin, which is the seat of the Italian automobile and textile district and is the home of the Fiat factories. It also supports many other extensive manufacturing enterprises. In that vicinity the country to the north is alive with great textile mills, and its rich agricultural region to the south is likewise a network of electric distribution. Milan is the greatest industrial city in Italy and the center of a highly developed manufacturing region. Here are located some of Italy's most extensive cotton mills, notably those of Ernesto de Angeli. It is also the home of the Pirelli rubber plant, which supplies a great part of the rubber output of the country. Venice is also the center of a region with a population of 6,000,000, and while it is not as important industrially as Turin and Milan, it is a rich and valuable port which uses an immense amount of power. It also supports a number of smaller industries which use tremendous amounts of electricity. Bologna and Florence are likewise excellent power and light markets. Southern Italy is also coming to the front with some power plants of enormous voltage.

Among the largest groups of companies operating in the busy northern section may be mentioned the Piedmont Hydroelectric Co., operating in the Piedmont region; the Edison General Electric Co. and the Conti Co., operating in the Lombardy region; the Adamello General Electric Co., operating to the west of the Venetian region; the Adriatica Electricity Co., operating in the Venetian region; and the Negri Co., operating in the Genoa region. These companies all have extensive Alpine water-power developments, which complete a chain extending across the industrial northern section of Italy. They are linked together by high-voltage transmission lines and form what is virtually a superpower system.

Development in the southern section has been slower. Estimates of existing hydroelectric power place all the way from 70 per cent to 80 per cent in the northern section, according to the boundary lines drawn. Calabria and the islands have only about 11 per cent and the balance is distributed throughout the country. The most important of the southern plants are the hydroelectric works in Calabria and Sardinia, which, when completed, will be among the most important not only in Europe but in the world. The reservoir plants of the Sila in Calabria will have an installation of from 100,000 to 120,000 kilowatts and will produce 850,000,000 kilowatt-hours a year. Work on the artificial lakes in this Sila plateau is well under way. When completed they will supply a constant average of 160,000 horsepower. Five electric central stations will be fed by this hydroelectric power. The power scheme is completed by plans for irrigation, and storage dams will be built with irrigation canals and ditches, serving an area of 24,000 acres. The power will be supplied at low rates, and will be distributed by three main cable lines to Sicily, Apulia, and the Naples district, in addition to supplying the needs of the Calabian Provinces.

There is very little hydroelectric power in Sicily, but electric power will be carried from Calabria across the Straits of Messina when the Sila stations are in operation. At the moment Sicily is largely dependent on thermic plants. The modern plan for superpower is to centralize thermal production with electrical energy in large central stations situated as near as possible to coal fields or other fuel sources. During periods of drought it is often necessary to supplement hydroelectric power with thermal units, even in countries which are rich in water power.

Some idea of the volume of the demand for power and its future needs may be gathered from a study of just one of Italy's important industries and the source of its growth.

Italy has always been a leader in the automobile industry. As far back as 1920 she exported 11,320 motor lorries and automobiles, valued at about 500,000,000 lire. Since that time she has made enormous progress for very obvious reasons. Italy's mountainous nature makes the establishment of railroad communication difficult. Due to internal troubles and difficulties with her neighbors, Italy has many times located her cities on elevations which are difficult of access. This has not only developed cycling but also the motor industry and motor lorries are a very important part of the Italian freight movement. In fact, according to the most recent statistics obtainable (1924), there are only about 25,495 kilometers of railroad in the country, whereas there are 52,600 kilometers of motor-bus service. These busses and camions carry passengers, mail, and freight, and run on postal-line time-tables which are approved by the government. In their construction, vast amounts of power are necessary and this is largely supplied by hydroelectric energy.

To turn to the source of this wonderful "white coal." In the opinion of experts, the countless watercourses which rise in the Alps and in the Apennines represent not less than five and a half million horsepower of potential energy. Proportionate to size, this is about six times the water power possibilities of the United States. This flow varies in volume at different seasons. Alpine rivers are in flow during the summer when the snow and ice melt. At this time the Apennine rivers, dried by the summer sun, are at their lowest ebb. During the winter when Alpine rivers are at their lowest point because their glacier sources are frozen, the Apennine rivers are swollen by torrential rains. This condition has made advisable the creation of great mountain reservoirs, which balance the effect of high and low water not only in the same but in different regions. These reservoirs are built high in the mountains, near the glaciers which in themselves constitute a natural reservoir. Streams from several valleys are gathered into one great channel by means of tunnels and canals, which are often many miles in length.

Water accumulated in this fashion is then carried to the hydroelectric turbines. This high voltage is then transmitted to the centers of distribution. Due to the high heads, a small amount of water gives a large amount of energy. There are 59 of these artificial lakes, which impound 8,114,000,000 cubic feet of water. Seventeen others are under construction, with an estimated capacity of 28,313,000,000 cubic feet. Of these, the most important are in the Tiroso Mountains in Sardinia, in the Alpine Basin at Lys, above Palermo, and in the Sila Plateau in Calabria.

During the stress of war and since that period, Italy has almost completed the task of tying up her two great hydroelectric systems—that fed by the waters from the Alpine glaciers and that supplied by the rivers of the Apennines. Great high-tension feeder lines interconnect the several zones. But one gap exists; it is in central Italy. In this district Italy has large beds of peat and lignite. Their calorific content is too low to justify expensive transportation, but where power stations can be built at the pit's head they have important value. Steps are now under way to promote this development. The station of Torre del Lago, which utilized the peat of Lake Massaciuccoli is an example of what can be done in this use of peat, which is reduced to gas and this in turn burned in the steam boilers. Other plans are also under way for the use of peat and lignite in other centrals.

Closely linked with this huge plan for hydroelectric development is Italy's reclamation program. A large part of northern Italy consists of reclaimed plains which need draining and irrigation. The power used will be hydroelectric energy. The program for central and southern Italy is equally extensive. As now planned something like 2,000,000 acres will be reclaimed within the next six years by irrigation and drainage at an expenditure of some 7,000,000,000 lire. This includes the Pontine marshes adjacent to Rome. At the present time, Italy imports large quantities of wheat, corn, and maize, and it is hoped that if these marshes were reclaimed she may be self-supporting as to grain.

One of the by-products of hydroelectric power is water for irrigation. For instance, water from the station of the Sila will irrigate ten to fifteen thousand hectares in the plain of Cotrone, those of the Tiroso not less than 20,000 hectares of prairie land between Campidano and Oristano, and the water from the future stations of the Ceno and the Enza almost as much in Emilia.

Already Italy's productive capacity has been greatly increased through land reclamation. Because of her uneven surface and the torrential character of her rivers and courses, much of the country is of a marshy character. Also it has no great fertility, and only in certain sections are conditions really favorable to agriculture. Nevertheless, as you pass through Italy you will see the mountain sides terraced for vineyards, olive gardens, and extensive orchards. Italy has great variations in temperature, inasmuch as from north to south her surface varies from snow-capped mountains to tropical valleys. For this reason her agricultural products are varied, running all the way from citrus fruit to cotton plantations. When one takes into consideration her many handicaps, the ratio of her cultivated to her total area is actually very high. Of the 70,822,191 acres comprised within her pre-war frontiers, only 5,591,911 are still unproductive.

Development has been slower in southern than in northern Italy not only because the land is more marshy but also because of the lower initiative of the people of that section. They are gradually being stirred to action through the important drainage projects now under way in the southern provinces, especially in those of Caserta, Naples, and adjacent territory.

One of the most pretentious of the schemes is that of the reclamation of the Pontine marshes. This work is hydroelectric, agricultural, and sanitary. The hydroelectric work consists of the reclamation of the Piscinamo Basin, where beds will be made for the mountain torrents which now submerge the lowlands and a dam built to control the waters.

The reclamation of this land is of great economic importance and its practical results are demonstrated by the increased rates from taxation in the reclaimed districts, which shows the treasury interest at the rate of 70 per cent for money invested.

Due to this reclamation work and the increased consumption of commercial fertilizers, agriculture is making rapid advances. In 1924 it not only reached but passed the pre-war record. In 1923 a little less than 1,200,000 tons of these fertilizers were used, and this was materially increased in 1924. The consumption of nitrate fertilizer alone was increased by 50 per cent.

In this connection the Italian Government has come to a realization of the importance of securing home supplies of nitrogenous products, both for purposes of national advance and agriculture, and has encouraged the industry by lenient taxation. Heretofore Germany has led in this industry largely because Italy was so hampered for coal. It is estimated that the work can be carried on profitably wherever electric energy is available at a cost not exceeding 4 centimes per kilowatt hour. This has been made possible in many sections of Italy, and large plants are now working at full capacity at Terni. Others are under way in the Trentino and the Marche. Just as soon as the hydroelectric works in Calabria and Sardinia are completed cheap power will be available on a large scale for the production of synthetic nitrogen.

Many potentially profitable industries still remain undeveloped in Italy. One of them is her extensive potash deposits. She also has large quantities of aluminum and some oil. Another place where she is lacking is in the development of her dye industry. At the moment she sends most of her goods to France to be dyed. With Italy's marvelous sense of color this is distinctly a wasteful process. She also has some of the most wonderful port facilities in the world, most of which are much underdeveloped. In reality, she occupies a truly strategic position in the Mediterranean Basin as a trading center. Her ports put her in touch with the entire western world and are ports of call for all the big Atlantic liners. In view of the fact that she depends so much on her imports for raw materials it is strange that she has been so dilatory in port improvement.

Development of the port of Venice did not take place until after the war. Before 1914 the maximum capacity of this port was 3,000,000 tons a year. The new port, Porto Marghera, was opened to navigation in April of 1922. It is nearly 3 miles long and runs parallel to the Mestre Venice Bridge. It is in reality the outlet of a great system of inland navigation which is still in the course of construction and which will eventually connect Milan and a series of the leading industrial centers of Lombardy and Venetia with the sea.

There are 7 miles of wharves, and the harbor works cover an area of 2½ square miles. The entire system is equipped with the most modern machinery for loading and unloading. Connection is made by rail with the Mestre trunk line, and the annual traffic capacity is 10,000,000 tons. The port is also surrounded by two industrial zones, with a ship canal for purposes of navigation. The new pier will be the connecting link between the sea-borne traffic and that floating in from the whole valley of the Po. The harbor of Palermo is also under improvement, and projects are already under way for the development of southern Italian ports.

Italy had 139,000 tons of shipping under construction in 1924, as compared with 133,000 in 1918, 365,000 in 1920, and 145,000 in 1923. In the seven-year period from 1915 to 1921 the total net tonnage of steamers and motor boats was diminished by 677,000 tons through war losses; 120,000 by ordinary accidents, due in part to war conditions; 99,000 by demolition; and 38,000 by sale and other causes. To offset this loss it was augmented by 531,000 tons through the acquisition of the vessels of Venezia Giulia, by 535,000 through foreign purchase, 529,000 by new construction, and 98,000 by other causes such as salvage.

In addition to her large textile trade, Italy has always been known as the heart of the silk industry. In 1917 there were about 12,000 mechanical looms, and by 1924 they had reached 19,000. In addition, there are about 5,000 hand looms. The production of the silk-weaving mills amounts to about 1,000,000,000 lire, of which about two-thirds is exported.

Italy has about 40,000 workmen employed in silk weaving. Unemployment in these trades is practically nonexistent.

Her production of artificial silk is to-day one of the most flourishing and strongest of all her industries, and the 1924 output placed Italy fourth in world production. Reports are that the output this year will rank her next to the United States. The investment of 420,000,000 lire in 1922 has probably been doubled at the moment. This progress is doubtless due to Italy's realization that she could produce the soda, carbon sulphate, and sulphuric acid required in the process in her home market, and she is also looking forward to the home production of the cellulose. As an outgrowth of this industry knitting and weaving factories have sprung up rapidly and are growing in importance.

Italy's cotton industry is also very extensive. At the outbreak of the war she possessed 4,620,000 spindles and 130,000 looms for the manufacture of cotton. In a short time the number of spindles will amount to more than 4,700,000. Italy has 64½ per cent of the spindles installed in Europe and 2.9 per cent of those installed in the whole world. It has 6.8 per cent of the looms in Europe and 4.4 per cent of those in the world. Italy exports 7 per cent of the total exports of all industrial nations; imports eight-tenths per cent of the imports of manufactured cotton of the world; employs 5.6 per cent of the world's labor and 9 per cent of European labor, and her capital invested in the cotton industry is more than 2 per cent of the world's investment.

In common with the other countries, Italy needs to improve her transportation facilities. To use American measurement she has about 12,000 miles of railroads, of which 2,000 are narrow gauge. Of this total 10,180 miles are owned by the State and 2,600 by private companies. The rolling stock of the State consists of 6,281 steam locomotives, 290 electric locomotives, 11,008 passenger cars, and 150,221 freight cars.

With the constant increase in electric power a huge plan of electrification of the roads is already under way. The program includes the electrification of 2,500 miles of trunk lines, comprising some 6,250 miles of track. Much of this has already been completed. The railway system in Piedmont and Liguria alone shows something like 700 miles of track already electrified. Work is also nearing completion on the Genoa-Pisa-Spezia-Leghorn, on the Bologna-Florence, and Bologna-Faenza, and on the Sanpiero-Ovada lines. In the south the Benevento-Foggia line is being electrified on the direct current system. Lines to Trieste, Fiume, Bologna, and other sections are also under improvement. In many cases the power will be supplied by hydroelectric plants built by private corporations. The great mountain reservoirs in the Sila will supply the power for electrifying the Calabrian railroads, and that carried to Sicily will be used for electrification in that section.

As further evidence of the progress and growth of the railways, statistics show that after a long course of deficits which culminated for the financial year 1922-23 in a deficit of 1,500,000,000 lire, 1924-25 shows a surplus of 209,000,000 lire. The number of travelers carried and the gross tonnage for the first five months of 1925—latest statistics obtainable—show a steady increase from month to month. Service is being improved in every way.

The calculation of Italy's continually increasing resources—that of the tourist trade—must not be forgotten, for it is one of her greatest sources of income. In all probability the past year, holy year, will show the greatest tourist traffic which has ever crossed her borders. During the summer season her hotels were crowded to the limits of suffocation, her trains were almost intolerable, and the Lido had the most brilliant season of its existence. Estimates of the income can only be gauged at the moment by those of 1924, when the money left by foreigners in Italy amounted to 3,000,000,000 lire. To compare this with industry, the merchandise exported of largest value was silk. That year silk exports amounted to 1,250,000,000.

Turning to Italy's financial condition: She faced a very serious crisis in 1920, for, in addition to the obligations of the war, she had internal expenditures for which there were no budgetary provisions. One of these was the bread subsidies, which amounted to several milliards (billions) of lire. Later on these were abolished and the state tried to increase its income by the impost of fresh taxes.

Italy's reconstruction expenses were also very heavy, for from the Alps to the sea—following the course of the Piave for a depth of close to 8 miles on either side—practically all of the buildings were destroyed. Also at the time of the armistice the Government was providing for the needs of 2,500,000 persons in the liberated and redeemed Provinces and was obliged to make arrangements for the return of 503,494 refugees.

All these expenses were a terrific drain on the exchequer, for within a few months after the war 2,880 miles of road and 239 bridges had been repaired and 100 miles of railway track had been relaid. Many miles of embankment were rebuilt and structural repairs were carried out on 76,633 houses prior to rebuilding the 91,498 which were totally or partially destroyed. During the first seven months of 1919 engineers repaired 26,375 buildings and replaced over 237,500 doors and windows. From July, 1919, to July, 1921, structural repairs were made to more than 30,200 houses and 2,000 public buildings were rebuilt in the liberated Provinces. Agricultural reconstruction entailed the collection of live shells and bombs scattered over 238,000 acres of land, the removal of 2,000,000 miles of barbed wire, the filling of 1,192 miles of trenches, and the collection of tens of thousands of tons of metal waste. Italy also lost 320,000 head of cattle during the invasion, but these have been largely restored.

In addition to the war expenditure Italy faced other serious liabilities. Prices had risen, due to the depreciation of the currency and the reconstruction expenses in the invaded Provinces.

The railways were in a serious condition, due to inadequate yield, and the cessation of emigration during the war had depleted the sums sent home by emigrants. Since the new immigration law in 1924, which limited Italy's immigration to the United States first to 50,000 and later to 5,000 a year, this income has continued to decrease.

But since 1920 Italian finances have been on the mend. Budget deficits for the current year, July 1, 1924, to June 30, 1925, have decreased so materially that there is every reason to suppose that 1925-26 may even show a surplus. The domestic national debt was also reduced considerably in 1924, and in February, 1925, Italy's foreign commercial commitments were repaid in their entirety, leaving the interallied debts as her only foreign indebtedness.

The year 1924 was one of great prosperity for Italian commerce and industry, and the Italian people seem to have "found" themselves and coordinated their productive powers. Savings deposits in the important banks showed an increase of almost 3,000,000,000 lire, including the ordinary savings banks, which alone show an increase of 1,200,000,000 lire. Taking everything into consideration it is probably conservative to say that Italian savings in 1924 ranged from nine to ten billion, which is higher than the pre-war rate. The banking situation is in excellent condition and industrial institutions through their enormous increases in capital during 1924, in a large part, have canceled their indebtedness to the banks.

Many new companies are being formed in Italy, and capitalization has been increased. Four billion lire in new capital was invested in industrial pursuits in 1924. Exports also increased in 1924 over those of 1921 by 50 per cent, whereas imports remained about the same. Unfortunately imports have increased during the current year, due to the heavy purchases of wheat and sugar at prevailing high prices. Every effort is being made to rectify this condition. This year the harvest has been excellent, and it is officially estimated at 62,000,000 quintals of wheat, as against 46,000,000 in 1924. Strenuous efforts are being made to raise the amount of production per acre by careful seed selection and improved cultivation. In order to promote wheat growing the Minister of Finance has also reintroduced the duty on wheat and other cereals which were temporarily suspended at the outbreak of the war. The duty on wheat has been fixed at 7.50 gold lire per quintal. The means of reducing sugar imports are also under consideration.

All in all the situation in Italy is such as to cause congratulation and denotes very visible evidences of progress. Sometimes it takes a great catastrophe to rouse a nation to its best efforts. Italy is finding herself at last.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say that of course Italy's industries must be built up; and the only hope of her ever paying her indebtedness is based upon the increase of her industries and the belief that she can get to manufacturing and that she can get to exporting goods. That is the only hope we have that Italy will be able to pay what this settlement calls for, and the amount that she owes Great Britain and her internal indebtedness. She will have to improve her condition or she can not possibly meet these obligations.

Mr. BORAH. There is just as much difference between this article and the outlook for Italy which it gives us and the condition of Italy and the outlook of Italy as presented by the representatives of Italy, who called upon our debt commission, as if they were dealing with two different countries.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah in his opening speech stated that the aggregate national wealth of Italy was $22,000,000,000. The Senator from Idaho the other day in his speech quoted his authority for the statement that it was estimated at between $30,000,000,000 and $35,000,000,000. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah whether the Finance Committee of the Senate made a thorough investigation to enable it to ascertain and report to the Senate as to which of these statements as to Italy's national wealth was true—$22,000,000,000 or $30,000,000,000?

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Finance Committee did not.

Mr. SWANSON. Does the Senator mean that the Finance Committee of the Senate made no investigation at all as to the national wealth of Italy? Where did you get that figure?

Mr. SMOOT. We got it, as I said the other day to the Senator from Idaho, from figures that were furnished by our departments, the Commerce Department and others, and also from statements that were made by other foreign countries.

Mr. SWANSON. Then the Finance Committee made no investigation at all of these matters, but simply took what the commission found?

Mr. SMOOT. Of course the Ways and Means Committee of the House made an investigation; and not only that, but the commission did.

Mr. SWANSON. I read the report of the Ways and Means Committee. They simply seem to take the same authorities that were before the debt commission. That is all they took.

Mr. SMOOT. That authority was as good as any authority in the world, I think.

Mr. SWANSON. Who is the specific authority for the statement as to the $22,000,000,000? That is what I should like to know. Is it the Italian commissioners, or is it an impartial examiner?

Mr. SMOOT. I did not ask what particular agency in the Department of Commerce made that investigation. I can not say as to that. I did not ask who it was; but if the Senator wants to know, I think I can find out.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to know. The Senator from Idaho in his speech the other day quoted several splendid authorities that are impartial and tried to estimate the wealth of the nation with a view to stating the facts so that people could ascertain them without regard to the settlement or non-settlement of the debt.

Mr. SMOOT. I have seen the statement that was attributed to the Senator. If we go back before the war, it was agreed, I suppose, all through the world that the total value of Italy was somewhere about $15,000,000,000 or $16,000,000,000. Perhaps it fell a little below that. Then it went up higher than that, and it has been estimated, as I said, all the way up to $35,000,000,000; but I suppose that is calculated on the basis of adding to the former value of Italy the decreased value of money. I do not know what statement was made by the authorities.

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand, it is estimated that Germany is worth between $70,000,000,000 and $80,000,000,000, and the Dawes commission has made her pay $625,000,000 a year. The present Vice President was able to get that amount from Germany. On the basis of the same percentage of national wealth that was used in the case of Germany what ought Italy to pay?

Mr. SMOOT. Providing Germany can pay it.

Mr. SWANSON. But she agreed to pay it, and the effort is being made to collect it.

I want to treat Italy generously, but I do not want to do an act of folly and injustice to the American taxpayer. The Finance Committee of the Senate was authorized to investigate this matter. It will not report on a little claim of a thousand dollars without a thorough examination. It seems to me that it ought to have made a thorough investigation of this matter and ascertained the facts. Instead of taking a report made by somebody else, we ought to have what it says, as a committee, the national wealth of Italy is.

Mr. SMOOT. I have heard the Senator say that before.

Mr. SWANSON. I want to reiterate it. It did not seem to make any impression then.

Mr. SMOOT. No; not at all.

Mr. SWANSON. That is what the committees of the Senate are organized for.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say that the commission made as thorough an examination as it was possible to make of this debt and of all the other debts that have been reported to the Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. But the commission was organized to present to the Congress its judgment as to what is right. The Congress then appoints a committee to examine the matter. Whenever a department makes a recommendation, it is sent to a committee to ascertain the facts. I want to deal with Italy generously. I think Italy ought to be dealt with generously. I want to deal with every nation generously; but I should like to have a committee give me some facts, after thorough investigation, to justify me in acting.

Mr. SMOOT. Why does not the Senator come right out and say that he wants to defeat this measure if he can do it indirectly?

Mr. SWANSON. I do want to defeat it if it is not just and proper for the American taxpayer. Why does not the Senator from Utah come out and say that he is for it and that he does not want any examination because it might defeat it? Why does not the Senator come out and say: "I object to an investigation; I object to light on the subject, because if I should obtain that the settlement might be defeated in the Senate?"

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Utah has already stated why he thinks the settlement ought to be agreed to. Now, of course, it is in the hands of the Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. Why did not the whole committee of 17 members investigate it and report in their judgment as a committee what they think ought to be done after investigation? That is what worries me about this case.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, the committee may have been misled by the fact that very able Republicans and very able Democrats who did make a thorough investigation agreed on the accuracy of all the statements that have been given here in the Record; and we believed that when that committee, specially qualified for the task, had employed their experts to check up on all these statements and had made independent recommendations, and had agreed unanimously, Republicans and Democrats, we might safely assume that the facts as they stated them to us were correct.

Mr. SWANSON. Then the committee did exactly what the Senate refused to do. In other words, the committee left it to this commission to settle at what they pleased.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Not at all.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senate refused to give them that authority. The Senate required the commission to report to Congress. When they reported to Congress it was for Congress to investigate the matter. Congress appointed a committee to conduct an investigation, and the committee simply took what the commission said and O. K'd it, which would have resulted in permitting them to settle a debt without investigation.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. But the trouble with the Senator is that he shifts his ground without stopping in between to give me a chance to answer the first question.

Mr. SWANSON. I do not shift at all. The Senator shifts. I said that we appoint this commission and give them instructions how to settle this debt. They do not see fit to follow those instructions. The next thing we know they negotiate a settlement and report it to the Senate. The Senate then has that settlement up for examination to see whether or not it ought to be ratified. Now, as I understand, the Finance Committee has the report of the commission referred to it, and without examining it or ascertaining anything except what the commission itself said it makes a report indorsing and approving the findings of the commission.

I would have confidence in the opinion of the Senator from Pennsylvania if he had examined into the matter; but why should I have any confidence in his opinion when he admits he has made no examination and simply reports what the commission reported? I could do that.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If that is what the Senator understands, I am glad he brought up the subject, because he misunderstands the facts. What we took for granted, under the report of the commission, was the fact as to the Italian capacity to pay; but the Finance Committee did scrutinize the report very carefully and sent back for information as to calculations of present values. The terms were made on the basis of capacity to pay.

Mr. SWANSON. I could have had somebody estimate what the present value was. That would have been easy. That required no information, simply some mathematical calculation. What I would like to know—

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. But the Senator will never know if he does not allow me to finish.

Mr. SWANSON. I will never know if the Senator made no examination.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Finance Committee, both Democrats and Republicans, did investigate the bargain made with Italy. What we took the word of the Debt Commission on was the financial condition of Italy. We did not send over to count the number of cattle they had per thousand inhabitants. We did not send over to count the tons of coal in their pitiful little coal pits, because this commission, which had experts and was in a position to examine into those things, and had full leisure, had agreed on the facts. So all of us, Republicans and Democrats, accepted those hypotheses as correct.

Mr. SWANSON. Do I understand that the Democratic members of the Finance Committee accepted the estimate this commission made as to the aggregate national wealth of Italy?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not remember that that question was specifically raised, but I did not hear the findings of the commission as to the element of capacity to pay challenged by anybody on the Finance Committee, either Republican or Democrat. We did discuss at great length the terms of the bargain made with Italy, and the Democratic members and the Republican members all reserved the right to criticize it on the floor of the Senate if further reflection seemed to warrant their doing so.

Mr. SWANSON. I would like to have the Senator answer this question: What was the authority for the statement that the aggregate wealth of Italy was $22,000,000,000 and only that?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not know; but I can say—

Mr. SWANSON. Can the Senator tell me who does know? I want to vote intelligently on this matter. The Senator, as a member of the committee, was authorized to get that information for me.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Nobody knows where any figure was obtained as to any country, but in every land there are statisticians at work trying to determine those figures for a variety of purposes.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator from Idaho quoted from some four or five reputable sources that it was $30,000,000,000.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not know what those reputable sources were.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, let me make a suggestion that if the advocates of this bill will find any publication or any authority put out by a statistician that places it below $30,000,000,000 I will be perfectly willing to consider it. Take the economists of London, take the World Almanac, take the figures gotten up in that way, and you find they give it up to as high as $35,000,000,000. Those people make their investigations; they put out their publications year after year; the world comes to regard them as accurate and reliable; and it is the only information we really have. Strangely enough, the figures which the same publications give as to the national wealth of Germany, and the national wealth of Belgium, as to the national wealth of the United States, are accepted, and I do not know why we should question their figures as to the national wealth of Italy.

Mr. SWANSON. What does the Statesmen's Year Book give as the national wealth of Italy at present?

Mr. BORAH. I would not be sure as to the different publications. Some of them vary, making it thirty-three billion or thirty-five billion; but some go up as high as $35,000,000,000.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Of course, those things are necessarily estimated, as they are for this country or for any other country. With that we are not so vitally concerned as we are with the productive capacity of the country and the income of the country. We know what the income is, because Italy taxes her incomes just as we do, and if the Senator will just take this one fact home with him and nurse it, I think it will grow to be a very large and lusty fellow; that is, that if Italy had adopted exactly the same income tax law that we had in effect last year, the yield to her would have been only 1 per cent of what the yield was under her income tax law, because practically every income in Italy is under $1,000 a year. She taxes her incomes at rates that would not be suffered here for a moment. If she adopted our percentages and applied them to her citizens' incomes, her yield would be only 1 per cent of what it is.

Mr. SWANSON. I served many years on the Ways and Means Committee in the House, and I know it is very difficult to make any comparison between tax exactions in foreign countries and those in this country. We have Federal taxes and State taxes and local taxes. In foreign countries the central government collects money and distributes it for a great many purposes for which our State and municipal governments collect taxes. I have not yet seen a statement in connection with taxes in foreign countries that makes any satisfactory comparison between our custom and theirs. Our State governments levy taxes, our counties levy taxes, the municipal corporations inside the counties levy taxes. Consequently it is very difficult to make any comparison between the American system of taxation and any foreign system of taxation. The British Parliament imposes a great many local taxes, but the local taxes in Great Britain, I think, are not as large as the local taxes in America if we consider the State, the county, and the municipal taxes. A great many things which the Parliament does in England the States and the municipalities do here. In looking over the Italian system of taxation, I have seen no statement segregated so as to make possible a comparison.

Mr. SMOOT. That was not taken into consideration in making our report. But I will say to the Senator that there are many forms of taxation in foreign countries the same as those we have. We have taken into consideration only the national taxation and exactly how the national taxes are expended, and that we have reported to the Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. I have an idea, though I may be mistaken, that in Italy a great proportion of the national taxes is used for education and similar purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. No—

Mr. SWANSON. I do not know as to Italy, but other foreign governments have budgets which cover a great many of the things our State governments take care of.

Mr. SMOOT. France does not and Italy does not.

Mr. SWANSON. I have never seen a comparison between our Government and foreign governments which we could justify as a just comparison.

Mr. SMOOT. I can give the Senator a copy of Italy's budget—that is, the national budget—showing just exactly what the taxes are, their source, and how they are expended. I assure the Senator there is nothing in that that goes to the States or to any subdivision of a State.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Utah a question. I want the Senator to answer this: If the Senate, in its judgment, should see fit to vary or change this settlement, what would be the result?

Mr. SMOOT. The Italian Government has already approved the settlement, and in my opinion the result would be that we would not have any settlement. That is my opinion.

Mr. HOWELL. In other words, am I to understand it is the Senator's view that the Government of the United States must sign on the dotted line or Italy will refuse to pay?

Mr. SMOOT. That is not the way to put it. My opinion is that if the Government of the United States does not approve of this settlement it will be a long, long time before we have any settlement with Italy, and the money Italy would otherwise pay us Mussolini can use just as he pleases, to carry out the policies he has been criticized for here on this floor.

Mr. HOWELL obtained the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska permit me to ask the Senator from Utah a question?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I want the public buildings bill to go forward, I will say to the Senator, and I know that the Senator from Mississippi does not want that.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not want it in its present form. It may be that we can get together on that.

I want to ask the Senator if there is some pamphlet we can get so that we can study a comparison of the taxes paid by the taxpayer in Poland, in Belgium, in Czechoslovakia, in Lithuania, in Hungary, and in Italy, and also the taxable value of their lands, their capacity to pay, and all that information. Have the commission any of that information?

Mr. SMOOT. We have the comparisons that were furnished the commission by Italy and Belgium, and by the countries with which we have settled; not in one volume, however.

Mr. HARRISON. The commission does not have that information in parallel columns, so that we can compare those various items?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it never has been so arranged that I know of.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator from Mississippi does not want me to believe that the committee reported this bill, and recommended its passage without an investigation and without any data on the subject whatever?

Mr. HARRISON. The Committee on Finance had nothing on it.

Mr. SWANSON. Had nothing?

Mr. HARRISON. Had nothing. It was not discussed 30 minutes before the committee.

Mr. SWANSON. It did not make any investigation?

Mr. HARRISON. No investigation at all.

Mr. SWANSON. This $2,000,000,000 debt was handled in this way, without any investigation on the part of the committee? I am surprised that the Senator who is chairman of that committee did not have a full investigation.

Mr. HARRISON. That is the way he operated on us.

Mr. SWANSON. I have never seen a thousand dollar claim come before us but that the Senator did not insist that we ought to have a full examination, if there had not been one.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question. Inasmuch as he stated that the Finance Committee had received information before its action, I would like to know whether it came to any conclusion as to what the Italian ability to pay would be in the sixty-second year, in accordance with this agreement.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I can state the conclusion I reached, that is, that Italy has undertaken all that she can pay at that time by any possibility, and I think Italy is going to have to refund her obligations to us by internal borrowing in those last years of this agreement. I do not mean to refund them to us, but I think she is going to have to borrow in order to make those final payments that she will owe us.

Mr. HOWELL. That is merely a guess, is it not?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Of course it is. How could anybody talk about the sixty-second year from now without guessing?

Mr. HOWELL. Does the Senator think we ought to cancel this debt now, on a guess, 62 years in advance?

Mr. HARRISON. I think we ought to refund this debt now, or Italy may never be in shape to pay anything.

Mr. HOWELL. But Italy only pays us 1.1 per cent interest on this debt for 62 years, and then this proposed settlement provides that the debt of two billion one hundred and fifty million she owes us shall be canceled.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Precisely, and if we do not refund this debt, and refund it now, and if Italy does not balance her budget, she is not going to be able to pay us anything on the debt. Those are the two prerequisites to solvency of the Italian Government, and she can not be solvent until she has done both things. She must balance her budget. That is her affair, not ours. She must refund her debts to Great Britain and the United States, and until she does those things, she must continue in the embarrassment in which she is laboring to-day.

The other day the Senator suggested, and very plausibly, that we ought to reject this debt settlement and sit back with our present claim and take all we could get each year. That sounds like a good course, but if we stop to reflect, Italy, unless she refunds her foreign debt, can not establish her credit. She can not pay us much of anything until she has refunded and put herself on a sound basis.

Mr. HOWELL. I would ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if it is not a fact that what I have suggested with reference to Italy is exactly what the Dawes Commission has provided in the case of Germany.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No. The Dawes Commission has provided a specific amount to be paid each year by Germany with a provision that in case the transfer of exchange becomes impossible or too difficult the reparations shall be diminished for that year. That in substance is the arrangement.

Mr. HOWELL. But there is no provision for the cancellation of the $33,000,000,000 that Germany is to pay under the Versailles treaty.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The agreement of May, 1921, fixed German reparations at 132,000,000,000 gold marks, and that has been canceled, if the Senator likes that word, though I would say reduced to the present $33,000,000,000.

Mr. HOWELL. I am speaking in dollars. The reparations provided for under the Versailles treaty were in the neighborhood of $33,000,000,000.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is the same as 133,000,000,000 gold marks.

Mr. HOWELL. It was provided that Germany should pay according to her ability, but it was objected that to-day should be determined the ultimate amount that she is to pay. In other words, the $33,000,000,000 is not canceled, but the beneficiaries are merely to receive from Germany from year to year what she is able to pay. If the Dawes Commission provided any such settlement with Germany, why should not we have a similar settlement with Italy?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is exactly what we have done. The Dawes plan fixed the maximum that Germany should pay at $625,000,000, just as we are fixing the maximum for Italy to pay.

Mr. HOWELL. In how many years?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. In 62 years in this case.

Mr. HOWELL. I say for how many years in the case of the Dawes Commission plan?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. There is no definite limitation.

Mr. HOWELL. Absolutely. That is the point I am making. Why should we have a limitation of time in the Italian settlement?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. In the case of Germany the whole thing is contingent upon her future productive ability, with the safeguard clause that they have given her a fixed payment from year to year, and there is a general understanding that those payments by Germany will terminate in a certain time.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. Under this general plan they were not then commissioned to examine the ultimate payment. They had no authority except to fix an annual payment according to the capacity of Germany to pay.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. There is a general understanding that those payments will terminate in 37 years.

Mr. SWANSON. There has been no understanding and no agreement. France would not agree to the Dawes Commission plan except to fix the annual payments according to capacity to pay. The ultimate payments are left open. They had no commission to examine into that. One objection to the plan now before us is that there is an attempt to fix yearly payments and then to cancel the principal, which is not done under the Dawes plan.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Of course the Senator is merely using his turn of words when he says we cancel the principal. I say we get every cent of the principal back from Italy.

Mr. SWANSON. Let me ask the Senator this question: The commission provided so many payments in 62 years, commencing with $5,000,000 and then increasing at intervals. The Senator from Nebraska has estimated that if we take the $2,000,000,000 and charge 1.8 per cent interest on the principal that is conceded, the 1.8 per cent interest charged from the beginning to the end will absorb all of the payments made. He contends that is one of the most generous treatments ever accorded anybody. He said we borrowed money at 4½ per cent. We are not speaking of money we had in the bank, but we had to go out and borrow money at 4½ per cent. We loan it to this debtor for 62 years at 1.8 per cent interest, which would absorb all the payments the debtor proposes to make. Then the Senator from Nebraska said that at the end of 62 years we cancel the principal. Call it interest or principal, he holds that that is the effect. I would like to know whether that statement is true or not as between the Senator from Nebraska, who makes the estimates, and the Senator from Pennsylvania, who denies them.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I think it is clearly evident that the Senator from Virginia does not want the public buildings bill to be considered to-day.

Mr. SWANSON. The debt settlement is a bigger matter than the public buildings bill. If we get what is due us, we can put up a building in every village and city that needs it in America. I am trying to help put up buildings. I know that if this settlement is defeated and we can not arrange another settlement of some kind, and if we have to raise the amount by taxation, we are going to have difficulty in getting any public buildings.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator is certainly going to have difficulty in constructing public buildings with the nothing we will get if we do not ratify this settlement.

Mr. SWANSON. We are not so despondent as that. I have more confidence in the character and integrity and honesty and justice of Italy than the Senator has. I believe it is a reflection on Italy to say that she will borrow money and then say, "If you do not accept what I offer now, I will never pay anything." I think that is an unjust aspersion on Italy.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If the Senator thinks that I said any such thing as that, I am very glad to remember that I have never said it.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator said that Italy said, "If you do not take this, you will not get anything."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I said if we do not take this Italy will not be able to pay anything.

Mr. CARAWAY. Why does the Senator say that? Does paying her debt make her any richer?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I regret very much to seem to be blocking the public buildings bill that the Senator from Maine is so anxious to have considered.

Mr. HOWELL. I have the floor, Mr. President, and I want to assure the Senator from Pennsylvania that he is not blocking the public buildings bill. I am, incidentally!

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Then the Senator perhaps will permit me to answer the question of the Senator from Arkansas. I know the Senator will take it in the proper spirit. It is just exactly like a business man who has got into financial difficulties. He has two things to do: He has somehow to fix things with his creditors so he can pay them out of the earning power of his concern, and he has to fix things within his concern so there is a balance of earnings left each year—one an external problem and the other an internal problem.

Whether we talk about the Government of Italy or John Smith, the corner grocer, they all have to go through the same process when they get into financial trouble. Italy has made a brave start in balancing her budget. She has done it by the sternest kind of economy. But that is not enough. That is merely providing that the grocery is going to pay a little profit each year. She has to fix it up with the people who hold her notes, and that means Great Britain and the United States. She is not going to get out of the financial trouble she is in until she has done both things.

A railroad that gets into trouble retires its bond issue, and issues preferred stock in the place of the bonds or refunds its bonds, and we all think that is the proper thing to do in order that their fixed charges will not exceed the earning power of the property. That is in plain language just what Italy is trying to do each year—to get her fixed charges down within the limits of her earning power.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator started out by saying that if we did not accept this offer we would not get anything. A business concern can be put into the hands of a receiver and it is possible that its assets may be wasted in litigation; but that is not true with Italy. The thing I was curious to know was why the Senator said that if Italy does not pay this debt, she will be poor, but if she goes ahead and pays us she will have more money, as I understood from the Senator's statement.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That perhaps is an indirect way of saying what I meant. Of course, I do not mean to say that Italy is going to repudiate her promises if it is within her power to live up to them, but I do say that we have to help her get on her feet or it will not be in her power to keep those promises.

Mr. CARAWAY. But how do we help her more to get on her feet if she does not pay anything than if we let her pay something? Which will help her the most, for us not to get anything or for her to pay something?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The greatest help we could render would be to cancel the debt. But we are not going to permit that. We are here to represent America.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the Senator will pardon me, it has been said over and over again in the public print that Mr. Hoover is credited with having said it, and the Senator has said that if we do not accept their proposed settlement we will not get anything. Is that statement literally true, that we have to take this settlement or nothing?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not believe I would like to make it as strong as that.

Mr. CARAWAY. Did not the Senator make it that strong a moment ago in answering the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I would rather put it this way—

Mr. CARAWAY. Did not the Senator say that we had to take this settlement or nothing?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not think I put it as strong as that. If I did, here is what I meant. We will get nothing in the immediate future if we do not accept this settlement.

Mr. HOWELL. How much are we to get in the near future—$5,000,000 a year?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is more than we have been getting.

Mr. CARAWAY. By what authority does the Senator make that statement? Has he any information that the Senate and the country have not got?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No; but I have thought about it perhaps more than some others.

Mr. CARAWAY. What processes of reasoning did the Senator go through that make him think that unless we accept this settlement we will get nothing?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I have been watching the precedents that have been established in Europe. Let us take the case of Germany. It was utterly impossible for Germany to reestablish herself until she had done those two things—balance her budget and fund her debt.

Mr. CARAWAY. But there is nowhere in any of the German settlements a provision by which she is excused from paying her debts.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I beg the Senator's pardon. If he will think for a moment, he will remember that the amount Germany agreed to pay in the agreement of May, 1921, was 132,000,000,000 gold marks, which is $33,000,000,000.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am conscious of that.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If the Senator will take the maximum payment under the Dawes plan of $625,000,000 a year, the Senator will see instantly that it is less than 2 per cent on that obligation, and Germany never pays the principal.

Mr. HOWELL. She keeps on paying indefinitely in accordance with her ability to pay.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No; she will pay for 37 years.

Mr. HOWELL. Is there such an agreement that the payments are to end in 37 years?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. There is no such stipulation in the Dawes plan, but that was the general agreement.

Mr. HOWELL. But there is a stipulation in the Italian agreement that the payments shall cease at the end of 62 years.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. And Italy will be paying 25 years after Germany has quit.

Mr. CARAWAY. Here is what I am curious to know. Germany was entering into agreement to pay her former enemies, who were not presumed to have the same interest in her that they would have in a friendly nation. Italy is paying, or ought to be repaying, people who loaned her money when her political life was at stake and who loaned her money after the war to help reestablish herself. The papers have said that the present Government of Italy would very much welcome the defeat of the pending bill, because then Italy would regard herself as not morally obligated to pay us anything. The Senator has seen those statements?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes; I have.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the Senator believe the statements? Does he believe those are true statements?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I can imagine an Italian senator going to his constituents and saying to them, "We have offered the utmost farthing that we can pay, and they would not take it."

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the Senator think Italy could say morally, "I do not owe them anything because they would not take the pittance I offered them"?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I believe our case would be very much weakened if we declined to accept what our own commission said was the ultimate cent Italy could pay.

Mr. CARAWAY. But when we examine the report of the commission and the speeches in the other body of Congress, we realize that America never did get the inside information on which we are asked to act. We do not know, and I heard the Senator who is the chairman of the committee and who reported the bill say that he had no information. Under what theory do we say or does the commission say that this is all Italy could pay, when we are not given any information at all?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator was given a vast mass of information in the opening speech of the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot].

Mr. CARAWAY. The information that came to the committee in the House was confidential, if we may believe what the members of the committee said, and the Senator from Utah said he never saw it and never heard of it. Now, the information that the Senator from Utah gave was, with all due regard for the Senator from Utah—because I have the very highest respect for him and think he is one of the most useful men in the Senate—information could be obtained from the public print.

For instance, it was denied in the other branch of Congress, it was denied by the Secretary of the Treasury before the House committee, in effect, that Italy got anything out of the war. I dare say that she got property in Trieste alone, that was public property that belonged to Austria, that was worth at least $500,000,000 or possibly a billion dollars.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Oh, Mr. President—

Mr. CARAWAY. She got the only seaport of any importance possessed by the Kingdom of Austria-Hungary, an empire of 750,000 people, which was Trieste. All the shipping that country had, all of its public docks, all of its naval establishments were there. Italy got it all. Many of us have been in Trieste, and we know something about it. When it is said that Trieste and other territory were given to Italy merely to rectifying a boundary, of course we who happen to know about it are not expected to take that seriously.

One member of the commission said that the soil of Italy was barren. There is not a State in this Union that produces acre for acre with Italy. What I want to say is if that is all the information that committee had—and it doubtless was all it had, because that is the information it brought to both branches of Congress—we know it was so utterly misled by somebody that I do not think we could say we had any reliable information when we were asked to make this settlement.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Do I understand the Senator from Arkansas to say that, acre for acre, Italy's production is greater than that of any State in the Union?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, sir; Italy's cultivated lands are more productive than are those of Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If the Senator is now limiting his statement to Italy's cultivated lands, I will say yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Nothing is produced on uncultivated lands. I never presumed anybody thought that.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator's remark indicated that he thought so, but I know the Senator will agree with me—

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator from Pennsylvania is not much of a farmer or he would know that farmers do not farm the woods.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is what shocked me, because I am such a good farmer—

Mr. CARAWAY. What shocked the Senator was that he did not understand that fields were the places where crops are grown.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. What shocked me was that the Senator seemed to be stating that uncultivated lands grew crops in Italy. I do not know how it is in Arkansas, but that is not the case in Pennsylvania.

Mr. CARAWAY. There are some people who advise the farmer who think that fields are not used for anything except to play golf upon. But what are we coming to? I still want to get the Senator's version of what he meant to say. Does he believe that Italy can with honor wrap her mantle around her and say, "Since I offered America what I was willing to pay, if she does not accept it I do not owe her anything; I am not morally under any obligation to pay her"?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No. If the Senator will permit me to answer the question, I believe he will catch what I do mean. I say that any Italian statesman can go to his people and say, "We have offered to America what is admittedly the last cent we can pay."

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, but it is not.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Wait a moment.

Mr. CARAWAY. No one admitted that who ever took 10 minutes to find out what Italy's resources were. We were confronted here with a statement that Italy's entire wealth was only $22,000,000,000, but nobody ever found that information outside of some propaganda on the part of Italy.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator does not let me answer. The Italian statesman that he is talking about—

Mr. CARAWAY. I was not asking about an Italian statesman. I was asking the Senator whether or not Italy could refuse to pay, and then say, "I am entirely absolved from any liability?"

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Of course, if Italy speaks she has got to speak through some statesman.

Mr. CARAWAY. Italy has been speaking through the Senator from Pennsylvania so eloquently that I wanted to find out about it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If Italy had no other spokesman than myself she would never get an answer in edge-wise between the Senator's questions.

Mr. CARAWAY. She would never have any more enthusiastic spokesman.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I should like to answer the Senator's question.

Mr. CARAWAY. Very well.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Italy would say to us and she would say to her own people, "We have offered America every last cent we can pay; America's Debt Commission admits it; what more can we do?"

Mr. CARAWAY. Pay her debt.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. She would say, "We can not pay more than our capacity; it is useless to try to offer less; what more can we do?" And she could, with entire honor, sit back and say, "We have done our utmost."

Mr. CARAWAY. I want to get at just what the Senator thinks. He thinks that Italy, if we refuse to accept this settlement, may, without sacrifice of national honor, say, "We owe America nothing."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Oh, quite the contrary; I did not say that. She owes America every cent that she promised to pay when she gave us her notes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then, what does the Senator mean by saying that Italy could preserve her honor and say, "I shall pay nothing"?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I said that Italy could sit back and say that she had offered her utmost and America would not take it.

Mr. CARAWAY. And, therefore, that she will pay nothing?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Perhaps, as time goes on, if she should have revenues available, she would pay something on account; I do not know; and what is the good of my guessing?

Mr. CARAWAY. That is what I am curious to know. The Senator has been threatening us that if we do not accept this settlement we will get nothing. I was trying to find out the basis for that threat.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The basis for that threat is common sense; that if we do not help Italy to become stabilized, of course, she can not pay us or anybody else anything.

Mr. CARAWAY. That does not quite get back to the Senator's statement that she can honorably refuse to pay; but if her not paying is the reason now for her being so nearly destroyed, how is she going to be helped if we do not accept this settlement, and she says, "We will pay nothing"? How will she be helped if this debt now hanging over her is what is now destroying her?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Just as any corner grocer is impeded in his restoration to solvency by a debt hanging over him that is beyond his capacity to pay.

Mr. CARAWAY. This debt will be hanging over her until she pays it or we cancel it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Surely it will; but when she has refunded it to the point within her capacity to pay, then she can go ahead.

Mr. HOWELL. But suppose that the corner grocer said to his banker, "I repudiate my debt"; would that help him any?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It would not help him any. He would have to go into bankruptcy.

Mr. HOWELL. How will it help Italy?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Italy can not go into bankruptcy.

Mr. HOWELL. But, I ask, will it help Italy to repudiate her debt?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Italy has not repudiated her debt.

Mr. HOWELL. But suppose she should do so?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. She has not shown any signs of repudiating her debt.

Mr. HOWELL. To say, we will probably get nothing if we do not sign on the dotted line, as she has indicated, then, certainly it is equivalent to repudiation.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I did not say she would repudiate it or she would refuse to pay or that I expected her to do so; but I said I expected her to be unable to pay.

Mr. HOWELL. Very well. I want to ask another question. I have the floor, Mr. President, and I think I have been very patient. If the Senate, in its judgment, does not agree exactly with the Debt Commission, and suggests certain changes in the proposed settlement, does the Senator mean to say that would be sufficient justification for Italy to say that she could not pay and it was not in accord with her ability to pay?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Of course, I do not. Italy will pay us, I know, all that she can; but if we do not refund our debt and Great Britain does not refund her debt, Italy's ability to pay will be very small.

Mr. HOWELL. But has not Secretary Mellon testified before the House committee that no man can judge what would be Italy's ability to pay in the future?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No one can do better than estimate it.

Mr. HOWELL. Very well. Then, suppose the Senate should say, "We do not propose to make a definite settlement; we do not propose to limit the amount of money that we are to receive; we simply ask for a readjustment of the proposal. We do not ask you to pay any more necessarily than you are to pay annually under this agreement, but we refuse now to cancel this debt, as we do not know what your situation may be at the end of the period."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Then we would put Italy in the same position that the Allies put Germany when she had a huge, undetermined cloud of reparations hanging over her head.

Mr. CARAWAY. She is in the same condition yet.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No.

Mr. CARAWAY. There is no termination of Germany's obligation to pay.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Because of the undetermined reparation claims hanging over her head Germany was unable to borrow in the markets of the world until the Allies met and agreed to postpone their claims to the private loans that Germany was floating. That was essential to enable her to borrow money to continue her financing.

Mr. HOWELL. But, Mr. President, it is undeniable that Germany's reparation debt of $33,000,000,000 is not canceled, and nevertheless Germany is paying from year to year in accordance with her ability to pay. Why should we treat Italy differently?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If the Senator would look at it through the same glasses in each case, I think he would agree that we were not treating Italy differently from Germany. In both cases there is a clear limitation of the annual payments according to capacity to pay as estimated now. That is why the Dawes annuities are distinctly limited to $625,000,000.

Mr. HOWELL. Is there a definite limitation of the period during which Germany shall pay what she is able to pay?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No. So far as I know, it has not been limited as yet.

Mr. HOWELL. Very well. Then, why should we write such a limitation in the settlement with Italy?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Because there was not a definite limitation they had to postpone the lien of the reparations to the private debts in order to enable Germany to make her loans and get started on a stable basis. We do not want to do that with Italy. If we should keep the debt open, as the Senator suggests, against Italy, Italy could never float a private loan without first coming to us to postpone the lien of our claim. We do not want to be put in that position.

Mr. HOWELL. Italy already has floated a private loan of a hundred million dollars.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Based upon the agreement of the Debt Commission absolutely liquidating her debt. If we had left the other end of the period open, she never could have done it.

Mr. HOWELL. In other words, the bankers in New York were so sure that there was a majority in the Senate to ratify this Italian debt settlement that they loaned her the money immediately?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. They made the agreement on the faith of the unanimous settlement of the debt commission, which has been approved by an overwhelming vote in the House of Representatives, and which is going to be ratified by an overwhelming vote in the Senate when it comes to a vote on 4 o'clock Wednesday next.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the Senator has that information, why does he debate the question with so much ardor?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am only helping Senators to hold up the public buildings bill.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, it has been stated upon the floor—and my attention was challenged to a cartoon in the Washington Post of yesterday which implied the same thing—that unless we accepted what Italy has determined she can pay, we will get nothing. What does that mean? That means that for Italy's obligations to pay we have substituted the principle of ability to pay. If that is true, Italy says to-day, "I can not fulfill my present obligations," and, if, at any time in the future in connection with the new proposed obligations, she determines that she is unable to pay, she will repudiate that just as is charged she will repudiate now.

Mr. President, we have settled this debt with nothing but another promise to pay. Her first promise was to pay $2,150,000,000. Now she says, "I will promise to pay $538,000,000"; but there is no security; there is no guaranty. This settlement is merely a limitation upon how much we will get. If Italy is able to pay more, we will be estopped from demanding it because of this settlement. If Italy, in her opinion, can not pay as much, we will not get what she agrees to pay in this proposed settlement. Yet it is admitted here that under the Dawes plan Germany is to pay according to her ability to pay, but her debt is not canceled. She does not know when it will be canceled, if ever. Why, then, should we accord to Italy such preferential treatment, when in the case of Germany the settlement involved $33,000,000,000, and here it involves only $2,150,000,000?

I think there is scarcely a member of the Finance Committee who understood that this settlement meant the payment of 1.1 per cent interest for 62 years and cancellation of the principal. I do not believe they had analyzed the proposal that far. What we are here led to believe is that Italy has pronounced an ultimatum, "This or nothing!"

Mr. President, we are constantly charged in Europe with being worshipers of the dollar. This is a debt of honor. Are we to stamp that opinion of Americans as correct by accepting a few paltry dollars for this huge debt, because of a fear of repudiation by Italy—that is, complacently resign a birthright for fear of losing a mess of pottage. That is exactly what such action would mean.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. HOWELL. Certainly.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If the Senator's theory of the way to go about this thing is right, then Italy is to pay us each year as much as she can pay on the debt. Is that the idea?

Mr. HOWELL. No, Mr. President. So far as my theory has been stated upon this floor, it is this: Accept Italy's payments, if you will, but do not provide for the cancellation of this debt at the end of 62 years. The amount involved is only 1.1 per cent upon the principal. Why should we now to-day limit the American people to receiving but 1.1 per cent interest? If Italy is able to pay more, we should receive more, because if she is not able to pay the amounts proposed we will not get even 1.1 per cent.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Then, on the Senator's method of calculation, at the end of the 62-year period Italy would still owe us the whole principal, plus 3 per cent per year accumulated interest for 62 years? Is that right?

Mr. HOWELL. No, Mr. President; my proposition is that she shall pay us 1.1 per cent interest for 62 years, and then the debt is not canceled. Your proposition is that she shall pay us 1.1 per cent interest for 62 years, and then the debt is canceled. What I insist is that the Debt Commission can not claim that they will have exhausted Italy's capacity to pay at the end of 62 years, and that then she will be unable to pay another dollar. They certainly do not claim that. If that is true, why can not Italy pay us an equal amount in the sixty-third year and the sixty-fourth year, and the sixty-fifth year? Great Britain has had a debt hanging over her head since 1688, and at the close of the Napoleonic wars it was greater in proportion to her wealth than it is now, and yet she rose to be the greatest empire in the world.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Then the Senator would let this debt hang on into eternity?

Mr. HOWELL. I would let this debt hang on for the present, and let us determine at the end of 62 years whether Italy was able to pay us something more in the sixty-third year. I think that is no more than just to the American people.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. What would the Senator do next year, for example? To leave off the 62-year guessing, let us guess about next year. Suppose Italy comes along with $5,000,000 next year. Are we to debate here in the Senate as to whether she could have paid $6,000,000? Is that process to go on every year from now on into the dim future?

Mr. HOWELL. What I propose, because of what the commission has done, is this: The commission says that Italy is able to pay $5,000,000 next year, $5,000,000 the year after, $5,000,000 thereafter for three years, and then she is able to pay more in the sixth year. I will accept the commission's judgment respecting that matter, but I do not accept the commission's judgment that this debt should be canceled at the end of the sixty-second year.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Then the Senator is concerned not with what is to be paid during the next 62 years, but with what is going to happen 62 years from the date of this settlement—in 1987.

Mr. HOWELL. I have made up my mind that in the state of sentiment that seems to prevail here it is hopeless to obtain a readjustment of the annual payments, although Italy pays Great Britain $10,000,000 the first year and $24,000,000 the second year, and she never pays Great Britain less than about $21,000,000 during each of the 61 years, and the last year she pays Great Britain $10,000,000.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. And yet, if the Senator figures that settlement on the same basis that he is reiterating that ours must be figured on, Great Britain is getting during the 62 years only about eight-tenths of 1 per cent, and nothing on the principal. Is not that so?

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, Italy's debt to Great Britain was not comparable to our debt.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. But I asked the Senator about the calculation.

Mr. HOWELL. I am now giving you the facts respecting the Italian debt.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. But will not the Senator first tell us, please, whether that is not so—that their payments to Great Britain amount to about eight-tenths of 1 per cent for 62 years, and then the principal is canceled?

Mr. HOWELL. I will answer the Senator's question in due time, and I will answer it in this way:

On February 23, 1920, President Wilson received the following letter from Undersecretary of State Davis, who was in London:

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: With reference to my memorandum of February 21, inclosing a proposed reply to the Chancellor of the Exchequer regarding the cancellation of intergovernmental war loans, I desire to submit for your further information the following consideration:

Without any specific proof—

I should like to have Senators note this—

Without any specific proof, I have for some time suspected that the loans made by England to France and Italy have not the same standing as our loans to the Allies. I recall that Mr. Lloyd-George told me England could not afford to force those countries to pay her. Article XI of the pact of London states that—

"Italy shall receive a military contribution corresponding to her strength and sacrifices."

Mr. President, and here is a convincing bit of supporting evidence, the British Chancellor of the Exchequer, on the floor of the House of Commons just the other day, made this statement in reference to the settlement of Italy's debt due Great Britain:

I ought to say that the Cabinet, in leaving me a very wide discretion in these negotiations, directed me to have regard, among other things, to the whole question of our relationship with Italy, both before, during, and since the war, which, as you know, has been one of unbroken friendship and cordial cooperation in many fields. Also it must be remembered that there have been on various occasions tentative discussions with the Italian Government and other British Governments on the question of debt repayment, which, while they in no way legally tie our hands, found at any rate no counterpart in the relations between the United States and Italy. At the time of the proposed imminent entry into the war very considerable offers were made to Italy which carried with them, subject to numbers of conditions which have not been fulfilled, the principle of the virtual cancellation of the overwhelming bulk of the obligations; and although it was never argued by Italy that anything of a legal nature or of a definite and final nature had taken place, yet at the same time we have felt bound to consider what had happened in the intervening period, which found no parallel in Italian-American relations, as a factor which must reasonably be borne in mind.

Mr. President, Undersecretary of State Davis wrote President Wilson that he suspected that Italy's debt to Great Britain was on no such basis as our debt; and then, six years afterwards, the Chancellor of the Exchequer absolutely verifies and certifies to that fact upon the floor of the House of Commons.

Great Britain's debt was not comparable to our debt—I do not care anything about the figures—and yet Italy pays Great Britain more than she pays us. As a matter of fact, in the first 31 years Italy pays Great Britain over 50 per cent of what she is to pay her, and in the first 31 years she pays us only 26 per cent of what we are to receive; and yet, Mr. President, when the interest we are paying on the money that we borrowed to loan to Italy amounts to $91,000,000 a year, and she pays us only $5,000,000 a year for the first five years, and all her payments together are equivalent only to 62 equal annual installments of $24,300,000 a year, are we in order to get that $24,000,000 to humble ourselves and say to Italy: "We accept your ultimatum. We will take what you will give us. Now, please promise, and cross your heart, you will pay this?" Will that not be our attitude if we sign on the dotted line?

I think that the country could well forego this $24,000,000 and say: "We will not accept your ultimatum as to what you can pay or what you can not pay. The Senate of the United States is not bound by its attorneys, the commission that represented it, when it consulted with your representatives respecting this proposed settlement. The Senate of the United States intends to apply its judgment to this matter."

"The Senate of the United States accepts Mr. Mellon's statement that no man can tell at this time what Italy's ability to pay will be in the future, and therefore we do not propose to estop the American people from receiving what you are able to pay if you are willing to act justly and pay us what you are able to pay. We do not propose to oppress you. We want you to treat us as we treated you. For two years after the war we furnished you with money. It is a debt of honor."

Why, Mr. President, stop and think for a moment what repudiation means. In Europe, when a man sits down at a gambling table and incurs a debt the question as to ability to pay never enters into the question as to whether he shall pay. Under the code of Europe he must pay, even if it turns his family out in the street, or be banished from society. There is no greater gamble than war. Italy entered it after carefully considering the situation and making her arrangements. Then she came to us and said, "We need money to carry on our operations," and we furnished the money. When the war was over she said, "We need more money because of the condition of our people," and we furnished it. Now are we supinely to acquiesce in her attitude when she comes and tells us, as it is suggested she does, "This is our ultimatum; sign on this dotted line, or you get nothing?"

For the United States to acquiesce in any such attitude for a paltry $24,300,000 a year is unthinkable. I think it is time that we took high ground in reference to some of these matters.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If the Senator were the Debt Funding Commission, I gather from what he says that he would first tear up the refunding agreement that is now before the Senate. Will the Senator tell us what he would do next?

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I have stated to the Senator from Pennsylvania what my suggestion is in connection with this settlement, and I will go a little further after repeating myself. I would not cancel this debt of $2,150,000,000 62 years in advance. That is my first proposition.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am not asking the Senator what he would not do but what he would do. What message would the Senator send to Italy?

Mr. HOWELL. I will further answer the Senator as to what I would do. I would not insert in the agreement a provision whereby, if the bonds issued thereunder are held by Italian subjects, that they shall be taxable in Italy. That is one thing I would not do. I would insert in the agreement exactly what Great Britain insisted upon in her agreement. It is this:

The payments due under all bonds issued in accordance with this agreement shall be made without deduction for and shall be exempt from any and all taxes and other public dues, present or future, imposed by or under the authority of Italy, or any political or local taxing authority within Italy.

That is what I would put in this agreement instead of the corresponding provision we have.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator has not answered my question.

Mr. HOWELL. Just a moment. Of course I know the Senator does not like to have some one dictate as to how he shall answer a question, and I take the same position. But I want to call attention right here to this fact, that under our provision these bonds are not taxable in Italy only so long as they are in the hands of the United States, or in the hands of a corporation or individual not domiciled in Italy. Why should there be such a difference in favor of England as compared with the United States? There is another feature I would have changed in this agreement.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am not asking the Senator how he would change it. I am asking him this: Suppose the Senate turned down this settlement and the Senator were appointed our Debt Commission. How would he start negotiations with Italy, and what would he ask them to do?

Mr. HOWELL. I will afford the Senator another provision I would have in this agreement.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator would not have any agreement. It would all be torn up.

Mr. HOWELL. Well, in the agreement.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. How would the Senator ever get to an agreement?

Mr. CARAWAY. I trust the Senator would not get to an agreement by asserting to Italy, "You pay what you are willing to pay, and we will accept that, or you need not pay us anything." Would the Senator make that kind of an agreement?

Mr. HOWELL. I would not.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator would not come back and tell the American people, would he, that, "I have told a foreign country to say to us, 'You will have to accept this, or you must absolve us from owing you anything.' You can keep your honor and your cash, too." The Senator would not make that kind of an agreement, would he?

Mr. HOWELL. No. I believe we should handle this matter as a business proposition.

Mr. CARAWAY. And with a little regard for the American taxpayer.

Mr. HOWELL. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. And not be the apologist for a foreign country on the floor of the Senate against every assertion of American rights.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It sounds to me as if the Senator from Arkansas were apologizing for the Democratic members on the Debt Commission.

Mr. CARAWAY. No; the Democratic members on the Debt Commission did not do anything that I would have done; but they can apologize for themselves.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Everything the Senator has said sounds like an attack on them.

Mr. CARAWAY. Nobody is apologizing for the Democrats. The apology is for the Republicans, by the Republicans. They were in charge of the commission. They made the settlement. Unfortunately, some Democrats concurred in it. That did not make it right.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Has the Senator ever investigated to find out why his Democratic brethren did concur?

Mr. CARAWAY. I know just as much about that as the Senator is willing to tell us about this. He told us that the Italian Government could not have gotten a loan if they had not known what the Senate was going to do. I would like to know who told the Italian people what the Senate was going to do.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator did not say anything like that.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator—

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Not even resembling it.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator can not get out of it so quickly as that.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am not trying to get out of it. I am merely contradicting it. I never said that.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator said that Italy could not have borrowed unless she had known that the Senate was going to ratify this debt settlement.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I said she could not have borrowed unless the Debt Commission had concluded this agreement.

Mr. CARAWAY. No; the Senator went beyond that. He said unless this settlement was final. That is not his exact language, but that is the effect.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Not at all.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then the Senator did not mean what the words meant. That is what the Senator said in effect, that the reason Italy could borrow was because this settlement had been made.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Certainly, I said that.

Mr. CARAWAY. How did the bankers know it was going to be ratified?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Why does not the Senator, when he quotes me, quote the same thing twice in succession?

Mr. CARAWAY. I can not do that, because the Senator shifts his position.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not very often get a chance to answer the Senator's question—

Mr. CARAWAY. The answer is always different from the one the Senator made before.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. When I answer, the Senator does not listen.

Mr. CARAWAY. Why should I listen, because when the Senator makes an answer it is different. I heard three this afternoon.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I have made about 25, and the Senator has heard three. That is just about what I get when I talk to the Senator.

Mr. CARAWAY. They were all different.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I desire to make clear another provision that I would introduce into any settlement. Under the proposed settlement, provision is made that the bonds which are issued, all in large denominations, may be exchanged for bonds of small denominations payable to bearer. The idea is that these bonds might be sold by this Government on the market. It is provided that Italy will assist in listing these bonds on any exchanges the Secretary of the Treasury may indicate. But in connection with this provision, there is another provision which renders any such bonds utterly unsalable.

The bonds bear only one-eighth of 1 per cent interest for 10 years, one-quarter of 1 per cent interest for the next 10 years, one-half of 1 per cent interest for the next 10 years, and 1 per cent interest for the next 10 years, and then 2 per cent interest, I think, for the last 7 years, or something like that. Anybody knows such a bond could not be sold on any market. So that this wise provision is all surplusage—utterly useless under the circumstances.

What I would do is this—and I propose to offer an amendment to this effect—I would provide that such bond shall be issued in such denominations, maturities, and at such rate or rates of interest as the Treasury might dictate, provided that no annual payment shall be increased throughout this period. In other words, if we are to make this settlement, let us have some bonds we can market, and sell them. Let us sell them to Italian subjects if possible. Let us get rid of them. That is what should have been provided, and we ought to have a similar provision in every one of the other agreements.

It would be a happy solution if we could get rid of these bonds, float them elsewhere, and thus relieve our Treasury.

I did not intend to go into this matter at this time. However, I am glad to have had the opportunity to make plain that there are provisions of this proposed settlement that ought to be corrected, and which can be corrected, in the interest of the United States, even though we propose to accept but 1.1 per cent interest for 62 years, and then cancel this debt, an outrage upon the American people. In closing I wish to call attention to the fact that in the course of my remarks I have not insisted that it is my opinion that Italy has any intention of repudiation, whatever the Senate may do. I have great faith in the Italian people.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, a few days ago the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] made a very interesting address on the Italian debt settlement, in opposition to it, and he received a telegram from one Doctor Fama, of New York City, which was inserted in the RECORD on April 14, in which Doctor Fama said:

Five thousand Italian Americans at a mass meeting in New York City under the auspices of the Anti-Fascist League of North America wish to congratulate you on your attitude against Mussolini and fascism.

I ask now that there be inserted in the RECORD a letter from Count de Revel. He is the head of the Fascisti League of North America.

I also ask to have inserted a letter from Judge Freschi, a long-time member of the Court of Special Sessions of New York. These letters will explain away the idea that any Italians of high standing in New York City are in opposition to this settlement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York?

There being no objection, the communications were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FASCISTI LEAGUE OF NORTH AMERICA (INC.),
CENTRAL COUNCIL,
New York, April 16, 1926.

Hon. ROYAL S. COPELAND,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR COPELAND: The Fascist organization laws here require of its members loyalty to America, support of the American Constitution, protection of the family, upholding the idea of religious freedom and civil government, and the perpetuation of organized society.

The meeting to which Doctor Fama refers was held on April 13, 1926, at Manhattan Lyceum, and the speakers were Vacirca (socialist), Tresca (anarchist), Bellanca (communist), Allegra (communist), Sormenti (anarchist), Lupis (communist), and Fama.

Less than 2,000 persons were present; most of them were of the international red (radical) element, and most of whom were not Italians. Few Italians ever attend such meetings. Vacirca is in this country on leave as nonquota immigrant. His permit has been twice renewed, and he recently lost his citizenship in Italy. Lupis is in this country with a temporary, commercial certificate.

Very sincerely yours,

IGNAZIO THAON DE REVEL,
President.

HARDIN & HESS,
New York, April 17, 1926.

Mr. C. W. JURNAY,
Secretary to Hon. Royal S. Copeland,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. JURNAY: My information from an authoritative source is that the former member of the Italian Parliament, ex-Deputy Bergamo, is assisting the direction of an anti-Fascista (Il Corriere degli Italiani) newspaper, which directs the opposition to the Italian debt-settlement agreement.

Mr. Bergamo has issued a statement in which he says that the anti-Fascist forces have made Mussolini and the Italian Monarchy their political target and that the anti-Fascisti must stand for republicanism against Fascism and royalty, adding that the death of one is the destruction of the other. Bergamo further states that the King of Italy is an adventurer, without moral direction or sense.

It should be evident to all who read and understand that the blow is directed not so much at Mussolini as at the form of monarchical government, and it is not strange therefore that the meeting held in New York at the Manhattan Lyceum should have been addressed (outside of Doctor Fama) by a well-known group of socialists, communists, and anarchists.

Very sincerely yours,

JOHN J. FRESCHI.

Mr. McKellar. Mr. President, in this connection I desire to insert in the RECORD a telegram from the Italian Baptist Mission of Uniontown, Pa., on the same subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNIONTOWN, PA., April 18, 1926.

Hon. McKellar,
United States Senator of Tennessee,
Washington, D. C.:

Two hundred and fifty prominent law-abiding citizens, Italian extraction, of western Pennsylvania, assemble to-day at Uniontown, protest against the recent statement that all the Italians in Pennsylvania State are followers of Fascism. This is an erroneous statement, because we as a part of such residents are earnestly urging that Fascism plague be fought to the limit because it is a dangerous enemy of humanity and suffocator of all principles of liberty and democracy. Assuring you that Italian feeling in general be against Fascism, we congratulate for attitude by you taken.

REV. GAETANO ALBANESI,
Pastor of Italian Baptist Mission.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, April 19, 1926

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, Thy seal is set on all Thy works. Shadowing all, Thy Holy Spirit quickens in us the immortal hope and makes faith the determining power of man. Do Thou forgive our sins and give a deepening loveliness to all that we are. Oh may the very roots of our souls thrust deeply into soils which are eternally good. May we do nothing at the expense of integrity, delicacy, or beauty of spirit. Be with the notable organization that assembles in our city these days. May it be grandly optimistic, emphasizing the ideals and traditions of our homeland, on which it must ever abide for its glory and security. Inspire it with a moral and patriotic energy which shall touch the far borders of our Republic. With all of us, blessed Lord, may our inward reach be commensurate with our outward grasp, and Thine shall be the praise forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, April 17, 1926, and of Sunday, April 18, 1926, was read and approved.

FREDERICK A. FENNING

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of the highest privilege.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman withhold for a moment, to enable the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FUNK] to call up a conference report?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. FUNK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Chair lay before the House the bill H. R. 10198, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Senate amendments, in order that the House may disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls up the bill H. R. 10198, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and asks that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. FUNK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill which the gentleman calls up?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. FUNK, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. TINKHAM, Mr. GRIFFIN, and Mr. COLLINS.

FREDERICK A. FENNING

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of the highest privilege. By virtue of the office I hold as a Member of the House, I impeach Frederick A. Fenning, Commissioner of the District of Columbia, of high crimes and misdemeanors. I ask for time in which to make my charges.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized to make the charges referred to.

Mr. BLANTON. I will state to the Chair that after I have made these charges I will offer the usual resolution in such cases to the House.

Mr. Speaker, by virtue of my office as a Member of the House of Representatives of the United States, I impeach Frederick A. Fenning, a commissioner of the District of Columbia, of high crimes and misdemeanors.

1. I charge that the said Frederick A. Fenning, after being appointed to such office by the President of the United States, and after he had taken the prescribed oath and assumed the duties of the office of commissioner of the District of Columbia, violated his oath and the law by violating the provisions of section 5498 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in that he acted as attorney and received fees and commissions in violation of such law, the penalty prescribed for such violation being a fine of not more than $5,000 and imprisonment for not more than one year.

2. I charge that the said Frederick A. Fenning has violated the provisions of section 500 of Title V of the World War veterans' act of 1924 as amended by the act of March 4, 1925, which provides that respecting compensation and insurance claims filed in said United States Veterans' Bureau for adjudication and not prosecuted in courts no attorney shall receive a fee of more than $10 in any one case, the penalty prescribed for its violation being a fine of not more than $500 and imprisonment at hard labor for not more than two years.

3. I charge that the said Frederick A. Fenning has violated the law and the rules and practice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, which prohibit any committee or guardian for a lunatic receiving as compensation more than 10 per cent of his ward's estate or annual income, in that the said Frederick A. Fenning in several cases wherein he is committee or guardian has received exorbitant remuneration ranging from 12 per cent to as high as 94 per cent, which facts are certified to by the auditor of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

4. I charge that the said Frederick A. Fenning is guilty of what in every State of the Union is commonly known and denominated as the criminal offense of barratry, and what the common law applicable to the District of Columbia constitutes as barratry, in that he has excited, stirred up, and fomented claims against the Government, and many ex parte lunacy suits in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and in that he has specially solicited individuals to employ him as their attorney to prosecute for them certain claims against various departments of the Government of the United States, and before the Congress of the United States, and before the courts of the United States; and in that he has solicited individuals to employ attorneys with whom he was associated or affiliated to prosecute claims and suits for them wherein he received a division of the fee, and that the said Frederick A. Fenning is and has been a common barrator.

5. I charge that the said Frederick A. Fenning has committed the offense of champerty, and through direct solicitation has induced others to employ him as their attorney in many champertous agreements, wherein they were to be out no expense and not to pay any fee unless he recovered, in which event he was to be paid a part of the amount he recovered, and that the said Frederick A. Fenning is and has been a common champertor.

6. I charge that continuously during the past 23 years the said Frederick A. Fenning has wrongfully conspired and confederated with Dr. William A. White, superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital, an institution of the United States Government, in an improper agreement and practice whereby the said Frederick A. Fenning was given an improper, selfish, monopolistic inside concession not allowed to other attorneys, wherein he was permitted to personally examine all records, correspondence, and papers relating to inmates of such institution, and thereby ascertain which of said wards of this Government had money, property, or compensation or pension claims against the Government of the United States, a privilege denied to other attorneys; and whereby the said Frederick A. Fenning would act as attorney for the said Doctor White or would have his law partner act as such attorney for said Doctor White in filing in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia said Doctor White's petition praying that a certain inmate, found to possess money or property or to have a claim against the Government, be adjudged of unsound mind, and praying that a committee be appointed by the court to take charge of such estate and prosecute such claim against the Government, and in which petition said Fenning would have the said Doctor White recommend the said Frederick A. Fenning as the committee to be appointed, and I charge that in pursuance of said wrongful conspiracy and improper practice the said Frederick A. Fenning induced the said Doctor White to execute over 200 such petitions which said Fenning filed in the said Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, wherein said Fenning was recommended for committee, and in which cases the court appointed said Fenning as committee or guardian, and as such said Fenning came into possession of the money and property and income of his said ward and prosecuted said ward's claims against the Government of the United States, and out of which estate and annual income the said Frederick A. Fenning has received annually a large per cent.

7. I charge that the said Frederick A. Fenning, about 23 years ago, wrongfully and improperly solicited the Justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia then having charge of lunacy cases, to appoint him guardian or committee in all lunacy cases, and that said Fenning was then told by said justice that he would not appoint as committee or guardian any person except the one recommended in the petition, and that then and continuously since then, the said Frederick A. Fenning has wrongfully and improperly solicited all persons who might file such petitions to name him therein as committee or guardian, and he has written many persons whom he had never seen or known, urging that they grant him permission to file such petitions for them, with himself named therein as the one recommended for appointment as guardian or committee.

8. I charge that the said Frederick A. Fenning has admitted under oath that about 23 years ago he caused to be originated the unlawful and improper practice of paying out of the estate of the person adjudged to be of unsound mind a fee of $10 to each doctor employed in St. Elizabeths Hospital who signed one of the two required affidavits certifying that he deemed such person of unsound mind, notwithstanding the fact that the law requires all of said doctors employed in St. Elizabeths Hospital to give all of their time to St. Elizabeths Hospital, and said Fenning testified under oath that when about 23 years ago he asked the presiding justice to allow such fees to said doctors, that the said justice of the court asked him to look up whether there was any law allowing it, and that after two weeks' search he could find none, whereupon, although there was no authority for same, the court entered an order allowing it, and that such a fee has been unlawfully and wrongfully paid to said doctors ever since, and I charge that said Frederick A. Fenning thus caused a wrongful and unlawful system to be inaugurated and followed continuously for 23 years, which squanders in unwarranted costs the estates of his wards, and I charge that said Frederick A. Fenning thus used his ward's money to buy favors from and to ingratiate himself into the good graces of all the doctors in St. Elizabeths Hospital, whom he expected to use in his business, and I charge that continuously for the past 23 years the said Frederick A. Fenning has thus paid a fee of $10 wrongfully to a doctor in St. Elizabeths Hospital, and has also paid a second fee of $10, wrongfully, either to his brother-in-law, Dr. J. Ramsay Nevitt, who during all such time has been coroner of said District, or to some other friendly doctor in the District of Columbia, and this too, when the said Fenning knew that under the law and practice in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia he was entitled to have doctors give their testimony in insanity cases for $1.25 per day.

9. I charge that the said Frederick A. Fenning, by inaugurating the wrongful and unlawful practice of paying $10 in each case to some doctor in St. Elizabeths Hospital for testifying in a lunacy case, has incited the said Doctor White to wrongfully and unlawfully sell his testimony to criminals, as he did when he testified for Clarence Darrow in the Leopold and Loeb cases in Chicago, and received therefor $250 per day for 14 days.

10. I charge that the said Frederick A. Fenning, since the United States entered the World War April 6, 1917, has been allowed by the auditor of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and has received as fees and commissions from the estates of his said wards, the enormous sum of $98,544.46, and that, too, when his services to such wards was of practically no value whatever, and when some of said wards had never seen him, and that the said auditor of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia has certified officially that said Frederick A. Fenning has been allowed and has received the said sum of $98,544.46 as his fees and commissions since April 6, 1917.

11. I charge that the auditor of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia has certified officially to the following: That in the case of Daniel G. Campbell, lunacy No. 4073, the rate of commission received by Frederick A. Fenning amounted to 15 per cent in 1920, 24 per cent in 1921, 23 per cent in 1922, 23 per cent in 1923, 31 per cent in 1924, and 36 per cent in 1925; that in the case of Daniel Paul Fenn, lunacy No. 4405, the rate of commission received by Frederick A. Fenning was 15 per cent in 1920, 18 per cent in 1921, 24 per cent in 1922, 25 per cent in 1923, 25 per cent in 1924, and 21 per cent in 1925; that in the case of Patrick Griffin, lunacy No. 4252, the rate of commission received by Frederick A. Fenning was 16 per cent in 1920, 18 per cent in 1921, 15 per cent in 1922, 25 per cent in 1923, 50 per cent in 1924, 31 per cent in 1925, and 32 per cent in 1926; that in the case of James A. Higginson, lunacy No. 3887, the rate of commission received by Frederick A. Fenning was 32 per cent in 1920, 16 per cent in 1921, 35 per cent in 1922, 19 per cent in 1923, 46 per cent in 1924, and 22 per cent in 1925; that in the case of William John Kennedy, lunacy No. 3694, the rate of commission received by Frederick A. Fenning was 30 per cent in 1920, 28 per cent in 1921, 25 per cent in 1922, 26 per cent in 1923, 25 per cent in 1924, and 37 per cent in 1925; that in the case of Patrick J. Byrne, lunacy No. 3682, the rate of commission received by Frederick A. Fenning was 24 per cent in 1920, 24 per cent in 1921, 37 per cent in 1922, 49 per cent in 1923, 37 per cent in 1924, and 64 per cent in 1925; and that in the case of John Flavehan, lunacy No. 1320, the rate of commission received by Frederick A. Fenning on January 22, 1926, for the preceding year was 94 per cent.

12. I charge that said Frederick A. Fenning made a deliberate attempt to deceive Congress when, in the prepared type-written statement he sent to Representative MARTIN B. MADDEN and requested its insertion in the RECORD, on Friday, April 16, 1926, he intimated that Gen. Frank T. Hines, Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, erred when he certified that said Fenning received 10 per cent of the estate and annual income of his Veterans' Bureau wards, said Fenning intimating that his commission was only 5 per cent in most instances.

13. I charge that said Frederick A. Fenning made a deliberate attempt to deceive Congress when, in his said prepared statement, he falsely stated that the $109,070.25 fees and commissions which the auditor of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia had certified had been allowed to said Fenning "includes the full amount of commission and counsel fees in cases going back to the year 1903," because as a matter of fact many fees and commissions received by the said Fenning do not appear in said auditor's certificate, and said auditor certifies officially that since we entered the World War in 1917 the fees and commissions allowed by the auditor to said Frederick A. Fenning amounted to $98,544.46, thus showing affirmatively that of the said $109,070.25 allowed said Fenning in fees and commissions only $10,525 was allowed prior to April 6, 1917, and said Fenning is yet to receive his commissions on all cases for the last 12 months that will end on the court year expiring May 1, 1926.

14. I charge that since our brave ex-service men have returned from France wounded and shell shocked in the World War said Frederick A. Fenning, as guardian and committee for wards of our Veterans' Bureau, has received from said United States Veterans' Bureau the enormous sum of $733,855.87 compensation and insurance due them, and that he has deposited same in his own bank, the National Savings & Trust Co., of which he is a director and in which he owns stock, and that he receives substantial benefits from such deposits by receiving increased dividends on his stock in said institution.

15. I charge that the said Frederick A. Fenning in making loans of his wards' money, as the law requires him to do, he has received discounts, or commissions, or brokerage fees, additional to the interest carried in the notes or obligations, and that when making for said Fenning a loan of $15,000, said National Savings & Trust Co. received a commission, which benefited said Fenning either directly, or indirectly.

16. I charge that the said Frederick A. Fenning has deceived the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, by having different justices thereof to allow him to deduct from the annual income of his wards the annual premium paid to the bonding company for his fiduciary bond, and not disclosing to such court that he is the solicitor for such bonding company, and as such receives from said bonding company a commission of from 15 to 20 per cent on such annual premium, and I charge that said Frederick A. Fenning now holds a solicitor's license issued by the Department of Insurance for the District of Columbia in the following companies, to wit, the Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Co., of Boston, Mass., the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., of Baltimore, Md., and the Great American Insurance Co., of New York, which expire May 1, 1926, and are renewed annually, and as such solicitor, he is authorized to receive commissions, rebates, and compensation on business he causes to be given to such companies. And I charge that he is guilty of moral turpitude in being solicitor for said companies as such interest conflicts with his duties as Commissioner of the District of Columbia, and has influenced his action in adversely passing on an important insurance bill of about 100 pages which his said companies have been opposing in many respects.

17. I charge that the said Frederick A. Fenning is attorney for the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, and is paid an annual fee by them, and that such employment has interfered with his duties as commissioner and has adversely influenced his official action, in that he has opposed and refused to favorably report a bill sought to be passed by the chiropractors, and which bill his clients are opposing.

18. I charge that the said Frederick A. Fenning, as attorney for the said Medical Society of the District of Columbia, in disregard of his duties as said commissioner, has incited, aided, and abetted the doctors employed in St. Elizabeths Hospital, who by law are required to devote all of their time to such institution, to engage in private practices here in the District of Columbia; that as attorney for said medical society he has incited, aided, and abetted certain of the doctors employed in the United States Veterans' Bureau, and who are by law required to give all of their time to said bureau, to engage in private practice here in the District of Columbia, such doctors using the equipment of the Government in their said private practice; and that the said Frederick A. Fenning has knowingly permitted the District alienist, Dr. Percy Hickling, who receives a salary of $3,300 for all of his time, to sell his testimony at the rate of $50 per day and more to lawyers both in the District and outside of it.

19. I charge on reliable information that Frederick A. Fenning is attorney for and is financially interested in the undertaking business of Joseph Gawler's Sons (Inc.), and that during the past 23 years has caused many bodies from St. Elizabeths Hospital to be turned over to said undertaker for burial, a number of them being wards of said Fenning, and that in the lunacy case of Walter Garland Allan, No. 10713, the said Frederick A. Fenning on March 24, 1926, paid to said undertaker the sum of $107.81 for burial expenses, which amount was the total residue of his ward's estate, after taking from same his own fees and commissions, and at such time said Fenning knew that for a charge of only $52 Undertaker Tabler furnishes everything necessary and conducts decent funerals for wards of the United States Veterans' Bureau, and I charge further that through confederation with his said brother-in-law, Coroner J. Ramsay Nevitt, and his employee, Bill Franklin, said Fenning wrongfully caused the body of one drowned in the basin, which body was demanded by the Veterans' Bureau and should have been turned over to it, to be wrongfully turned over to Undertaker Tullavull, who made the Government pay $108.50 for same, but which would have cost the Government only $52 for identically the same kind of funeral had said body been turned over to the Veterans' Bureau and the funeral conducted by the bureau's undertaker, Tabler.

20. I charge that the said Frederick A. Fenning, without having any acquaintance whatever with her, solicited Mrs. Eudora S. Kelly, of Sharon, Mass., to employ him as her attorney to prosecute a claim of $1,800 against the Government, which he agreed to do without any expense to her whatever, but that after the United States made payment to her he was to receive a portion of the amount paid her, and that when he learned that she had already employed Lyon & Lyon, attorneys, of Washington, D. C., to prosecute this claim for her, said Fenning solicited the help of one Henry P. Fellows, and through him finally influenced the said Mrs. Endora S. Kelly to break her contract and power of attorney with Lyon & Lyon and to discharge them, and to employ said Fenning.

21. I charge that said Frederick A. Fenning, while Commissioner of the District of Columbia, on June 10, 1925, represented a client and as attorney filed in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia a petition in lunacy case No. 10890, and as such attorney caused Michael Flaherty to be adjudged of unsound mind, and in his petition had himself recommended for committee, and had himself appointed as such committee, after which as such, he prosecuted a claim against the Government of the United States, and on June 20, 1925, reported to the court that he had received from the United States Navy the sum of $565.80 as back pay due said Flaherty, and that he expected to receive from the United States Navy the sum of $94.30 each month thereafter as pay due his said ward.

22. I charge that said Frederick A. Fenning, while Commissioner of the District of Columbia, on September 22, 1925, appeared in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia as an attorney for a client, whose business he had solicited, and as such attorney filed a petition in lunacy case No. 11041, seeking to adjudge Richard M. Norris of unsound mind, said Fenning in his said petition alleging "That Richard M. Norris is entitled to war-risk compensation monthly, the amount not yet known," which showed that to recover same it would be necessary for him to prosecute a claim before the Veterans' Bureau, and as such attorney said Fenning had said Norris adjudged of unsound mind, and as said attorney said Fenning did prosecute such claim before said United States Veterans' Bureau, in violation of law, and had such claim allowed, and on January 20, 1926, as such attorney said Fenning made report to the court showing that his client had received a check from the United States Veterans' Bureau and had deposited it in the said National Savings & Trust Co.

23. I charge that the said Frederick A. Fenning, while Commissioner of the District of Columbia, appeared in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia as attorney for his client, which business he solicited, and on the 20th day of October, 1925, filed a petition in lunacy case No. 11092 seeking to adjudge Francis D. Allen of unsound mind, and in such petition recommending that he be appointed committee, and said Fenning alleging in his said petition that the said Allen is entitled to recover from the United States Navy retired pay of $150 per month as a Lieutenant in the Navy, and that, as such attorney, said Frederick A. Fenning tried said case on November 20, 1925, and caused said Allen to be adjudged of unsound mind, and caused himself to be appointed committee, and that on December 9, 1925, said Frederick A. Fenning reported to the court by his sworn pleading that he had received from St. Elizabeths Hospital $116.55 due said Allen, and that he expects to receive from the United States Navy $150 per month as retired pay due said Allen, and that he expects to receive certain funds said Allen has on deposit in a New York bank, and that he expects to receive proceeds from the sale of certain lots said Allen owns in New York, and that he expects to recover a refund of a deposit which said Allen made on a house in Pennsylvania, and upon all of which proceeds said Fenning will unlawfully receive at least 10 per cent annually.

24. I charge that the said Frederick A. Fenning, while a Commissioner of the District of Columbia, appeared as an attorney for his client in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and on December 2, 1925, filed a petition in lunacy case No. 11137 in said court, seeking to adjudge Charles L. Cunningham as of unsound mind, that the case was tried on December 4, 1925, and the judgment decreeing said Cunningham of unsound mind recites that petitioner appeared as his attorney—Frederick A. Fenning—and I charge that on January 27, 1926, said Commissioner Frederick A. Fenning, as said attorney, filed with said Supreme Court a petition for his client, stating that petitioner had employed said Frederick A. Fenning and Paul V. Rogers as attorneys, and asking permission to pay them their fee of $150, and that on that same day, January 27, 1926, said Frederick A. Fenning secured a signed order from Chief Justice McCoy authorizing the payment of said $150 fee to said Frederick A. Fenning and Paul V. Rogers, as attorneys, and that said Fenning received such fee in violation of the laws hereinbefore mentioned, and that on said January 27, 1926, said Frederick A. Fenning filed a petition for his client showing that petitioner had collected from a bank and the United States Navy the total sum of $1,005.13, which was deposited in said National Savings & Trust Co., said Fenning's bank.

25. I charge that the said Frederick A. Fenning, while Commissioner of the District of Columbia, during the four months from December 1, 1925, to March 31, 1926, permitted the corporation counsel of said District, in the name of the Commissioners of said District of Columbia, as petitioners, to file in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia 150 cases of lunacy and caused 150 human beings, and residents of said District, to be incarcerated in insane asylums, charged with being of unsound mind, when many of said persons are sane, and should not be deprived of their liberty.

26. I charge that the said Frederick A. Fenning continuously for the past 23 years has conspired and confederated with the said Dr. William A. White to block and prevent sane patients wrongfully incarcerated in St. Elizabeths Hospital from securing their liberty through habeas corpus proceedings, and I charge that Frederick A. Fenning admitted under oath that he went to the court and caused the court not to discharge Miss Cornelia A. Corbett and her mother, and he thus wrongfully kept them in St. Elizabeths for two years and four months, during all of which time they were sane, and while there he squandered their property, and that when finally an able lawyer in the District through habeas corpus proceedings forced a trial for them before the court they were adjudged of sound mind and released, and that the said Miss Cornelia L. Corbett in cause No. 49104, law, sued said Frederick A. Fenning in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and recovered a judgment against him, and made him pay back to her a part of the value of her property which he had squandered, and that said wrongful acts of said Fenning caused the premature death of Mrs. Corbett.

27. I charge that said Frederick A. Fenning is now holding in St. Elizabeths Hospital Lieut. F. D. Allen who is sane, and that said Fenning is squandering his property.

28. I charge that in each of his cases said Frederick A. Fenning charges against his ward's estate a notary fee, in each and all of the many papers he must file under oath, when such notary is an employee of his law office, and such fees are allowed by the court, when they are not proper fees.

29. I charge that said Frederick A. Fenning uses his said office of Commissioner of the District of Columbia for his own selfish benefit and advantages, and that he exercises his power in an arbitrary and tyrannical manner, evidenced by his wrongful demotion of Inspector Albert J. Headley and punishing Officer Gore for doing his duty.

30. I charge that on February 12, 1926, said Frederick A. Fenning wrongfully and without cause, but for the selfish purpose of giving a $2,100 position to his prospective son-in-law, Dr. Floyd McJ. Allen, forced out of office Dr. C. J. Murphy, and put in his place the said Allen, as a police and fire surgeon of the District.

31. I charge that in February, 1926, said Frederick A. Fenning, in order to promote one of his friends, wrongfully retired on pay of $100 per month for life Sergt. Robert E. Lee, a physical giant, 6 feet 2 inches tall, 55 years old, weighing 225 pounds, who for four years had not missed a day for sickness, and concerning whom all of his brother officers testified there was no better man on the force, and that said Fenning arbitrarily refused to grant a proper hearing on the matter, requested by a Member of Congress.

32. I charge that on March 3, 1926, said Frederick A. Fenning wrongfully removed from office Dr. Edward Comstock Wilson, the hero of Knickerbocker Theater, as medical inspector of schools, for the selfish and wrongful purpose of putting in his place an old friend of Dr. William A. White, who is 73 years of age, simply because when said White and Fenning were under fire in a congressional investigation in 1906 this now 73-year old doctor then sympathized with them.

33. I charge that the said Frederick A. Fenning and Dr. William A. White are jointly interested in certain financial investments together, and in February, 1920, carried a partnership account in the Washington Loan & Trust Co., and that their relation is such that neither can render to the public that quality of service to which the public is entitled.

34. I charge that the said Frederick A. Fenning has made a deliberate attempt to deceive Congress when in said prepared statement he denied the report which the Veterans' Bureau inspector, Dr. Henry Ladd Stickney, filed with the bureau on April 26, 1924, wherein Doctor Stickney charged that said Fenning "constantly opposes the transfer of his wards from St. Elizabeths Hospital," and I charge that for over three years said Fenning has refused to turn over to Mrs. Eliza Lee, the legal guardian of the person and estate of her son, Roley Lee, her said son, but withholds him from her, and that said Fenning has already received in his fees and commissions the sum of $1,155.27 from the estate of said Roley Lee, who was shell shocked in France and is a World War veteran.

Mr. Speaker, I offer the usual resolution in such cases, which I ask that the Clerk read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution. The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 228

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, directed to inquire and report whether the action of this House is necessary concerning the alleged official misconduct of Frederick A. Fenning, a commissioner of the District of Columbia, and said Committee on the Judiciary is in all things hereby fully authorized and empowered to investigate all acts of misconduct and report to the House whether in their opinion the said Frederick A. Fenning has been guilty of any acts which in the contemplation of the Constitution, the statute laws, and the precedents of Congress are high crimes and misdemeanors requiring the interposition of the constitutional powers of this House, and for which he should be impeached.

That this committee is hereby authorized and empowered to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to employ, if necessary, an additional clerk, and to appoint and send a subcommittee whenever and wherever necessary to take necessary testimony for the use of said committee or subcommittee, which shall have the same power in respect to obtaining testimony as exercised and is hereby given to said Committee on the Judiciary.

That the expenses incurred by this investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House upon the vouchers of the chairman of said committee, approved by the Clerk of this House.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to use but a few minutes. I will not use the whole hour allowed me by the rules.

Gentlemen, this is an unpleasant duty for me to perform. I have tried to avoid it. I have done everything that any Member could do to obviate the necessity of filing impeachment charges. Nearly a month ago I introduced a resolution to have a joint committee of Congress investigate this matter. That resolution has been pending in the Committee on Rules for nearly a month without action. I have tried to get the chairman to report it out in some form, and amend it as he wanted to amend it, writing it as he thought it ought to be, in order to let us get action on it; but he has not done it. I have tried to get a proper subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia to act. But I have failed there. Last Friday—you all know this—last Friday the District Committee, by an overwhelming vote, passed a resolution authorizing and directing the chairman of that committee to appoint a subcommittee of five to go to the bottom of these transactions. I called on the committee clerk before I came over here this morning to find out whether that subcommittee had been appointed yet, and was advised that it had not been, so the clerk reported to me, and I then told the clerk of the committee to tell the chairman that I would take steps myself to force the matter before a proper committee.

This session of Congress is nearly over. Something ought to be done about this before we adjourn. Frederick A. Fenning must be removed from office before we adjourn. I do not know of any committee better qualified to investigate this matter than that of my friend, the distinguished gentlemen from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM]. He will give it careful consideration. All the men on that Judiciary Committee are lawyers, and they know what is proper and what is ethical. They are able men, and they will give a fair deal to the Government and to the people, and a fair deal to the accused.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. I want to ask the gentleman from Texas whether or not in these cases of guardianship in which these excessive fees were charged the wards were veterans of the World War?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, many of them. Many of them were shell shocked in France. Many of them are veterans of the Spanish-American War, and one or two of them are even veterans of the Civil War, if you please. Many of them are disabled men, retired from your Army and your Navy, and one other department of Government.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. The reason I asked that question is that a great many of us on the Veterans' Committee have been trying to get this investigation made, and it has been questioned by some members of the committee whether or not these excessive fees were charged in cases of demented veterans of the World War.

Mr. BLANTON. Many of them are veterans of the World War. I will give you one of them, the case of Roley Lee. He went to France and served his country valiantly. He was not only shell shocked but a shell broke and destroyed a part of his hip, and that poor boy came back home to die. His mother nursed him back to life, and then he disappeared for two years and she did not know what had become of him. Later she found that he had been sent to St. Elizabeths Hospital by the forces that be here in Washington. Mr. Fenning, without knowing her, sent her a petition, to be signed by her, recommending him as committee. He found out the boy was entitled to compensation and insurance, so he sent that poor woman, over at Grundy, in Buchanan County, Va., a petition for her to sign which would make him committee for the boy. He said to her, "If you will sign this, I will look after your boy and I will get some money for both you and your boy." The poor woman was not able to come to see her boy in the hospital; she did not have the money with which to come, and under those circumstances she signed that petition. When Fenning sent her that document to sign and asked her to permit him to file that petition he was guilty of the crime of barratry under the common law, which is applicable here in the District of Columbia and applicable in the State of Virginia. He had himself appointed committee, and he has collected over $11,000 of that poor boy's money, for he has just recently collected another fee of $213 allowed him by Judge McCoy, additional to the amount shown in the certificate of Auditor Herbert L. Davis.

Three years ago that poor woman went into the probate court of Buchanan County, Va., and qualified as guardian both of the person and property of her son. She gave a bond of $5,000 and received authority to take charge of her boy, and for three years she has tried to get Commissioner Fenning to turn that boy back to her and release him, but he will not do it, because he gets 10 per cent of his annual income. Gentlemen, he has drawn from that boy's estate, as shown by the auditor's certificate, over $1,100 and more in fees and commissions, and that poor woman is spending every cent she can get to live here in Washington in order to be near her boy. Every morning at 9 o'clock she goes after him; they turn her boy over to her; she keeps him all day and then takes him back at 7 o'clock. Tell me about World War veterans. There are lots of them in St. Elizabeths being imposed upon daily by Commissioner Fenning.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the distinguished gentleman, who for nearly a week has held up the Veterans' Committee and prevented them from investigating this case. [Applause.]

Mr. LUCE. I may inform the gentleman that the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation began this morning in an orderly manner—

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes. After you had gone to your steering committee and your steering committee gave you orders to act. [Applause.] They told you you had held this matter up until it had become a crime upon the country, and then you acted, because you were whipped into line by your steering committee. I know all about it, because I went before your Veterans' Committee and I begged the chairman to give me 10 minutes, did I not?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And I was refused?

Mr. RANKIN. And I tried to get the committee to give you the hearing.

Mr. BLANTON. Now I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, and I will cut out of the RECORD all I have just stated, because I have a great deal of regard for the gentleman.

Mr. LUCE. And also because it is inaccurate. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I will leave it to the members of the Veterans' Committee as to its accuracy. What about it, men?

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will be glad to yield, but first I want to find out about the accuracy of this. How about it, men?

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Texas came before the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation last Saturday—

Mr. BLANTON. Friday.

Mr. RANKIN. Friday or Saturday, and brought a list of these cases. He asked permission to make a statement of 10 minutes and every Member on the Democratic side was willing, waiting, and anxious to have him make that statement, but there was a point of order made.

Mr. BLANTON. By whom?

Mr. RANKIN. I believe by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; it was made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, that there was not a quorum of the committee present, and that prevented my having 10 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. And that prevented the Veterans' Committee from going ahead with this investigation and prevented the gentleman from Texas from presenting his facts.

Mr. TILSON. Is not the gentleman from Texas straying from his charges? In his remarks should he not confine himself to his charges?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and I will say to the gentleman from Connecticut that I want to confine myself to my charges. However, I want to discuss a few other matters before I conclude.

Mr. LUCE and Mr. BANKHEAD rose.

Mr. LUCE. Will not the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LUCE. Has the gentleman any knowledge as to whether any charges of delinquency by guardians in the District of Columbia have been laid before the officer of the Veterans' Bureau who is intrusted with the responsibility in the matter?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. I am sure the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts has been derelict in not reading the report of the distinguished investigator of the Veterans' Bureau that I put in the Record on April 8, that of Dr. Henry Ladd Stickney, who reported on April 26, 1924, to the Director of the Veterans' Bureau just about what I have charged Mr. Fenning with here on the floor of this House this morning—that is, the most serious charges.

Mr. LUCE. But within an hour and a half the officer of the Veterans' Bureau who is in charge of these matters was asked whether any charge of delinquency on the part of any guardian in the District of Columbia had been brought to his attention. He first answered with an explicit no; and then seems to have been reminded by an associate that something had slipped his mind.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; something did slip his mind. [Laughter.]

Mr. LUCE. One moment. That question was pending at adjournment, and will be answered to-morrow morning.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, I can not yield further. I can not yield now for any defense.

Mr. LUCE. Will not the gentleman let me ask the question?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not want to yield for any defense.

Mr. LUCE. Do you decline to let me ask the question?

Mr. BLANTON. No. I will answer the gentleman's question. Ask it.

Mr. LUCE. Do you know of your own knowledge that any charge against any guardian in the District of Columbia has ever been filed with the proper officer in the Veterans' Bureau?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, I do. I practically forced Director Hines to show me the report which this control officer, Doctor Stickney, filed with him about Frederick A. Fenning.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentlemen are addressing each other not in the third person.

Mr. BLANTON. I know about Dr. Henry Ladd Stickney's report of April 26, 1924, which I saw in Director Hines's office and read in his presence. Dr. Henry Ladd Stickney was control officer for the United States Veterans' Bureau, and he was sent to St. Elizabeths Hospital by Director Hines in April, 1924, to investigate it, and to report conditions, and on April 26, 1924, he filed his report with Director Hines, from which I quote the following:

The control officer learned that one Frederick A. Fenning, Esq., an attorney, whose office is in the Evans Building, appears to have certain privileges and concessions shown him in contacting claimants of the bureau at the hospital. At the present time he is guardian for over 100 bureau patients. He constantly opposes the transfer of his wards from St. Elizabeths Hospital to any other hospital outside of this jurisdiction. It has been learned unofficially that Doctor White, superintendent, is very friendly to Mr. Fenning. Question is raised as to the propriety of allowing one attorney in the city to obtain guardianship of so many of the beneficiaries of the bureau.

REPORT WAS AN INDICTMENT AGAINST ST. ELIZABETHS

To show that the balance of Doctor Stickney's report filed with Director Hines was a serious indictment against St. Elizabeths, I quote further from same the following:

The construction capacity of St. Elizabeths Hospital is for 3,300 patients. It has 4,200 patients; 901 of them are United States Veterans' Bureau cases.

Howard Hall group are neither well ventilated nor lighted. The beds are of wooden construction, antiquated, and are without springs. The benches are of an old type and are very uncomfortable. Blacks and whites occupy the same small court during recreation hours.

In one semipermanent ward used for tubercular patients blacks and whites are both hospitalized in the same building and only separated by an imaginary line.

Besides the assistant superintendent, Dr. Arthur B. Noyes, there are 37 doctors on the staff, 1 chief nurse, 5 assistant nurses, and 675 attendants and orderlies.

The cost of rations per diem for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1923, was between 40 and 45 cents. Attendants handled food in the most careless manner, were sloppy in their service, and appeared wholly inefficient. Some patients were not allowed even spoons to eat with. It is evidently the policy of the superintendent to keep down food cost. There was a doubt in the mind of the control officer whether or not all patients had sufficient amount of food. Lack of green vegetables and fruit, with no milk served except for tea and coffee, with no beverage for dinner, and weak tea for supper, with no butter served, but oleomargarine instead, I was not satisfied that the diet was well balanced, or that a sufficient number of calories were afforded these patients.

Several patients are bathed in the same water. Patients are not properly segregated. Beds are too near together, and too many are congested in the day room. There are an insufficient number of toilets and bathrooms and showers in many of the wards.

AND THEN CAME THE GRAND JURY REPORT

From the grand jury report on the murder of one Green by attendants in St. Elizabeths, I quote the following excerpts:

REPORT OF THE GRAND JURY

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 5, 1925.

In connection with the inquiry into the cause of the death of William Green, a patient of St. Elizabeths Hospital, on the 17th day of July, 1924, the grand jury made an investigation as to the general conditions of life at said institution.

The grand jury visited the hospital in a body and were shown about the grounds and through many of the buildings. As William Green came to his death in Howard Hall, they inspected it with greater care and more closely than they did the other buildings.

There are approximately 4,400 patients and 1,200 attendants in the entire institution, about 1,000 of the patients being veterans of the World War. We found the hospital greatly overcrowded and most deplorable conditions existing as a result of this overcrowding. There are some rooms, intended to accommodate 20 single beds, containing more than 40 beds; there is scarcely enough room to walk between these beds, and consequently there can not be the least privacy for the patients in dressing or undressing.

CONCERNING HOWARD HALL, WHERE GREEN WAS MURDERED

There is an open court in the center of the building, about 100 feet square, called by the inmates the "bull pen." This is the only recreation space available, and here the dangerous as well as the noisy patients mingle with those whose minds are almost normal. This intermingling must be very depressing to the latter class of patients.

After examining conditions in Howard Hall the members of the grand jury could readily believe the statement of the guard, who said: "If a man went in there—Howard Hall—with a perfectly sound mind, he would be hopelessly insane in less than three years. If I were an inmate I would go crazy in less than a year."

As there is no assembly hall in the building, it is but seldom that religious services are held, and accordingly the spiritual well-being of the patients is sadly neglected. There is nothing to break the dead monotony from one end of the week to the other.

Among the witnesses who were summoned and appeared before us, including present patients of the hospital, former inmates, and others well acquainted with the present inmates, many expressed the belief that there are many persons now confined there who are not now and never were insane, but who have been sent there for ulterior motives. Like stories have been in circulation in Washington for a long time; and whether true or false they are unquestionably injuring the hospital in the estimation of the people of this city, and some steps should be taken to clear up the situation.

We suggest that Congress be asked to authorize a commission, the members thereof to be appointed by the President, to act in conjunction with the superintendent and medical staff of the hospital, in carefully investigating the history and mental condition of every questionable case there, to the end that full justice may be done to each. This great institution will then occupy the position it should in the estimation of the people of this city and of the entire country.

Respectfully submitted for the grand jury.

DANIEL A. EDWARDS, Foreman.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas a question.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman is impeaching Mr. Fenning as a civil officer of the Government of the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. That is as far as I can go.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Do all the charges enumerated in your articles of impeachment refer to acts of misdemeanor committed by him since his commission as a Commissioner of the District of Columbia?

Mr. BLANTON. Not all of them; but they are so closely interrelated and connected, and evidence a continuous wrongful system and practice, that under the rules and precedents of the Congress you can go back to the year 1, if you want to, and connect them all up because all the precedents warrant doing that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What I had in mind is this: I will state to the gentleman that if the Committee on the Judiciary, for instance, when this resolution is referred to them, should determine there are a great many matters relating to these guardianship affairs, and so forth, that are not germane to his official duties as Commissioner of the District of Columbia of the United States, by transferring this whole proposition to that committee, we might not lose sight of some of the other things that ought to be investigated along other lines.

Mr. BLANTON. The chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] is not going to overlook anything. He is a good lawyer. When he goes into this case it will be carefully considered. If Dr. William A. White were such an officer as could be impeached by Congress, I would also impeach him, for he deserves it, but I believe that the President will promptly remove him.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. McKEOWN. Do all the judges in the District here allow these fees the gentleman has enumerated?

Mr. BLANTON. Not all of them.

Mr. McKEOWN. Has the gentleman looked into the amount of fees allowed by the different judges?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I have, but I do not want to mention that now.

Gentlemen, I want to say that the main thing the Committee on the Judiciary is going to find in their way, the first obstacle, will be a distinguished individual in Washington named Edward F. Colladay. He has bobbed up in front of me in several instances, during my investigations, and he will bob up in front of the committee, as he is Mr. Fenning's main defender.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Texas is not speaking to his own resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. This man Colladay is defending Fenning.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. The gentleman is bringing in a third party who is not charged here.

Mr. BLANTON. But he is Mr. Fenning's chief defender before the people of Washington, and I have a right to discuss it.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I submit the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas will proceed in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the Chair hold I am not in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been unable to hear the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Whenever I proceed out of order, I want the Chair to stop me.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I want to tell you about this man Colladay.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. I want to know if Colladay is the man who was indicted years ago in the District for misdemeanors and high crimes.

Mr. BLANTON. He was charged with forgery, and was granted $500 bail, and was discharged on habeas corpus, but finally, on appeal, was remanded back to jail; but later he got his case nolle prossed.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, I renew the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Colladay is the local national committeeman of the Republican Party here in Washington, and certainly you do not want to shield him.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, I again make the point of order that the gentleman from Texas should limit his remarks to the man against whom he makes the charges.

Mr. BLANTON. I think so myself, and I will not go into that further. I was merely answering a question propounded by the gentleman from Florida.

LAWS APPLICABLE TO THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. Speaker, section 1 of Chapter I of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, as amended to June 7, 1924, provides:

The common law, all British statutes in force in Maryland on the 27th day of February, 1801, the principles of equity and admiralty, all general acts of Congress not locally inapplicable in the District of Columbia, and all acts of Congress by their terms applicable to the District of Columbia and to other places under the jurisdiction of the United States, in force at the date of the passage of this act, shall remain in force, except in so far as the same are inconsistent with, or are replaced by, some provision of this code.

BARRATRY

Rawle's Revision of Bouvier's Law Dictionary, on page 222, defines Barratry as follows:

Frequently exciting and stirring up quarrels and suits, either at law or otherwise.

There must be a practice of fomenting suits.

And on page 305 of this same Bouvier's Law Dictionary is defined Champerty as follows:

A bargain with a plaintiff or defendant in a suit, for a portion of the matter sued for, in case of a successful termination of the suit which the champertor undertakes to carry on at his own expense.

And champerty is an offense indictable at common law, so stated on said page 305.

IS A UNITED STATES COURT

In the case of Benson v. Henkel (198 U. S. p. 1) the Supreme Court of the United States held that the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia is a "court of the United States."

Now, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, let me illustrate just how Commissioner Fenning treated some subordinate employees under him:

AFFIDAVIT OF DR. C. J. MURPHY

I, Dr. C. J. Murphy, being duly sworn, upon my oath state: For over four years I have been a member of the board of police and fire surgeons of the District of Columbia; about six months before Commissioner Fenning entered office the board had caused Dr. Floyd McJ. Allen to discontinue services he was rendering at clinics because of his inattention, and we secured Dr. R. L. DeSaussure, a nose and throat specialist, at $1 per year to attend clinics and do the work Doctor Allen had been doing, with the understanding that pay work should go to him, which amounted to several hundred dollars a year; shortly after Commissioner Fenning went into office our board received notice that all pay work should be sent to Doctor Allen; when some of such pay work continued on to Doctor DeSaussure a second notice came from the District Building to our board that all pay work must go to Doctor Allen; it was common knowledge that Doctor Allen was waiting on a daughter of Commissioner Fenning as her suitor; about February 5, 1926, Doctor Allen advised me that he was going to get appointed on our board, and he asked me if I knew which one of us was to be left out; on February 11, 1926, I was called by Commissioner Fenning to his office, and he advised me that it was necessary to have a nose and throat man on the board; I told him that we had the services already of Doctor DeSaussure at $1 per year, and that he was costing the police and firemen only about $300, and it seemed useless to put a $2,100 man on the board; I knew by his manner that he had called me there to fire me; I said: "You can't ask for my resignation, because I am going to hand it to you first." He said: "Can you have it here by to-morrow morning?" I said yes, and asked him if there was any charges against me, and he said none whatever. I took him my resignation the next morning and found that he had prepared already the appointment of Doctor Allen in my place, and that evening the press reported that I had resigned and that Doctor Allen had been appointed in my place.

C. J. MURPHY, M. D.

Sworn to and subscribed before me on this the 19th day of April, A. D. 1926: Given under my hand and seal of office.

AFFIDAVIT OF DR. EDWARD COMSTOCK WILSON

I, Dr. Edward Comstock Wilson, of 1777 Columbia Road, Washington, D. C., being duly sworn, upon my oath state:

I am 46 years old; until removed on March 3, 1926, by Commissioner Frederick A. Fenning, I had been medical inspector of schools for the District of Columbia for about eight years, and not one charge was made against any of my work; on Thursday, February 25, 1926, Commissioner Fenning had me come to his office about 2.30 p. m., and said, "Doctor Wilson, I want you to understand that there is nothing personal in what I am going to say to you. I want your resignation by 10 o'clock to-morrow morning, because I have worked out a plan for reorganization." I said, "Are there any charges against me?" He replied, "No; there are no charges against you." I said, "This is rather sudden; suppose I don't resign?" He said, "Then I would remove you, for I am commissioner and have the power to do it." He said, "You can write me a letter telling me that your outside practice has grown so that you haven't the time to do the school work, and not let it be known that I called you to my office." I said, "That would be a lie, and I won't do it." He said, "Then I will remove you and mark it 'for the good of the service,' as I have the power to do it." I said, "That, too, would not be honest." He then said, "I can cause you a good deal of publicity if I remove you." I said, "Who do you want to put in my place?" He said, "That is personal." I told him that I would not resign, and at the next meeting of the commissioners he had them pass an order removing me, as of date March 3, 1926. I did not then know of the anniversary birthday dinner given Dr. S. S. Adams, July 12, 1923, for his 70th birthday, at which Mr. Frederick A. Fenning and his close friend, Dr. William A. White attended, nor of the speech Doctor White made that night expressing his gratitude to Doctor Adams for showing sympathy for him in 1906 when Doctor White and Mr. Fenning were then under fire before the congressional investigation, and hence did not know that Commissioner Fenning was removing me to make a place for his 73-year-old friend, Doctor Adams.

In the Times last Saturday Commissioner Fenning intimated that he had in mind two charges made against me in 1920. It was unfair that he did not truthfully explain same. If they had anything to do with it, why did he not remove me in June, 1925, when he became commissioner.

All physicians must register every year by July 30 under the Harrison Narcotic Act. In 1920, being very busy, I forgot to register, and my attention was called to it in August, 1920, and I paid the forfeit required by law for my forgetting to register. Concerning same, Hon. R. A. Haynes, commissioner, wrote me as follows:

"Inasmuch as it was felt that the liability incurred by you was not due to a willful intent on your part to violate the law, it was closed by the acceptance of an offer in compromise under date of March 23, 1921."

And, concerning the other matter mentioned, Commissioner Fenning knows that I was exonerated absolutely by a jury before his own brother-in-law, Coroner J. Ramsey Nevitt, in 1920.

Only because I am asked to relate it, will state that on the night of the Knickerbocker Theater disaster, when 98 people were killed by its roof giving way under an unusual snowfall, I entered the ruins immediately that night, at a little after 9 o'clock, administered to the injured and dying continuously all that night and until 3 o'clock p. m. the next day. Approximately 300 people were injured, and I had to amputate the arm of one man. This was work of mercy, as I did not receive one dollar for any of such work.

EDWARD COMSTOCK WILSON, M. D.

Sworn to and subscribed before me, the undersigned notary, by the said Dr. Edward Comstock Wilson, on this the 15th day of April, A. D. 1926. Given under my hand and seal of office.

JOHN ANDREWS,

Notary Public in and for the District of Columbia.

(My commission expires October 27, 1927.)

CONCLUSION

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I have about concluded. This man, Frederick A. Fenning, should not be permitted to hold office after this Congress has adjourned. He should be kicked out of office by Congress before we adjourn. These charges I have made against him can be established by overwhelming evidence. Most of same are matters of record.

WILL THE PRESIDENT DO HIS DUTY

The country will expect that the President of the United States will remove Frederick A. Fenning from office immediately, and not put this Congress to the unnecessary expense of investigating, when his own sworn evidence convicts himself.

HIS CRUEL TREATMENT OF SERGEANT LEE STARTED INQUIRY

When he refused to grant me a hearing, after he had so cruelly and unjustly retired Sergeant Lee, that act alone convinced me that he was not the proper kind of an official, and caused me to investigate him. And as my investigation progressed I was simply astounded. I learned that all of the numerous criticisms appearing in the press against him since he first became commissioner were all true and justly made. I had never dreamed that Frederick A. Fenning was the man referred to in the press as mistreating World War veterans. My correspondence with Mr. Fenning shows that I was one of the last to believe the reports against him. But as I proceeded with my investigation, his perfidy unfolded itself.

COMMISSIONER FENNING AND DOCTOR WHITE HAVE JOINT BANK ACCOUNT

I have before me a letter written by one of the assistant treasurers of the Washington Loan & Trust Co., from which I quote the following paragraph:

This note was paid on February 24, 1920, and the proceeds thereof credited to the account of F. A. Fenning and William A. White on the books of this company.

That proves conclusively that they are operating together financially.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that I may insert in the RECORD a certified statement from the auditor of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, signed by him and certified to by him as being correct, embracing the fees that have been paid to Mr. Fenning and audited by the auditor.

Mr. TILSON. Why does not the gentleman refer that to the committee along with the charges?

Mr. BLANTON. I want to put this in the RECORD for the committee's information.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] will not object. We want to get that information for the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, and I fear this is the only way we can do it.

Mr. BLANTON. I want this to go into the RECORD for their information, and the general information of all Members of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair refers the resolution and the charges to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOWARD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman from Texas a moment ago stated—I did not hear him very clearly—that he was going to keep some of his talk out of the RECORD. One particular part of it I hope he will not expunge; and if I have any right as a Member to insist on its going into the RECORD, I shall certainly do so.

Mr. BLANTON. I will not expunge anything if the gentleman from Nebraska objects to it. I only offered to do so as a courtesy to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

REPORT OF AUDITOR OF SUPREME COURT

COMMISSIONS AND ATTORNEY FEES TO FREDERICK A. FENNING, ESQ., AS COMMITTEE OR ATTORNEY IN LUNACY CAUSES PENDING IN THE SUPREME COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA ON MAY 16, 1925, AS SHOWN BY RECORDS OF HERBERT L. DAVIS, AUDITOR OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, SUPPLEMENTED BY CERTAIN DATA OF RECORD IN THE OFFICE OF THE CLERK OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

EXPLICATIVE

The following data are based upon copies of auditor's reports in the files of the office of the auditor of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, supplemented, in instances where no copies of auditor's reports were found in the files of the auditor, by original reports of the auditor or other data found among the records of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

The rates and amounts of commissions and amounts of attorney fees, as listed herein, have not been ascertained by audit of current date, but are prima facie data.

The dates as listed are the dates of filing of auditor's reports or committee's accounts with the clerk of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

This statement includes only lunacy cases in which reports were filed by Frederick A. Fenning, Esq., as committee or attorney, under the provisions of the sixty-ninth equity rule of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and which were reported upon by the auditor of said court on May 16, 1925.

Additional cases in which Mr. Fenning has been allowed an attorney fee or commission, if any, should appear among the files of the clerk of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

Commissions in excess of 10 per cent appear to be nominal allowances or compensation for extraordinary services.

HERBERT L. DAVIS,
Auditor Supreme Court, District of Columbia.

MARCH 29, 1926.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL

Mr. CAMPBELL from the Committee on Enrolled Bills reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 7455. An act to legalize the submarine cable laid in the St. Louis River at the Spirit Lake Transfer Railway drawbridge, between New Duluth, Minn., and Oliver, Wis., and used for the lighting of the village of Oliver Wis.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the Committee of Conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9341) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes, and that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5 to said bill.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment H. Con. Res. 22:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be, and is hereby created, a joint committee consisting of 10 members, 5 of whom shall be appointed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate and 5 by the Speaker of the House to attend said celebration for the purpose of representing the Congress of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 14

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 8132) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the war with Spain, the Philippine Insurrection, or the China relief expedition, to certain maimed soldiers, to certain widows, minor children, and helpless children of such soldiers and sailors, and for other purposes, to incorporate therein the following amendment, viz:

On page 2, line 6 of the Senate engrossed amendment, after the word "Provided" and the comma, insert the following: "That any such person whose name was upon the pension roll on the 5th day of April, 1917, and who served 90 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the World War and was honorably discharged therefrom, shall upon making proof of such fact, be replaced upon the pension roll and be entitled to receive all the benefits of this act: Provided further,"

BATTLE OF COWPENS

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Battle of Cowpens.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the Battle of Cowpens. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, on this one hundred and fifty-first anniversary of the Battle of Lexington against British regulars, by "those embattled farmers whose shot was heard round the world," it seems fitting to recall that most signal and brilliant victory by American militiamen against trained and seasoned Imperial campaigners.

I have sought to show, and believe that history will sustain the claim, that but for the victory at Cowpens there would have been no glorious Yorktown. If Morgan's forces had been crushed and scattered, Cornwallis, with the aid of Tarleton's force, would probably have overwhelmed and destroyed Greene's army at Guilford Court House. With this accomplished, Cornwallis would have gained sufficient strength and confidence, and the patriot organizations would have been proportionately weakened and demoralized as to enable the British to keep the field and his refuge to the "bottle neck" at Yorktown would not have been taken. So we may justly and fairly claim that Cowpens is a companion victory with Kings Mountain, only 30 miles distant, and having taken place just 100 days prior thereto. So we can fairly assert that Cowpens and Kings Mountain deserve to rank with Bannington and Saratoga, with Bunker Hill, Brandywine, and Princeton. Already at a cost of $65,000, a monument has been erected by appropriation of Congress on the Kings Mountain battle field, but not a single cent has ever been spent by any government on the Cowpens battle ground. Yet Cowpens battle ground is so situated with reference to railroads, highways, and concentrated populations as to render the improvement and development of same by the expenditure of $25,000, a great object lesson in patriotism to tens of thousands annually.

HISTORIC SIGNIFICANCE OF BATTLE OF COWPENS

In order fully to grasp the far-reaching historical significance of the victory at Cowpens we must make a broad review of the situation in America generally. We will find that there had been no conspicuous victory since Burgoyne's surrender at Saratoga. We will find that New York and Newport seemed to be firmly held by the British. We will find that the populations in the smaller towns and in the country of the New England and the Middle Atlantic States were generally Whigs, and therefore strictly in sympathy with the cause of American independence, and perhaps the British had well-nigh despaired of ever reestablishing complete authority in that section of the country. However, there is ground for the belief that the English Government under Lord North concluded that if they could keep Washington and his resolute army busy watching the British forces penned up in New York and Newport they might send other forces to subjugate completely Georgia, the Carolinas, and Virginia. Thus there was a prospect that at least a portion of the colonies might be saved to the crown and be exceedingly useful as a counterpoise to such of the colonies as might win their independence.

Accordingly the British authorities set about to subjugate these Southern States. In turn the Continental Congress and the various States resolved that America would fight as a whole and win her independence as a whole. Consequently, efforts were made to raise the strongest possible army to resist the British in the South.

But the success of the British and the corresponding failure of the Americans was most disheartening and well-nigh fatal but for the events up to which we are leading. It will be recalled that there was a combined French and American attack upon the British entrenched in Savannah, and this ended in a most disastrous defeat on October 9, 1779, when the gallant Comat Pulaski with more than 1,000 other French and American soldiers gave up their lives.

The next move of the British was to capture Charleston, S. C., the principal city of the South at that time. No effort was spared either in the strength of the forces organized or in the desperate and cruel mode of warfare resorted to to terrorize the people of South Carolina, and especially to hold before their terrified minds the prospect of inciting the slaves to a general insurrection against their masters. John Fiske, in his history of the American Revolution, on page 165, Volume II, says of the resolute and determined spirit of the people of South Carolina to resist the powerful efforts of the British, that—

The fit ground for wonder is that, in spite of such adverse circumstances, the State of South Carolina should have shown as much elastic strength as she did under the severest military stress which any American State was called upon to withstand during the Revolutionary War.

Neither space nor time permits us here to record the terrible sufferings of the people of South Carolina during the campaign of 1780. The cruel and implacable General Prevost hesitated at no device of cruelty or barbarity to terrorize the population and to disorganize opposition. He had with him a corps of Indians that were expected to display the severest of barbarities and they did not disappoint him. At this time the famous Col. Banastre Tarleton first appears in the annals of the war for independence and immediately established that reputation which followed him throughout his career on American soil as an officer of ability, mingled with a wantonness and cruelty seldom equaled.

A large British army now advanced overland from Savannah, Ga., toward Charleston, S. C., and General Lincoln, in command of the American Army, consisting of about 7,000 troops, retired within the works about Charleston in the hope of being able to defend it. But resistance was in vain. After withstanding a long siege the entire army was compelled to surrender on May 12, 1780, and the city of Charleston fell into the hands of the British. The loss of the entire army, with the most prominent and important city in the South, well nigh crushed the hopes of all patriotic Americans everywhere. It was the greatest blow that the cause of independence had received since the surrender of Fort Mifflin. But it was not the only misfortune that was to fall upon American arms.

The British now sent out from Charleston forces in several directions to take possession of important inland points, such as Ninety-Six toward the west, and Camden, Winnsboro, and Cheraw toward the north. The Americans were still determined to defend their country, and, after the capture of Lincoln and his army in Charleston, General Gates, the hero of Saratoga, was put in command of the armies in the South, and he advanced southward through Virginia and North Carolina, gathering troops as he went. At this time Horace Walpole, in the British House of Commons, believing his statement to be true, said:

We look on America as at our feet.

The English Government thought that all resistance must now cease. But they did not understand the American spirit nor the resolute purpose back of American action. Now, again, the farmers left their fields and families, the workmen left their shops, and all classes rallied once more around the standard for independence. In the meantime an internecine warfare was going on all over South Carolina. Many weak and irresolute persons, believing that the British authority would finally be restored, now deserted the cause of the colonists and joined the Tories, and it was neighbor against neighbor, and sometimes brother against brother, and no man's life nor home was safe. Negroes and Indians were called into this strife.

Families retired at night to be awakened before daylight by the crackling of the fires consuming their homes and barns. Their horses were stolen and carried away and their cattle and hogs driven into the camps of the enemy. Indeed, it took a stout heart to withstand the temptation to align one's self with what seemed to be the all-powerful victorious British cause.

But another sad disappointment was to afflict the patriots. Lord Rawdon, with about 2,000 British troops, was in command at Camden, S. C., and General Gates, with an American Army of about 3,000 men, most of them inexperienced militia and suffering from insufficient food, clothing, and medicine, and faint from long and weary marches in hot weather, advanced toward Camden. General Gates planned a surprise attack on the night of August 15, 1780, and Lord Rawdon, in turn, had planned a surprise attack at the same time, and their advance parties met about 3 o'clock in the morning of August 16 on the road about 5 miles from Camden. After a slight skirmish both armies rested on their arms waiting for daylight, and when the sun rose the battle was resumed. General Gates failed to display any of the daring and heroic leadership that won at Saratoga; on the contrary, he was hesitating, uncertain, and confused. He allowed his forces to be divided, he did not take advantage of the opportunity to flank the enemy, allowed himself to be caught on a narrow ledge of land between two inextricable swamps, and consequently was not only defeated but horribly routed, his army broken to pieces, his soldiers butchered or driven into the swamps, and himself forced to fly on horseback at full speed and almost alone, nearly 200 miles, to Hillsborough, N. C. Indeed, "The laurels of Saratoga had changed to the willows of the South."

Surely, this was "the year of disaster" for the cause of independence. The British thought, surely, now the southern spirit would be broken. Surely, resistance would cease. But not so. The British Army was divided into three parts—one under the famous Tarleton, another under an able and determined Scotch soldier, Colonel Ferguson, and the main body under Lord Cornwallis, who had come from Charleston and succeeded Rawdon in command at Camden. These three forces advanced by three different routes through the northern part of South Carolina toward North Carolina, and Ferguson's force of about 1,100 British regulars camped on a spur of King's Mountain and was surrounded, surprised, and destroyed by forces under Colonels Campbell, McDowell, Shelby, Sevier, and Cleveland on October 7, 1780. The men making up these patriotic organizations under these natural leaders were not regulars, and in fact could hardly be called "militia." They were made up from the hardy Scotch-Irish settlers, described contemptuously by Tarleton as "backwater men."

When they found that this force of the British had separated themselves from the main body they joined their favorite leaders and took their rifles and shotguns of various description with them, rode their own horses, provided their own ammunition, and even the private soldiers participated in the "council of war" as to whether or not an attack should be made upon the British established on King's Mountain. These men were independent fighters. The several subdivisions advanced upon the mountain from so many directions and quietly crept up its steep sides and had seized the sentinels around the camp before their approach was dreamed of. Colonel Ferguson displayed all the heroism and gallantry of the race of Scotch fighters from which he came. With defiance he shouted to his men, "Now beat the damned rebels to the ground." But it was all in vain. These determined backwoods fighters could not be terrified. One of them sent a bullet through the body of Ferguson himself, who fell dead from his horse. Practically the entire force was either killed, wounded, or captured.

This victory at King's Mountain gave cheer to the patriots from one end of the country to the other. But it was followed by a period of watchful waiting, and the loss of a thousand soldiers was by no means decisive as against the British. Hence they continued in their policy of terrorizing and destroying the people and their substance. Now, "the old wagoner," Daniel Morgan, who was with Braddock and Washington on their expedition against the French in 1754, went to the South with a commission from Congress as brigadier to exercise command under General Greene, who had supplanted the unfortunate Gates in command of the whole South. Morgan was a character who deserves to be better known to the American people. On that expedition with Braddock he was a mere wagoner, a team driver, yet when insulted by a British lieutenant he knocked the lieutenant down and was tried by a summary court-martial and sentenced to suffer "500 lashes on his bare back." He was heroic to the point of desperation at Quebec and Saratoga.

THE BRITISH STILL DETERMINED

But the British were resolved to hold the ground they had gained in the Southern Colonies. The communications and security of Cornwallis were constantly threatened by the presence of forces under Gen. Daniel Morgan, varying from 200 to 800 men, according to the nature of the mission and the inclination of the troops of some of the militia organizations. Cornwallis was reinforced by 2,000 soldiers sent from New York by water to Charleston and thence overland to the interior, and in January, 1781, he ordered Colonel Tarleton to drive Morgan, "the wagoner," as he was contemptuously called, out of South Carolina or destroy him. The force of General Morgan had a very precarious existence. It was compelled to rely largely upon the people in the vicinity for subsistence and for forage for the force of about 80 cavalry under Lieut. Col. William Washington.

Morgan was slowly retreating to the northwest and was being pushed by the pursuing Tarleton. Finally, on the night of January 16, Morgan camped at what is known as "The Cowpens," a high plateau where the underbrush had been killed, due to the fact that the cattle for all that section would be assembled at that place to be branded and where it was possible to see through the forest for several hundred yards. In addition to the force of 80 cavalry, Morgan had 237 Continental troops and 553 militiamen from Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia. Here Morgan determined that he must fight and went from mess to mess where the soldiers were bivouacked, advising them that they must fight not only for victory but for life, for home, and for loved ones, as well as for independence.

The disposition of the troops by General Morgan manifests unusual tactical skill. John Fiske, in his history of the American Revolutionary War, says that "the Battle of Cowpens was the most conspicuous tactical victory of the war." The arrangement was substantially as follows: About 60 sharpshooters from North Carolina were placed as skirmishers on the right flank and far out in front, and about 150 of the Georgia militia similarly placed on the left flank, making a thin line of skirmishers, who were instructed to pick out the officers as they would squirrels, and having delivered their first volley to fall back on the next line and reload.

Colonel Tarleton had a force of about 1,100 British regulars, with two field pieces and with great superiority in cavalry and in ammunition and in bayonets. When formed in battle line they all rushed forward with great impetuosity and confidence. But many of the officers fell under the well-directed aim of the American skirmishers. But when the British troops saw the skirmish line giving way they became overconfident, assumed that the Americans were retreating, and rushed forward in disorder. The next line of Morgan's troops, consisting of Virginia riflemen, delivered volley after volley that thinned the ranks of the British and threw them into confusion. The militia, having retired behind the Continental regulars, reformed and returned to the fight, this time striking the British left flank, while Lieutenant Colonel Washington, whose cavalry had been stationed in the rear of the main body of Morgan's troops, now bore down with irresistible force upon the British right flank so that soon the British were practically surrounded, and Tarleton barely escaped capture as he rushed at full speed from the field, accompanied by a few of the dragoons.

THE VICTORY AT COWPENS DECISIVE

On this glorious day of January 17, 1781, the American militiamen, "the backwater men," led by the plain civilian soldier, Daniel Morgan, gave wonderful account of themselves in administering a terrific and destructive defeat to a force of British regulars with a superiority of 300 in numbers and with great superiority in arms and ammunition. The Americans lost only 12 killed and 60 wounded, while the British lost 115 killed, 200 wounded, with about 550 prisoners, including 70 negroes that had been taken from their owners and masters and were carried by the British as camp servants. The British lost two standards, 100 horses, 35 wagons, 800 muskets, and their two fieldpieces, and many other supplies. General Morgan wrote in his report:

Our success must be attributed to the justice of our cause and the gallantry of our troops. My wishes would induce me to name every sentinel in the corps.

This victory settled the question of subjugating the South. Hereafter the sole problem in the mind of Cornwallis was to get away from those uncompromising and unconquerable patriots of South Carolina. Hence he moved northward with all dispatch, had a drawn battle with General Greene at Guilford Court House, and thence advanced through Virginia to his position at Yorktown. We know the rest. We know how Lafayette held him at bay on Yorktown Peninsula while Washington was coming from the Hudson over land and water to the great and final victory. We know how the French Admiral de Grasse had sent word that he would bring the French fleet to the Chesapeake Bay in the late summer of 1781, and how de Grasse, after a severe naval battle, prevented the British fleet from relieving Cornwallis from the "bottle neck" that the Americans and their allies had formed about him. But for the victory of the French fleet, Cornwallis would have embarked upon the British fleet and would have transported his army to New York, and thus Washington's march from the Hudson and the assembling of troops from north, south, east, and west at Yorktown would have been in vain.

Thus 1780, "the year of disasters," was followed by 1781, "the year of glorious victory." Thus King's Mountain, fought on October 7, 1780, on South Carolina soil, was followed shortly by Cowpens on January 17, 1781, also on South Carolina soil, distant only about 30 miles. These two victories turned the tide of war. These two victories heartened the patriots north and south. These two victories showed the haughty British regulars and the still haughtier British cabinet, led by Lord North, what these determined American militiamen could do. They were poor at drill, they had no uniform dress, they had little but the hunting rifle, but their aim was true, their hearts were fearless, and their wills were unconquerable.

Therefore, it is highly fitting that the Federal Government should at last take notice in a material way of the great contribution that the victory at Cowpens made to the cause of independence. While King's Mountain has been recognized in a partial way by the erection of a beautiful monument to the memory of her heroes, not one single dollar has ever been spent by either State or Federal Government at Cowpens. To create here a military park in the heart of the new industrial South, accessible from every quarter by railroad and highway, will afford the opportunity for millions to be inspired by the lessons of that victory. Military students may ponder well its teachings. Historians will here gather inspiration. Citizens of all sections and classes and callings will find here inspiration to a higher, more unselfish patriotism.

The amount suggested to be expended for the purposes of this military park is very modest. It will be noted that a memorial association has owned 1 acre of land of the old battle ground, where 70 years ago a small monument was erected by the Washington Light Infantry of Charleston, an organization named in honor of Lieut. Col. William Washington, a distant kinsman of Gen. George Washington. Especial attention is called to the fact that one of the citizens in the neighborhood that owns a portion of the battle field, a generous lady, has entered into a written agreement to donate without charge 5 acres of land.

The citizens of Spartanburg and Gaffney and surrounding country have agreed to raise $1,000 with which to buy 5 acres additional and adjoining the 5 acres to be donated. If, therefore, under the authority contained in the bill the Secretary of War will acquire not exceeding 10 acres additional, connecting the 10 acres to be donated with the 1 acre above mentioned, making in all not more than 21 acres, there will be sufficient land to indicate for all time the principal features of the battle. Under the authority contained in this bill the Secretary of War, with the best information available, will have the principal places and positions of the respective armies indicated by appropriate markers. The Secretary of War will doubtless have roads graded and graveled through this park, so that visitors may inspect the positions with ease and comfort. This act of simple justice to the great heroes of a great cause has been too long delayed, and it is our confident hope that this Congress will promptly enact this bill into law, so that the hundreds of thousands of visitors now flocking by train and automobile to that section of the country may find material evidence of the loving appreciation of this generation of the devotion and heroism of the men who by their blood sealed not only the cause of American independence but the sacred cause of human right under free institutions "deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

EUGENE V. DEBS

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I hold in my hand a socialist newspaper which contains a misleading story as to the citizenship of Eugene V. Debs, stating that there is danger that he will not be permitted to return to the United States from Bermuda; that there is to be a May day demonstration in the United States on that account. I think Members will find in their mail within the next few days numerous letters making an appeal that Eugene V. Debs be permitted to return to the United States. Members may answer such letters by saying that he has not lost his citizenship. He is still a citizen of the United States. It is possible under the condition of the pardon that he has lost certain rights of citizenship in the State of Indiana, but he was born here in the United States, and all this stuff put out by the socialist papers is bunkum pure and simple.

Recently there was introduced a joint resolution asking Congress to restore citizenship to Eugene V. Debs. It is H. J. Res. 172, to readmit Eugene V. Debs to the rights and privileges of citizenship. That resolution was referred to the committee of which I have the honor to be the chairman and was promptly tabled because he never had lost his citizenship. It was not a proper matter to come before Congress. I am making this statement so that Members may state the facts in answer to letters concerning that bill. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

THE CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first number on the Consent Calendar.

CONSTRUCTION OF ROAD ON LUMMI INDIAN RESERVATION

The first business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 61) to authorize an appropriation for the construction of a road on the Lummi Indian Reservation, Wash.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, I see that this is a gratuity appropriation. I question the wisdom of enacting a policy of appropriating money for highways that are not eligible to come in under the Federal system.

Mr. HADLEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to the gentleman from New York and to the House that if he will permit I will make a request that it go over. Preliminary to that I wish to say that objection was withheld to the consideration of the bill on a former occasion pending correspondence with respect to its terms.

From the correspondence received I am satisfied that the facts are not fully understood. I want it postponed until we can reach an agreement, and I hope it may be resolved to the satisfaction of all concerned. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice and retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

CONVEYANCE OF LAND ON THE KAW RESERVATION, OKLA.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7083) authorizing the sale and conveyance of certain lands on the Kaw Reservation in Oklahoma.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, at the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONTGOMERY], who is interested in the measure, I ask that it go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

ELECTRIC LIGHT AND POWER IN THE DISTRICT OF HANA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4799) to authorize and provide for the manufacture, maintenance, distribution, and supply of electric current for light and power within the district of Hana, on the island and county of Maui, Territory of Hawaii.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, I have gone over the question of the form of the bill with the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY] and the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. JARRETT] and agreed with them on the proper form of the bill. With the understanding that an amendment will be accepted at the proper time, I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman was kind enough to show me the amendment, and that eliminates some objections I had to the bill. But I find on page 2 what is commonly known as a joker in these franchises, where, after reciting the specific powers granted to the corporation, it gives them power to operate for any other purpose which the association may deem advisable. It seems to me that we do not want to extend any such power in a franchise which we are granting to generate electricity to be used for motive and lighting purposes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the function of Congress in this matter is not to legislate originally, but to approve an act of the Legislature of Hawaii, and we have before us the act of the Legislature of Hawaii. The amendment that I have discussed with the gentleman would approve that act. I have not gone into all of the details of the act itself, as the gentleman from New York has.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman in his proposed amendment recites specifically the powers of generating electricity, but does not give that blanket general power at all, as I remember it.

Mr. CRAMTON. The amendment that I shall offer is merely an approval of the act which has been passed by the Legislature of Hawaii, except as to section 17. Section 17 of the act passed by the Legislature of Hawaii, if approved by Congress, would give to the Legislature of Hawaii the authority hereafter to amend in any respect it desired, and the amendment that I shall submit would only perpetuate the right on the part of the Territorial legislature to amend subject to the approval of the Congress.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And we retain control?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes. The necessity for the change of form I will suggest is as follows:

The organic act of Hawaii, found on page 1141, volume 2, Supplement of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and approved April 30, 1900, provides in section 53—

that the legislative power of the Territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States locally applicable. * * * (b) But the legislature shall not grant to any corporation, association, or individual any special or exclusive privilege, immunity, or franchise without the approval of Congress; * * *

The Legislature of Hawaii under act 235 of the Session Laws of Hawaii for 1923 passed an act to grant a franchise for light and power purposes within the district of Hana, which is apparently identical in language with H. R. 4799 as reported to the House, except that it stipulated that the approval of the act by Congress must be secured within two years from the time of approval of the act by the governor. It was so approved by the governor May 2, 1923, and accordingly the limit of time fixed by the legislature for its approval by Congress would have expired May 2, 1925. By act 6 of the Session Laws of Hawaii for 1925, section 18 of act 235 of 1923 was amended so as to extend the time within which the approval of Congress might be secured to four years from the date of such approval by the governor, thereby authorizing approval by Congress up to May 2, 1927. Act 6 was approved by the governor March 20, 1925.

It is apparent, therefore, that it is the proper function of the Legislature of Hawaii to pass bills for granting charters for public utilities in the first instance, but that such laws are not effective until formally approved by Congress, and such approval by Congress to be effective must be given within the time stipulated in the act passed by the legislature.

The function of Congress, therefore, not being to legislate, but merely to approve or refuse to approve legislation drafted and enacted by the Legislature of Hawaii, it is clear that the form followed by the committee in this case of H. R. 4799 is undesirable. On its face it is an independent enactment by Congress, carrying no evidence as to whether any action by the Legislature of Hawaii had preceded it or not, and one having knowledge of the fact that a similar act had been passed by the Legislature of Hawaii could only determine the identical form of such act by a close comparison of the two acts. It further appears to be unnecessary and undesirable that the statutes of the United States, which are sufficiently cumbersome in any event, should be encumbered by setting up in full the franchise act when the only proper function of Congress is that of approval and confirmation.

It therefore appears that the proper course to be followed by Congress in all such cases is to express its approval of the act passed by the Territorial legislature. In this case section 17 of the Territorial act should not be approved by Congress, since its approval as it stands would operate as a grant of authority to the legislature to alter, amend, or repeal this particular franchise without consent of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the bill that is in the hands of the Clerk is a long bill setting out a franchise to be granted to a public-utility corporation in Hawaii. The function of the Congress is to approve or disapprove of that act. I propose to offer a substitute that is very brief, which recites such approval with a certain amendment. Therefore I ask unanimous consent, to save the time of the House, that the reading of the bill be dispensed with and that in lieu thereof the substitute which I send to the Clerk's desk may be read, which substitute I offer as an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the reading of the bill (H. R. 4799) be dispensed with and that in lieu thereof the substitute which he sends to the Clerk's desk be read and considered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the whole text of H. R. 4799 after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That Act 235 of the Session Laws of 1923, entitled 'An act to authorize and provide for the manufacture, maintenance, distribution, and supply of electric current for light and power within the district of Hana, on the island and county of Maui, Territory of Hawaii,' passed by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii and approved by the Governor of the Territory of Hawaii on May 2, 1923, as amended by Act 6 of the Session Laws of 1925, entitled 'An act to extend the time within which the approval of the Congress of the United States must be secured to act 235 of the Session Laws of 1923 by amending section 18 of that act,' passed by the Legislature of Hawaii and approved by the Governor of the Territory of Hawaii on March 30, 1925, is hereby approved: Provided, That the authority in section 17 of said act for the altering, amending, or repeal of said act shall not be held to authorize such action by the Legislature of Hawaii, except upon approval by Congress in accordance with the organic act."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title was amended to conform to the text.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record upon the bill by inserting a further statement in respect to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PROMOTION OF A PROFESSOR OF THE UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 2274) providing for the promotion of a professor at the United States Military Academy.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I objected to the consideration of this bill last consent day. Let me ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FURLOW] the necessity for having a lieutenant colonel permanently detailed at West Point to teach natural and experimental philosophy?

Mr. FURLOW. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from New York will not object to the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. This bill requires three objectors.

Mr. FURLOW. Mr. Speaker, the last time the bill was called up it was objected to because it was not explained on the floor. The bill affects one officer in the United States Army, a man who in 1917 was ordered to serve as an instructor at West Point. Being drafted into that service he was not permitted to go along on the promotion list with his classmates from West Point. This officer did not attempt to avoid service at the front, as shown by the report from the War Department. In fact, he did serve in about six of the major campaigns at the front after he had been assigned to duty at West Point. During the period when he was entitled to a vacation from West Point, he went to France and served, and then returned from France, acting upon orders from the War Department. This bill is sponsored by the War Department, to do justice to an officer who has been deprived of his regular promotion advantages. He is four years behind his classmates. The War Department recommends the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any officer of the United States Army now holding the position of permanent professor at the United States Military Academy, and who on July 2, 1921, would have become entitled to his promotion to a colonelcy had he remained in the line of the Army and who on that date had completed more than three years' duty as permanent professor shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a colonel in the Army, and that the said rank shall date from July 2, 1921: Provided, That no back pay and allowances prior to the passage of this act shall accrue.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ARTILLERY RANGE AT FORT ETHAN ALLEN, VT.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 2752) for the purchase of land as an artillery range at Fort Ethan Allen, Vt.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish some member of the Committee on Military Affairs would tell us how many more artillery fields or new fields the War Department contemplates buying, in view of the action taken by the Congress only a few weeks ago authorizing the sale of a great deal of surplus land and property.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, that is a very proper question. The corps area in which Fort Ethan Allen is situated has no artillery range. I have here a statement from Senator GREENE, formerly a member of the House Military Affairs Committee. I will say for Senator GREENE that no man ever opposed more strenuously the acquisition of additional property. I have very great confidence, and so has the House, in his judgment.

I am told that the other corps areas have good ranges. I wish to emphasize the point that this artillery range is needed. It is not good policy to train men to drill with guns that do not know how to shoot.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. I want to say to the gentleman, of course no one has a greater admiration for the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Senator GREENE] than I have or confidence in his judgment. I served on the Committee on Military Affairs with him, and I shall not object to this out of deference to the distinguished Senator; but as long as I am a Member of the House I am going to object to any purchases of land by the War Department when they come here and ask us to sell what they have on hand.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I agree entirely with the gentleman, and that is the position of the Committee on Military Affairs. It will be well for the committee to note what is said about this bill by Senator GREENE and by the War Department:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR FRANK L. GREENE

It seems desirable for me to call the attention of Congress to the necessity for the immediate passage of this bill. The urgency for prompt action arises from the fact that the options on the various properties involved expire January 1, 1927. In all probability it will be impossible to renew these options at the prices stipulated in the existing agreements.

In order to carry out the terms of these contracts, Congress must pass this bill (S. 2752) and provide for the appropriation of the required funds in the next deficiency bill.

The project has the approval of the War Department and of the Bureau of the Budget. This information is contained in a letter from Secretary of War Dwight F. Davis to Senator JAMES W. WADSWORTH, Jr., of the Senate Military Affairs Committee, under date of February 23, 1926.

I am told that the other corps areas have good ranges.

I wish to emphasize the point that this artillery range is needed. It is not good policy to train men to drill with guns that they do not know how to shoot.

This is in no sense a "raid on the Treasury" and the prices agreed to are evidence that there is little effort to profit at the expense of the Government. The sums named in the agreements are considered by well-informed persons to be fair to all concerned. In somewhat over 80 parcels of land there are only three which are thought overvalued. The prices for the various holdings vary from $200 for 50 acres of cut-over timber land to $20,000 for one excellent farm. It may be that some further adjustment will be possible. The Government can buy most of the properties for less than $5,000 in each case. The average price an acre is around $34, which I am convinced is very reasonable. The entire tract is hilly and it is mostly pastures, wood lots, and some tillable land. It is in the heart of the Green Mountains at the junction of the town lines of Jericho, Underhill, and Bolton, about one-third of the range in each town.

If this same area were leased, the owners would demand $34,866 a year. The high cost of leasing results from consideration of the inconvenience to the owners in moving goods and stock and in paying taxes and insurance during the periods of firing. It is only proper that they should be compensated for this. This in a few years would result in the expenditure of a sum that would at this time buy outright the entire property. While speaking of economy, I wish to point out that all equipment can be safely stored at Fort Ethan Allen, thus saving transportation costs.

We in New England are confronted with the problem of training artillery with no adequate facilities for actual firing. The only good ranges anywhere near are at Pine Plains, N. Y., and at Tobyhanna, Pa. These are in other corps areas and are now used to the limit. Obviously it is not good economy to send troops from New England to either of these places. In two or three years transportation costs would equal the sum necessary to pay for this project. Nor is it good financing to lease a range under the circumstances I have described.

At the proposed location the mountains form an effective backdrop and the slopes of these mountains are contained within the limits of the proposed reservation. The altitude there varies from about 900 feet to over 3,000 feet above sea level.

We have here an opportunity to acquire property where firing can be conducted with both the 75-mm. and the 155-mm. guns. Ranges can be secured up to 8,500 yards and probably more. The site has been carefully selected from the viewpoint of military utility and also from the standpoint of isolation. However, in spite of its isolation, it is conveniently close to Fort Ethan Allen, a distance of about 20 miles over good roads. This distance gives excellent opportunity for marching practice. This location was decided upon after a survey of a large amount of territory. It is not a haphazard project by any means. It has been thoughtfully considered from all angles, military and civilian. It is only recommended after a careful trial. A section of it sufficient for test purposes was leased last summer and it meets with the approval of the Regular, Militia, and Reserve officers. There is a scarcity now of desirable locations and as time goes on it will be increasingly difficult to secure one. If we wait until later we will have to pay a higher price, we may be unable to find such a desirable location, and in the meantime we will have to lease land at high prices for artillery practice.

Among the various plots suitable for camps in this area there is one on the banks of the Lee River large enough for a regiment of artillery. Within a hundred yards of this camp site there is ample water for animals, and in addition there is an abundance of good well water for troops. The camp would be on hard, well-drained land; the climate is healthful and the surroundings rich in scenic beauty. I mention these things because the welfare and contentment of troops are of primary importance.

Here we have a place where conditions are ideal, where the contour of the country provides for all sorts of maneuvers, gun positions, and ranges, where the civilian population is friendly and well disposed toward the Army, and where the interests of economy will be served in the cutting of transportation costs by the storing of guns at the post and the absence of damage claims against the Government. If it be found desirable to conduct airplane practice, no better location can be found. There is a municipal landing field in Burlington, near by, and there is plenty of opportunity for landing and taking off on the present reservation at Fort Ethan Allen.

The land owned by the State of Vermont comprises 1,234 acres. The latest session of the legislature authorized its disposal to the Federal Government. Gov. Franklin S. Billings wrote me under date of December 21, 1925, that "acting under 148, acts of 1925," he had given an option to the Federal Government on this land for $18,000. There is no doubt of his authority to sell.

I am told that General Pershing is familiar with the conditions there and that he is favorable to this project. Other staff officers who have been on the ground are likewise favorably impressed.

October 14, 1925, Maj. Gen. John L. Hines, the Chief of Staff, wrote me that "such purchase is considered most desirable from the standpoint of successful field-artillery training in the First Corps Area. The results accomplished this summer were successful." He also wrote me on January 4, 1926, in part as follows: "From a military standpoint the permanent possession of this range is highly desirable, as it is quite evident that the day is fast approaching when artillery target ranges will be increasingly difficult to locate and much more costly to acquire." These letters were written in reply to communications I had sent him on this subject.

Maj. Gen. William J. Snow, Chief of Field Artillery, wrote to me on January 14, 1925, in reply to an inquiry, "From all accounts the terrain is well adapted to the purchase for which it is intended to be used, namely, a field-artillery target range. I am heartily in favor of the project in view of the urgent need of the First Corps Area for a suitable range."

Lieut. Col. T. W. Hollyday, formerly in command at Fort Ethan Allen, has told me that practically every kind of artillery problem can be worked out at this site.

Lieut. Col. A. A. Starbird, now in command at that post, is enthusiastic about the possibilities of the range.

The people of Vermont are well disposed toward the military. The State believes in reasonable preparedness, and I may say here that at the outbreak of the World War the Vermont National Guard was the only militia outfit equipped and ready to take the field at once.

In closing, I want to say that I have been interested in this matter for a long period of time, and feel that at last a location has been found that can not be surpassed. I hope you will believe me when I say that I am not urging the enactment of the bill solely because it is located in the State which I have the privilege of representing. This range is needed in the First Corps Area.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 23, 1926.

Hon. JAMES W. WADSWORTH, JR.,

Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR WADSWORTH: In compliance with your request of January 28, 1926, I am pleased to submit the following report on S. 2752.

The subject of the proposed legislation is the purchase of land as an artillery range at Fort Ethan Allen, Vt.

There are no provisions of existing law on this subject.

The acquisition of a target range in this vicinity has been under consideration for some time, and from a military standpoint the enactment of the proposed legislation is desirable.

It is necessary at present to rent a rather inadequate range at an annual expenditure of $10,735, with the prospect of an advance in rentals next year, when the options to purchase expire.

In addition to this, we have been using without cost to the Government (under license signed by the Governor of Vermont) 1,200 acres of State land. This privilege may be withdrawn at any time, which would entail the rental of additional privately owned areas at a considerably increased expenditure.

The present rental of the land now under lease amounts to 5.37 per cent of the proposed purchase price; and if we add the rental to be expected if the State-owned land is withdrawn, it is apparent that the purchase would pay for itself in the matter of rental alone in a few years.

It appears therefore that both from a military viewpoint and from a business viewpoint the acquisition of this tract is advisable.

If the Committee on Military Affairs wishes to have hearings upon the proposed legislation, the following-named officers are designated to appear before your committee:

Lieut. Col. J. A. Baer, G. S.

Maj. A. C. Sandeford, F. A.

The Director of the Bureau of the Budget has been consulted and advises that this proposed legislation is not in conflict with the financial program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

DWIGHT F. DAVIS, Secretary of War.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Reserving the right to object, what is the cost?

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Two hundred thousand dollars; and that is less than the capitalization of the rental at the present time.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. I will not object, but I can not help but express my amazement at the inconsistency of the War Department in selling certain property used by a State National Guard and immediately afterwards asking for authority to purchase land at a cost of $200,000—

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I will say to my colleague—

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Will the gentleman permit me to finish? Jackson Barracks, in the city of New Orleans, was purchased about 1843 by the Federal Government at a cost of $43,000, and was used as a barracks by the Regular troops up to about four or five years ago, when it was abandoned and then a permit issued to the State National Guard of Louisiana to occupy that ground and the buildings. The State National Guard at the blast of the bugle, of course, will go out heel to heel and arm in arm with the Regular troops, but notwithstanding this military fact and our protest, the War Department determined that this property must be sold and the National Guard evicted, kicked out unceremoniously, though it is unquestionably a part of the Military Establishment of the country. It was with considerable difficulty that we secured a recognition of the claim of the National Guard on property which had been used for military purposes by the United States Government. We thought that the bill authorizing the sale of the no longer used reservations and abandoned forts, as connected in conference, assured the State that it could purchase this property for its National Guard.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I will say to the gentleman I have been a member of the National Guard for 20 years and I would not do anything to discriminate against the National Guard, but this does not discriminate—

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. It is an inconsistency to put the National Guard off of military property and acquire other property at a cost of $200,000 for a rifle range. No sophistry or casuistry will conceal that fact.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. If the gentleman will permit, in the bill we passed two weeks ago a piece of property in the gentleman's State was being used by the National Guard and they improved it. We authorized the sale, and the Louisiana National Guard has to go out and buy property—

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Have to pass the hat, as it were, to acquire that which should have been given to them. And now we find a coordinator with full knowledge of the attitude of Congress toward our National Guard and Jackson Barracks, recommending that a Federal department take it over.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I will say that the Federal Government is now furnishing the National Guard money for such purposes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. I wanted to bring this current history about Jackson Barracks out. As a matter of fact, by this bill priority is given (and generally speaking there is no fault to find with that) to a department of the Federal Government to acquire such property, as mentioned in the bill to which I referred. Now, what happens? A coordinator in New Orleans, who should have known that general priority accorded to the Federal departments was subordinate to the preference expressly or impliedly given to the National Guard, was seized with a remarkable idea in reference to that property. Notwithstanding that Congress intended to give the State National Guard the right of preference he was seized with the extraordinarily fantastical idea that a department of the Federal Government should take possession, claim it, and devote it to what—to the building of a quarantine station and marine hospital right next to where the slaughterhouses and stockyards of New Orleans are located. Why, it is a wonder he did not suggest that the Federal employees customhouse or a play ground be put in between.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. What is a coordinator?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. I am inclined to give it up, but I will make a guess. I think he is a humbug.

Mr. MADDEN. What else?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Besides that, I do not know. I am willing to say a coordinator—

Mr. MADDEN. I am serious.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. So am I.

Mr. MADDEN. What is his function?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. The function apparently of a coordinator is to secure information relating to the coordinating of different activities of the Government and submitting it and his recommendation to the chief coordinator, who transmits them to the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. MADDEN. Is he in the State Department, Commerce Department, or what?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. I always thought he was, in a measure at least, a subordinate of the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, no.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Oh, yes.

Mr. MADDEN. He is not in the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. If the gentleman will take the Congressional Directory, as made up for several years following the creation of the coordinators, he will see that it was grouped with the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. MADDEN. What department?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. He is under the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. MADDEN. General Smithers?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Yes. I am quite sure the coordinators were brought into existence to render some assistance, real or imaginary, to the Budget Bureau.

Mr. MADDEN. He is not a member of the Bureau of the Budget; he is in the Army.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Then the Congressional Directory as made up for several years was misleading, as well as the information I thought I had on the subject from the bureau itself.

Mr. MADDEN. Is he in the Army?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. I imagine so. I think I know what is in the gentleman's mind. There are so many Army officers that something had to be found for them to do. But you have entirely thrown me out of the position that I have always assumed and which I still adhere to, and that is in assuming that the coordinators are a part of the Budget Bureau.

Mr. BEGG. In how long does the gentleman from Illinois expect to get through?

Mr. MADDEN. I was trying to give the gentleman from Louisiana some information.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. For which I thank the gentleman from Illinois. I suppose he means the coordinators, to justify their existence, must deal in a lot of bunk. The idea of suggesting that a quarantine station should be located in a city near the Gulf of Mexico side by side with a marine hospital and next door to the slaughterhouses from which we get our meat supply is something that would not occur to me.

Mr. MADDEN. Was there serious objection to that?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Yes; almost a riotous one, or what threatened to be an enormous mass meeting, which was called off on the assurance of General Lord. I should imagine that the gentleman from Illinois, with his knowledge of a city like Chicago, with its hygienic and sanitary conditions and sociological problems arising from the stockyards and packing houses would understand the objection to a proposed coordination that would do violence to the pledge to the National Guard; and which for grotesque composition makes reasonable the weird confection of the three witches in Macbeth, around the caldron into which they threw hell broth, lizards' tails, and so forth.

Mr. MADDEN. I am asking for information. I knew the gentleman from Louisiana would have it. I knew there was no place else where I could get it so accurately as from the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. I thank the gentleman for the compliment; but I wonder if the gentleman from Illinois will not give expression in his characteristic way on some day when he is feeling fit, to his idea of coordinators. I hope I am present when he roars out "Bunk."

What I want to get to the House is the extraordinary suggestions of some coordinators and their plain disregard of the intent of Congress to give a preference to the National Guard of a State in reference to property which the Secretary of War is authorized to sell under certain circumstances.

Mr. MADDEN. I was ignorant of that fact.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Oh, the gentleman can not plead ignorance of any subject. He is the best informed man in the House, in my judgment. He knows coordinators and is just joshing. I am informed by an official high up in the health service that the recommendations of some of the coordinators would outdo in fancifulness any of the stories of de Maupassant or our own Edgar Allan Poe.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or donation, a tract of land containing approximately 6,007 acres in the vicinity of and for use as a target range in connection with Fort Ethan Allen, Vt., and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for such purpose a sum not to exceed $200,000 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was ordered to be laid on the table.

Mr. BRIGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the Record my remarks on the rifle range at Fort Ethan Allen, Vt.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRIGHAM. Mr. Speaker, the need of this artillery range is unquestioned. Fort Ethan Allen is a Cavalry and Field Artillery post. The Regular Army forces stationed there require a range for practice firing. Furthermore, it is the policy of the War Department to train various branches of the Reserve Army at Regular Army posts garrisoned by troops of the same branches. Since all the Field Artillery of the First Corps Area is stationed at Fort Ethan Allen, this post must train all the Field Artillery training forces for the First Corps Area.

The provision now being made for a range for target practice is outlined in the report of Secretary of War Davis concerning this bill. He says:

It is necessary at present to rent a rather inadequate range at an annual expenditure of $10,735, with the prospect of an advance in rentals next year when the options to purchase expire.

In addition to this we have been using, without cost to the Government (under license signed by the Governor of Vermont), 1,200 acres of State land. This privilege may be withdrawn at any time, which would entail the rental of additional privately owned areas at a considerably increased expenditure.

Now the situation is just this: The Government holds options on this property, and some additional property needed to make the range safe and adequate, with the privilege of purchase on or before January 1, 1927. All this property, as the Secretary of War points out, can be purchased at a price upon which the rental now paid for a part will pay 5.37 per cent of the interest. The Secretary states further:

If we add the rental to be expected if the State-owned land is withdrawn, it is apparent that the purchase would pay for itself in the matter of rental alone in a few years.

Senator GREENE shows in his statement the rental of the total area involved in this bill would cost the Government $34,866 per annum.

Prompt action now in passing this bill will make possible saving of the rentals for the ensuing year, beginning June 1, and will insure the War Department at reasonable cost an adequate target range in the First Corps Area for training the regular and civilian components of the Army.

As the Secretary of War says, in conclusion:

It appears therefore that both from a military viewpoint and from a business viewpoint the acquisition of this tract is advisable.

ADJUSTMENT OF WATER-RIGHT CHARGES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10429) to adjust water-right charges, to grant certain other relief on the Federal irrigation projects, to amend subsections E and F of section 4, act approved December 5, 1924, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice, and that it retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RETIREMENT FOR NURSE CORPS OF ARMY AND NAVY

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8953) to provide retirement for the nurse corps of the Army and Navy.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice and retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the lady from California?

There was no objection.

CASPER-ALCOVA RECLAMATION PROJECT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10356) to provide for the diversion of the waters of the North Platte River and construction of the Casper-Alcova reclamation project.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WINTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have this bill passed over without prejudice, and that it may retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, two weeks ago when this bill was first called up I said to the author, Mr. WINTER, of Wyoming, that I would object to its consideration until I could confer with Mr. Carpenter, our Colorado River water commissioner, and see if we could not come to an understanding as to the respective rights of the two States in and to the waters of the North Platte River and its tributaries. With understanding, the gentleman from Wyoming on the 5th instant asked that this bill be passed over without prejudice, and that was done.

The same bill passed the Senate without objection and is on this calendar now. I at once wired to our Colorado officials and Mr. Carpenter and our attorney general, Mr. Boardright, came on here from Colorado and they are here now and they and I are conferring with Mr. WINTER and Mr. Hopkins, and others are now endeavoring to come to an interstate agreement as to the fair division of the waters of that stream. Colorado and Wyoming have litigated over those waters for 12 years already, and we all hope that we may come to an amicable understanding and thereby obviate future litigations and controversy. So, if the gentleman from Wyoming will ask to pass the bill over again, I will not now object, and I trust before it comes up again we may reach an agreement between the two States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BIRTHPLACE OF HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8267) to authorize the coinage of copper 1-cent pieces to aid in the preservation of the birthplace of the world's best-loved poet, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Speaker, this measure was introduced by Mr. Thayer, of Massachusetts, late deceased, providing for the coinage of copper coins to aid in the preservation of the birthplace of Henry W. Longfellow. The Treasury Department has opposed the issuance of the coin, and the sponsors of the bill have suggested the substitution of a medal. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice and retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

OVERLAND COMMUNICATIONS ON THE SEWARD PENINSULA, ALASKA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the resolution (H. J. Res. 73) authorizing the improvement of the system of overland communications on the Seward Peninsula, Alaska.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that House Joint Resolution 73 be passed over without prejudice and retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alaska?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ARMY FIELD CLERKS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9512) to provide for appointing Army field clerks and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, warrant officers, United States Army.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 3283 be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the Senate bill 3283 be substituted for the House bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter Army field clerks and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, now in active service, shall have the rank, pay, allowances, retirement privileges, and benefits of warrant officers, other than those of the Army Mine Planter Service, and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to appoint them warrant officers of the Regular Army: Provided, That in determining length of service for longevity pay and retirement they shall be credited with and entitled to count the same military service as now authorized for warrant officers, including service as Army field clerks and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, and all classified field service rendered as headquarters clerks and clerks of the Quartermaster Corps: Provided further, That the limitation in the act of June 30, 1922, on the number of warrant officers, United States Army, shall not apply to the appointees hereunder.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A similar House bill, 9512, was laid on the table.

ALASKA RAILROAD

The next business on the Consent Calendar was House Joint Resolution 96, to authorize the President to pay to surgeons employed on the Alaska Railroad such sums as may be due them under agreement with the Alaskan Engineering Commission or the Alaska Railroad.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this resolution may be passed over without prejudice and retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alaska asks unanimous consent that House Joint Resolution No. 96 be passed over without prejudice and retain its place on the calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REVENUE ACT OF 1926

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10501) to repeal section 806 of the revenue act of 1926.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. What is the necessity for this bill?

Mr. HAWLEY. The necessity of distributing stamps among the post offices in the country has been done away with by the repeal of the various excise taxes, and all that are sold now are sold in the large centers.

Mr. BLANTON. This is a unanimous report from the gentleman's committee?

Mr. HAWLEY. So far as I know, it was a unanimous report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 806 of the revenue act of 1926 be, and is hereby, repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ARMY SUPPLY BASE, SOUTH BROOKLYN, N. Y.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 1486) to authorize the Secretary of War to lease to the Bush Terminal Railroad Co. and to the Long Island Railroad use of railway tracks at Army supply base, South Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have an amendment that would require the discontinuance of an action that is now pending in the courts by this company against the United States; and in order to make it clear that that is the intent of Congress, I want to insert an amendment on page 2, line 8. If that amendment is accepted, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. This bill requires three objections. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized, in his discretion, to enter into and execute, upon such terms and conditions as he considers advisable, a lease or leases, joint or several, to the Bush Terminal Railroad Co. and the Long Island Railroad authorizing, for the interchange of freight between said railroads during the term thereof, such use of the tracks of any Government railroad as may be maintained within the limits of the Army supply base at South Brooklyn, N. Y., as will not interfere with the proper and necessary use of said tracks by the Government in the transaction and operation of its own business at said Army supply base: Provided, That any such lease to the Bush Terminal Railroad Co. shall become effective only upon waiver and surrender by the Bush Terminal Railroad Co. of any and all claims against the United States in any manner accruing from, connected with, or growing out of the use, occupation, or curtailment by the United States of the franchise rights of said railroad company and of any and all claims of any character whatsoever against the United States, except for any balance which may be due such railroad company for the physical value of track and overhead appropriated and retained by the United States. The term of any such lease shall be for such period as the Secretary of War shall determine, not in excess of the unexpired portion of any franchise so appropriated or any renewal thereof.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 2, line 8, after the word "States," insert: "And the discontinuance, without cost, of any action now pending by the said company against the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EQUALIZATION OF PAY OF RETIRED OFFICERS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5840) to equalize the pay of retired officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. This bill requires three objections.

Mr. HILL of Alabama and Mr. MILLIGAN also objected.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARIES OF THE INDEPENDENCE OF VERMONT AND THE BATTLE OF BENNINGTON

The next business on the Consent Calendar was House Joint Resolution No. 176, establishing a commission for the participation of the United States in the observance of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversaries of the independence of Vermont and the Battle of Bennington, and authorizing an appropriation to be utilized in connection with such observance.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. WELSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this resolution be passed over without prejudice and retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that this resolution be passed over without prejudice and retain its place on the calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FISHERIES OF ALASKA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9210) to amend section 1 of the act of Congress of June 6, 1924, entitled "An act for the protection of the fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes."

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act of Congress of June 6, 1924, entitled "An act for the protection of the fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes," is amended so that it will read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That for the purpose of protecting and conserving the fisheries of the United States in all waters of Alaska the Secretary of Commerce from time to time may set apart and reserve fishing areas in any of the waters of Alaska over which the United States has jurisdiction, and within such areas may establish closed seasons during which fishing may be limited or prohibited as he may prescribe. Under this authority to limit fishing in any area so set apart and reserved the Secretary may (a) fix the size and character of nets, boats, traps, or other gear and appliances to be used therein; (b) limit the catch of fish to be taken from any area; (c) make such regulations as to time, means, methods, and extent of fishing as he may deem advisable. From and after the creation of any such fishing area and during the time fishing is prohibited therein it shall be unlawful to fish therein or to operate therein any boat, seine, trap, or other gear or apparatus for the purpose of taking fish; and from and after the creation of any such fishing area in which limited fishing is permitted such fishing shall be carried on only during the time, in the manner, to the extent, and in conformity with such rules and regulations as the Secretary prescribes under the authority herein given: Provided, That every such regulation made by the Secretary of Commerce shall be of general application within the particular area to which it applies, and that no exclusive or several right of fishery shall be granted therein, nor shall any citizen of the United States be denied the right to take, prepare, cure, or preserve fish or shellfish in any area of the waters of Alaska where fishing is permitted by the Secretary of Commerce. The right herein given to establish fishing areas and to permit limited fishing therein shall not apply to any creek, stream, river, or other bodies of water in which fishing is prohibited by specific provisions of this act, but the Secretary of Commerce, through the creation of such areas and the establishment of closed seasons, may further extend the restrictions and limitations imposed upon fishing by specific provisions of this or any other act of Congress: Provided further, That the Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized to permit the taking of fish or shellfish, for bait purposes only, at any or all seasons in any or all Alaskan Territorial waters.

"It shall be unlawful to import or bring into the Territory of Alaska, for purposes other than personal use and not for sale or barter, salmon from waters outside the jurisdiction of the United States taken during any closed period provided for by this act or regulations made thereunder."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DAM ACROSS THE POTEAU RIVER

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4080) granting the consent of Congress to the city of Fort Smith, Sebastian County, Ark., and the Fort Smith waterworks district of said city to construct, maintain, and operate a dam across the Poteau River.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma, Mr. CRAMTON, and Mr. McCLINTIC objected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 120. An act fixing the fees of jurors and witnesses in the United States courts, including the District Court of Hawaii, the District Court of Porto Rico, and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia;

H. R. 5858. An act for the relief of Charles Ritzel;

H. R. 6874. An act for the relief of James Madison Brown; and

H. R. 8192. An act authorizing the designation of postmasters by the Postmaster General as disbursing officers for the payment of contractors, emergency carriers, and temporary carriers for performance of authorized service on power-boat and star routes in Alaska.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10198) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable, in whole or in part, against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon and ordered that Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. CAPPER, Mr. GLASS, and Mr. KENDRICK be appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

JUPITER, FLA.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8903) to donate to the town, municipality, or city of Jupiter, Fla., for park purposes, the abandoned tract or tracts of land formerly used as a life-saving station.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS] accept an amendment to sell this land en bloc instead of going into the retail real-estate business? If the gentleman will, I shall be glad to withdraw my objection.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. My friend, the gentleman from Ohio, knows the esteem in which I hold him, and will the gentleman permit an amendment to that providing that 5 acres be reserved for park purposes?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to join in the appeal of the gentleman from Florida. I think there ought to be some place down there where somebody can sit down for half an hour without paying rent.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Or take a swim.

Mr. CRAMTON. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will accept the amendment from the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. BEGG. Let me hear the amendment of the gentleman.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Provided that not less than 5 acres be reserved for park purposes.

Mr. BEGG. Five acres of ocean front?

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. I do not object to that, although I do not accept it with any enthusiasm.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. I will say to my good friend from Ohio, in order that my record may be kept clear, that I have opposed the block sale in Florida for this reason: If you sell it in block only one man can bid on it. Therefore, you are not going to get as much for it as you would if you sold it in lots. In the sale of Chapman Field I protested, and the War Department has that protest on file. The Government will perhaps have to come here, and I will have to ask my good friend and colleague from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] to make an appropriation of nearly as much as they got for the 600 acres for the purchase of 100 acres for a landing field. I did that in good faith because, as I have said, I want everybody to have a chance to bid on these lots. It is to be a public sale, and you can not buy for less than the appraised value. My friends, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LA GUARDIA] and the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] and other members of the committee know this is not the bill I drew up; but I accept this bill because it is the best I can get, and I will accept the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio with my amendment because I realize the situation.

Mr. BEGG. I will say, and I think this ought to be said, inasmuch as the gentleman has made his statement, my reason for objecting to the Government going into the retail real-estate business is this: I think the net return to the Government from a block sale will be greater than if we go into the retail business. If we have 5 or 10 lots left or if anybody defaults on any of them, we have got to go through a suit of foreclosure and collection, and the amount of money spent by the Interior Department agents in running back and forth down there will eat up half the gross proceeds. I think if we want to sell it, we should sell it in block and get rid of it, and I will not object to the gentleman's amendment with respect to 5 acres, although I do not think that is necessary.

Mr. SINNOTT. Does the gentleman think that his amendment is a wise one?

Mr. BEGG. Yes; or I would not offer it.

Mr. SINNOTT. This property is worth $10,000 an acre, and there are 80 acres of it. Only some one possessing $700,000 or $1,000,000 ready to invest it in this kind of property can buy it. It is only some real-estate speculator who would enter into a proposition of that kind who will buy it.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. SINNOTT. In just a moment. Let the department divide the property up as the department contemplates doing and then you will have a number of bidders and will not practically turn it over to some wealthy individual who is the only person who can buy under your proposition. This matter has had very careful consideration by the Secretary of the Interior and also by the Public Lands Committee of the House.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. In this property that the War Department was permitted to sell a few weeks ago, are they going to divide that up into small farms or lots or sell it en gros?

Mr. SINNOTT. I do not know what they are going to do, and I know nothing about that property; but I do know something about this situation.

Mr. BEGG. It seems to me it is entirely a wrong theory of governmental activity to put the Government into the allotment business in selling lots.

Mr. SINNOTT. They have frequently done that for years and years and have handled it successfully.

Mr. BEGG. And just a few weeks ago we had a bill up here to correct and clean up a sale of that kind in Alaska.

Mr. SINNOTT. And we have had hundreds of bills to clean up general-block sales?

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. When the Interior Department sells land there is no large charge against it for expenses. The expense of the sale is a very small percentage, according to their way of doing business, because they do not go outside and get expensive auctioneers, and so forth.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield for a question on that point?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. How are they going to sell this land in lots unless they have it surveyed and run off and everything of that kind?

Mr. SEARS of Florida. That does not cost much.

Mr. CRAMTON. We have our surveying service. I think there is a great deal of merit in what the gentleman from Oregon has said. The gentleman is very familiar with the handling of public lands. In an $800,000 proposition you limit the opportunity for the Government to get its fair value.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. If the gentleman will yield, it simply means one man can bid on this land, but the other way gives everybody a chance.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. What will happen is that some New York corporation or some other group of men will go down there, bid on it in block, and then they will cut it up into lots and sell it and make an enormous profit.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. To be frank with my friend, I know that is the case right now. There is one party prepared to bid on this land.

Mr. BEGG. My answer to that is if the Government sells it in one lump, I do not care whether there is 1 bidder or 10 bidders, the Government will have its money. If the Government goes into the allotment business, they probably will not get the money.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Judging from what has been said about this particular land, it seems to me if your plan is followed we are simply turning this land over to a certain individual down there at his own price.

Mr. BEGG. Oh, no.

Mr. WOODRUFF. If there is to be only one bidder, what other answer can there be?

Mr. BEGG. This is to be a sale at public auction.

Mr. WOODRUFF. If there is only one man who can handle it, it will go at his own price.

Mr. BEGG. I think there will be more than one bidder.

Mr. WOODRUFF. If the gentleman from Ohio insists on his amendment, I shall object to the bill.

Mr. SINNOTT. I fear that the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio will just invite some wealthy syndicate or some syndicate to get together and handle that property.

Mr. BEGG. Well, let the matter go over until we can talk it over. I am thoroughly committed, I will say to the gentleman from Florida. Men came to me from this small town to get me to withdraw my objection. Before I was through they said that I was right and thanked me and did not want it allotted. Here is what will happen: Suppose the Government fails to sell five lots, or two lots, before they can improve a street they have to come and get permission of Congress—

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

Mr. BEGG. I shall object unless my amendment is adopted.

Mr. WOODRUFF. And I shall object to the bill if the amendment is agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HILL of Maryland, Mr. WELSH, and Mr. BEGG objected.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill retain its place on the calendar.

Mr. BEGG. This bill has been objected to three times, and that takes the bill off the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard, and the clerk will report the next bill.

TO VALIDATE CERTAIN DECLARATIONS OF INTENTION

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3859) to validate certain declarations of intentions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of the seventh subdivision of section 4 of the act entitled "An act to establish a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization and to provide for a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States," approved June 29, 1906, as amended, as reads as follows: "Provided, That it shall not be lawful to make a declaration of intention before the clerk of any court on election day or during the period of 30 days preceding the day of holding of any election within the jurisdiction of the court," is repealed.

SEC. 2. No declaration of intention heretofore filed in disregard of so much of such act of 1906 as is above repealed shall be held invalid for such cause.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ALLOTING WAR TROPHIES TO THE AMERICAN LEGION MUSEUM

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 114) directing the Secretary of War to allot war trophies to the American Legion Museum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have just been informed that the Senate has passed this identical resolution. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resolution may be substituted for the House resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate Joint Resolution 91, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be directed to allot and deliver without cost to the United States, to the National Museum of the American Legion at its national headquarters, a representative collection of captured and surrendered war devices and trophies of the World War, to be selected from those war devices and trophies not otherwise allotted and accepted for distribution in accordance with law; Provided, That acceptance, shipment, and delivery shall be made within a reasonable time and under the laws and regulations, except as herein provided, that are now applicable to acceptance, shipment, and delivery of war devices and trophies to the States, Territories, possessions of the United States, and the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

House Joint Resolution 114 was laid on the table.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE SUPREME COURT REPORTS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10701) to provide for the distribution of the Supreme Court reports and amending section 227 of the Judicial Code.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. I object.

Mr. GRAHAM. What is the gentleman's objection?

Mr. MADDEN. There are not sufficient now to give all the district attorneys a copy of these reports, and until a sufficient number is provided I think we ought to confine the Army to a study of military tactics.

Mr. GRAHAM. It makes a difference of only 12 reports. This is to furnish the court-martials approved by the Attorney General and the Secretary of War and is approved by the Bureau of the Budget.

PURCHASE OF QUARANTINE STATIONS, TEX.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10782) relating to the purchase of quarantine stations from the State of Texas.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute for this bill a similar Senate bill (S. 3287) now on the Speaker's table.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, is it the same bill?

Mr. BOX. It is identical.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the substitution of the similar Senate bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the authority contained in the sundry civil act approved June 5, 1920 (41 Stats. p. 875), may be construed to permit of the purchase of the lands, and/or buildings, and/or equipment, or portions thereof, of the quarantine stations of the State of Texas to which good and sufficient title can be conveyed by the State of Texas to the United States without regard to the quarantine system or stations as a whole, appropriate deduction to be made from the appropriation therefor on account of such property to which good title can not be given by the State of Texas, using as a basis therefor the joint-appraisal report of representatives of the United States Government and the State of Texas, dated August 16, 1919.

SEC. 2. No buildings shall be purchasable under the authority of this act unless title can be given by the State of Texas to land on which situated, except in the case of those buildings of the quarantine station at Galveston, Tex., now situated on land owned by the United States Government, payment for which buildings is hereby authorized if good and sufficient title in the State of Texas can otherwise be shown to said buildings.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The similar House bill (H. R. 10782) was ordered to lie on the table.

INSURANCE COMPANIES TO FILE BILLS OF INTERPLEADER

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 2296) authorizing insurance companies or associations or fraternal or beneficial societies to file bills of interpleader.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is the usual interpleader where there are two claimants to the same insurance?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the district courts of the United States shall have original jurisdiction to entertain and determine suits in equity begun by bills of interpleader duly verified, filed by any insurance company or association or fraternal or beneficial society, and averring that one or more persons who are bona fide claimants against such company, association, or society resides or reside within the territorial jurisdiction of said court; that such company, association, or society has issued a policy of insurance or certificate of membership providing for the payment of $500 or more as insurance, indemnity, or benefits to a beneficiary, beneficiaries, or the heirs, next to kin, legal representatives, or assignee of the person insured or member; that two or more adverse claimants, citizens of different States, are claiming to be entitled to such insurance, indemnity, or benefits; that such company, association, or society has paid the amount thereof into the registry of the court, there to abide the judgment of the court.

SEC. 2. In all such cases if the policy or certificate is drawn payable to the estate of the insured and has not been assigned in accordance with the terms of the policy or certificate the district court of the district of the residence of the personal representative of the insured shall have jurisdiction of such suit. In case the policy or certificate has been assigned during the life of the insured in accordance with the terms of the policy or certificate, the district court of the district of the residence of the assignee or of his personal representative shall have jurisdiction. In case the policy or certificate is drawn payable to a beneficiary or beneficiaries and there has been no such assignment as aforesaid the jurisdiction shall be in the district court of the district in which the beneficiary or beneficiaries or their personal representatives reside. In case there are beneficiaries resident in more districts than one, then jurisdiction shall be in the district court in any district in which a beneficiary or the personal representative of a deceased beneficiary resides. Notwithstanding any provision of the Judicial Code to the contrary, said court shall have power to issue its process for all such claimants and to issue an order of injunction against each of them, enjoining them from instituting or prosecuting any suit or proceeding in any State court or in any other Federal court on such policy or certificate of membership until the further order of the court; which process and order of injunction shall be returnable at such time as the said court or a judge thereof shall determine and shall be addressed to and served by the United States marshals for the respective districts wherein said claimants reside or may be found.

SEC. 3. Said court shall hear and determine the cause and shall discharge the complainant from further liability; and shall make the injunction permanent and enter all such other orders and decrees as may be suitable and proper, and issue all such customary writs as may be necessary or convenient to carry out and enforce the same.

SEC. 4. Public Act No. 346, Sixty-fourth Congress, entitled "An act authorizing insurance companies and fraternal beneficiary societies to file bills of interpleader," approved February 22, 1917, and Public Act No. 465, Sixty-eighth Congress, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act authorizing insurance companies or associations and fraternal beneficiary societies to file bills of interpleader,' approved February 22, 1917," approved February 25, 1925, be and the same are hereby repealed. Said repeal shall not affect any act done or any right, accruing or accrued in any suit or proceeding had or commenced under said acts hereby repealed, prior to the passage of this act, but all such acts or rights, suits or proceedings shall continue and be valid and may be prosecuted and enforced in the same manner as if said acts had not been repealed hereby.

Mr. GRAHAM severally offered the following amendments, and they were severally agreed to:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "any," insert "casualty company, surety company."

Page 1, line 10, after the word "society," insert "has in its custody or possession money or property of the value of $500 or more, or."

Page 1, line 11, after the word "issued," insert a bond or."

Page 1, line 12, after the word "more," insert "to the obligee or obligees in such bond or."

Page 2, line 5, after the word "to," insert "such money or property or the penalty of such bond, or to."

Page 2, line 6, after the word "has," insert "deposited such money or property or has."

Page 2, line 6, after the word "amount," insert the word "thereof."

Page 2, line 23, after the word "are," insert "claimants of such money or property, of in case there are."

Page 2, line 24, after the word "beneficiaries," insert "under any such bond or policy."

Page 3, line 1, after the word "or," insert "a claimant or."

Page 3, line 1, after the word "deceased," insert "claimant or."

Page 3, line 7, after the words "Federal Court," insert "on account of such money or property or on such bond or."

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING INSURANCE COMPANIES TO FILE BILLS OF INTERPLEADER

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, the bill S. 2296 authorizes insurance companies or associations or fraternal or beneficial societies to file bills of interpleader. The House Judiciary Committee has favorably reported this bill as follows:

(Report to accompany S. 2296)

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill S. 2296, after consideration, report the same favorably and recommend that the bill do pass.

The only change made in the present law by this bill is found in the last sentence of section 2 of the bill as follows:

"Notwithstanding any provision of the Judicial Code to the contrary, said court shall have power to issue its process for all such claimants and to issue an order of injunction against each of them, enjoining them from instituting or prosecuting any suit or proceeding in any State court or in any other Federal court on such policy or certificate of membership until the further order of the court, which process and order of injunction shall be returnable at such time as the said court or a judge thereof shall determine and shall be addressed to and served by the United States marshals for the respective districts wherein said claimants reside or may be found."

The amendment is necessary in order to make more adequate the power of the court in the handling and disposition of bills of interpleader in suits authorized by the act of February 25, 1925, which is reenacted by this bill.

Baltimore is the home city of the surety companies. The Fidelity & Deposit Co., the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., the Maryland Casualty Co., and various other great companies are deeply interested in the pending legislation. As the bill passed the Senate and has been reported to the House it did not contain certain amendments which should be included in order to take care of the surety companies. Senator BRUCE has gone over this whole matter with Senator PEPPER, who introduced S. 2296, and Senator PEPPER has no objection to casualty and surety companies being included. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] has agreed to the desired amendments to the present bill, which are as follows:

AMENDMENTS TO SENATE BILL 2296

A bill (S. 2296) authorizing insurance companies or associations or fraternal or beneficial societies to file bills of interpleader

Amend page 1, line 5, by inserting at the end thereof, after the word "any," the words "casualty company, surety company."

Amend page 1, line 10, by inserting at the end thereof, after the word "society," the words "has in its custody or possession money or property of the value of $500 or more, or."

Amend page 1, line 11, by inserting after the word "issued" the words "a bond or."

Amend page 1, line 12, by inserting after the word "more" the words "to the obligee or obligees in such bond or."

Amend page 2, line 5, by inserting after the word "to" the words "such money or property or the penalty of such bond, or to."

Amend page 2, line 6, by inserting after the word "has" the words "deposited such money or property or has."

Amend page 2, line 6, by striking out the word "thereof" and inserting the words "of such bond or policy."

Amend page 2, line 23, by inserting at the end thereof, after the word "are," the words "claimants of such money or property or in case there are."

Amend page 2, line 24, by inserting after the word "beneficiaries" the words "under any such bond or policy."

Amend page 3, line 1, by inserting at the beginning, before the word "a," the words "a claimant or."

Amend page 3, line 1, by inserting at the end of the line, after the word "deceased," the words "claimant or."

Amend page 3, line 7, by inserting after the words "Federal court" the words "on account of such money or property or on such bond or."

In reference to this bill, I am advised by the Fidelity & Deposit Co. as follows:

The statute which is sought to be amended was passed some eight or nine years ago after an insurance company had been put in the unfortunate position of having a suit instituted against it in one State by one set of alleged heirs of a man and a similar suit in another State by another set, the result being that they were held liable in both suits, and therefore paid the amount of the policy twice. Senator PEPPER's amendment is, as I understand it, only intended to straighten out some of the procedure in order to accomplish the result originally intended. Our amendment is intended to bring casualty and surety companies within the provisions of the statute, so as to give us similar protection. While casualty and surety companies are for many purposes treated by the Government as insurance companies, the original wording of the bill and Senator PEPPER's amendment is not broad enough to bring casualty and surety companies within its provisions, as the language used contemplates an insurance policy only. The necessity for such protection to surety and casualty companies is illustrated by a recent experience we had. Under a bond given to protect all the shippers of grain to a certain elevator in Minnesota our principal defaulted, and we were ready and willing to pay the penalty of our bond, but there was no one to whom we could pay, as the claims exceeded the amount of the bond, and some of the shippers lived in Minnesota, some in Iowa, and some in the Dakotas. The result was that we had not only to pay the penalty of our bond but over $6,000 interest and several thousand dollars in attorney's fees and expenses, all of which would have been obviated if we could have filed a bill of interpleader and paid the money into court. While, unfortunately, such cases are not frequent occurrences, they are becoming more frequent as time goes by, and, as you well know, business does not regard State lines, which do, however, fix the limits of the jurisdiction of the courts.

The pending bill is an important one, and the amendments materially extend the usefulness of the legislation here enacted.

COINAGE OF COPPER 1-CENT PIECES

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 289 (H. R. 8267) to authorize the coinage of copper 1-cent pieces to aid in the preservation of the birthplace of the world's best loved poet, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Is that the Thayer bill?

Mr. THURSTON. Yes; but we have a substitute which we desire to offer.

Mr. BLANTON. But we want to see the substitute first. The gentleman ought to wait until the next day the calendar is called. We do not know what the substitute is. I hope the gentleman will not ask for that now. We are going to have another consent day.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is very short.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, for the present I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

AMENDING THE IMMIGRATION ACT OF 1924

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10661) to amend the immigration act of 1924.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (d) of section 4 of the immigration act of 1924 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "an immigrant who is the wife, or the unmarried child under 18 years of age, of an alien resident of the United States who entered the United States prior to July 1, 1924, and who continuously for at least two years immediately preceding the time of his admission to the United States for permanent residence was, and who entered the United States solely for the purpose of carrying on the vocation of minister of any religious denomination or professor of a college, academy, seminary, or university, if such immigrant is following to join such alien; or"

SEC. 2. Despite the provisions of the immigration act of 1924, the Secretary of Labor is authorized to admit to the United States for permanent residence any otherwise admissible alien who (1) is the wife or the unmarried child under 18 years of age of an alien resident of the United States who entered the United States prior to July 1, 1924, and who continuously for at least two years immediately preceding the time of his admission to the United States for permanent residence was, and who entered the United States solely for the purpose of, carrying on the vocation of minister of any religious denomination or professor of a college, academy, seminary, or university, and (2) who arrived at a United States port of entry between May 26, 1924, and July 1, 1924, and were thereafter temporarily admitted.

DISPOSITION OF MONEYS OF LEGALLY ADJUDGED INSANE OF ALASKA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 3213) to provide for the disposition of moneys of the legally adjudged insane of Alaska who have been cared for by the Secretary of the Interior.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is not the five-year period provided for in the bill too short a time to hold this money and convert it into the Treasury?

Mr. DRIVER. Five years after paid in, and five years in which to make payment, and the five-year limit is predicated upon the theory of the investigation that is required by the Interior Department to ascertain the location of the—

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Is the proof required to recover when it is converted into the Treasury any greater than if made in five years when in the custody of the Department of the Interior?

Mr. DRIVER. Not at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter all moneys belonging to persons legally adjudged insane in the Territory of Alaska and deposited by them with the person, firm, corporation, or institution under contract with the Department of the Interior for the care of the Alaskan insane who have died in such institution, or under the care of such person, firm, or corporation, been discharged therefrom, or who have eloped and whose whereabouts is unknown, shall, if unclaimed by said person or their legal heirs within the period of five years from the time of death of the person or the date of the leaving of the institution, or the care of such person, firm, or corporation, be covered into the Treasury by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, however, That the unclaimed moneys belonging to those who have heretofore died or left the institution, or the care of such person, firm, or corporation, prior to the date of this act, shall, at the end of five years from the passage of this act, also be deposited in the Treasury, subject, however, to reclamation by such persons or their legal heirs within five years from the date of this act.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed, under such regulations as he may prescribe, to make or cause diligent inquiry to be made, in every instance after the death, discharge, or elopement of any legally adjudged insane person of Alaska, to ascertain his whereabouts, or that of his or her legal heirs, and thereafter turn over to the proper party any moneys in the hands of the institution, person, firm, or corporation, etc., to the credit of such person. Claims may be presented to the Secretary of the Interior hereunder at any time, and when established by competent proof in any case more than five years after the death, discharge, or elopement of such legally adjudged insane person of Alaska, shall be certified to Congress for consideration.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN NATIONAL PARK

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9390) to eliminate certain privately owned lands from the Rocky Mountain National Park and to transfer certain other lands from the Rocky Mountain National Park to the Colorado National Forest, Colo.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That portions of the north and east boundary of the Rocky Mountain National Park are hereby revised as follows: "North boundary, beginning at the northwest corner of the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 33, township 7 north, range 74 west, being a point on the present north boundary line of the Rocky Mountain National Park; thence southerly to the southwest corner of the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of said section; thence westerly to the southeast corner of the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of said section; thence northerly to the north-

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to permit, by license, lease, or other authorization, the use of necessary land in the Rocky Mountain National Park for the maintenance and operation in its present height and capacity of the Arbuckle No. 2 reservoir.

SEC. 3. That the provisions of the act of January 26, 1915, entitled "An act to establish the Rocky Mountain National Park in the State of Colorado, and for other purposes," and act of August 25, 1916, entitled "An act to establish a national-park service, and for other purposes," and all acts supplementary to and amendatory of said acts are made applicable to and extended over the lands hereby added to the park: Provided, That the provisions of the act of June 10, 1920, entitled "An act to create a Federal power commission, to provide for the improvement of navigation, the development of water power, the use of the public lands in relation thereto, and to repeal section 18 of the river and harbor appropriation act, approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes," shall not apply to or extend over such lands.

DISPOSITION OF CERTAIN LANDS IN FLORIDA

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 305 and consider the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 305. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read the title of the bill:

A bill (H. R. 8903) to donate to the town, municipality, or city of Jupiter, Fla., for park purposes, the abandoned tract or tracts of land formerly used as a life-saving station.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Without objection, the Clerk will read the amendment and not the matter stricken out.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That lots 4 and 5, section 5, township 41 south, range 43 east, Florida, containing 8.25 acres, formerly used as a life-saving station but having been abandoned for that purpose, are hereby placed under the control of the Secretary of the Interior for disposition as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior may cause the said lands to be subdivided into town lots, blocks, streets, and alleys of such dimensions as he may deem advisable, reserving not more than 5 acres for park, school, and other public purposes. Except as to the reservations mentioned he shall cause the said town lots so surveyed and subdivided, and each tract thereof, to be appraised by three competent and disinterested men to be appointed by him. When the appraisement has been approved by him he shall cause the said lots to be sold at public auction to the highest bidder on such terms as he may prescribe, at not less than the appraised value thereof, first having given not less than 60 days' public notice of the time, place, and terms of sale immediately prior to such sale by publication in at least one newspaper having a general circulation in the section of the country in which the lands are situated and in such other newspapers as he may deem advisable; that any lots remaining unsold may be reoffered for sale at any subsequent time in the same manner at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior; and if not sold at such second offering for want of bidders then the Secretary of the Interior shall sell the same at private sale for cash at not less than the appraised value.

SEC. 3. That when a town is organized as a municipality embracing the lands in question the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to issue patent to the said municipality for all reservations, for parks, schools, and other public purposes, to be maintained for such purposes only.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment to the amendment. Page 2, line 25, after the word "acres" insert "on the ocean front." That is to give to the town of Jupiter this park on the ocean front.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 25, after the word "acres" insert "on the ocean front."

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is an amendment in the third degree, but without objection the gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

There was no objection.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I merely want to make a statement that I was persuaded to withdraw my objection to this bill after considerable argument on the statement by the gentleman from Florida that it might be interpreted in his country as a reflection on him if he was unable to get this bill passed. I do not care to do that against anybody. I do not think it is a good policy for the Government to go into the real estate business in a retail way. Not having changed my views a bit, but in order to prevent doing an unfairness to a colleague, I agreed to withdraw my objection, and I wanted that in the RECORD. I think again that this is the poorest kind of governmental business, and to embark upon it is a mistake.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I was one of the objectors and I withdrew my objection because of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York placing in the bill the words "on the ocean front."

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my friend and colleague from Ohio. This is not the bill that I wanted, as the members of the committee will state, but it is the best that I can get.

Mr. MADDEN. I will say I am going to object if anybody is going to make any more speeches.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out section 3, because the town of Jupiter has been incorporated. I think it is surplus at this time. I move to strike out section 3.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, beginning in line 18, strike out all of section 3.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. I ask that the title be amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ADDITIONAL BUILDINGS AT CERTAIN NAVAL HOSPITALS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10732) to authorize the construction of necessary additional buildings at certain naval hospitals, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas objects.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER rose.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman from Pennsylvania satisfied with his blanket bill, passed the other day?

Mr. BUTLER. Not altogether, but it is the best that can be done.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania wants to be heard on this, I will reserve my objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, the bill (H. R. 10732) provides an authorization for funds for the construction of certain facilities at different naval hospitals in the United States and Territories.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, being overwhelmed here, I will withdraw my reservation.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I thank the very generous gentleman from Texas and will discontinue my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to construct necessary additional buildings at the naval hospitals at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, laboratory and mortuary building, $35,000; Great Lakes, Ill., boiler plant and connecting line, $200,000; Puget Sound, Wash., extension to mess hall and galley, $32,000; Guam, mess hall and galley, $18,000; San Diego, Calif., officers' ward building, 50 beds, $150,000; which expenditure for the purposes aforesaid shall be made from the naval hospital fund.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was ordered to be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

SESQUICENTENNIAL OF AMERICAN INDEPENDENCE AND THE THOMAS JEFFERSON CENTENNIAL COMMISSION OF THE UNITED STATES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the resolution (S. J. Res. 30) authorizing the establishment of a commission to be known as the Sesquicentennial of American Independence and the Thomas Jefferson Centennial Commission of the United States, in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence and the one hundredth anniversary of the death of Thomas Jefferson, the author of that immortal document.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to get some information. I notice that the resolution says no appropriation shall be made by Congress to carry out its purposes. Have they devised some way of carrying on the celebration? When they have devised the plan, will that plan provide an appropriation of several million dollars?

Mr. BACON. If the consent of Congress is required in that plan, Congress will be appealed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. I understood it would be worked out without an appropriation by Congress.

Mr. BACON. That is my understanding.

Mr. CRAMTON. If it were the idea that it was going to lead to a plan costing several million dollars, it would be a good plan to stop it now; but with the statement of the gentleman from New York, I shall have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution, omitting the matter stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby established a commission to be known as the Sesqui-Centennial of American Independence and the Thomas Jefferson Centennial Commission of the United States, in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence and the one hundredth anniversary of the death of Thomas Jefferson, the author of that immortal document (hereinafter referred to as the commission), and to be composed of 19 commissioners, as follows:

The President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, ex officio; eight persons to be appointed by the President of the United States; four Senators by the Vice President; and four Representatives by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SEC. 2. The commissioners shall serve without compensation, and shall select a chairman from among their number, and no appropriation shall be made by Congress to carry out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of the commissioners to promulgate to the American people an address relating to the reason of the creation of the commission and of its purposes and to prepare a plan or plans for a program in cooperation with the officers and board of governors of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Foundation, and the other National, State, city, civic, and patriotic committees, and other Jefferson centennial committees appointed throughout the country for the purpose of properly commemorating those signal events which have brought this commission into being; and to give due and proper consideration to any plan or plans which may be submitted to them; and to take such steps as may be necessary in the coordination and correlation of the various plans which may be submitted to the commission; and if the participation of other nations be deemed advisable, to communicate with the governments of such nations.

SEC. 4. When the commission shall have approved of a plan of celebration, then it shall submit for their consideration and approval such plan or plans, in so far as it or they may relate to the fine arts, to the Commission of Fine Arts, in Washington, for their approval, and in accordance with statutory requirements.

SEC. 5. That the commission hereby created shall expire within two years after the expiration of the celebration, December 31, 1926.

SEC. 6. This joint resolution shall take effect immediately.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the title will be amended so as to read: "Authorizing the establishment of a commission to be known as the Sesquicentennial of American Independence and the Thomas Jefferson Centennial Commission of the United States, in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence."

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was ordered to be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

USE OF PUBLIC LANDS FOR RECREATIONAL PURPOSES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10773) to authorize acquisition or use of public lands by States, counties, or municipalities for recreational purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOODRUFF. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT], if he is present, a question about this bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman from Oregon has been called out to attend an important conference of Members from the West interested in reclamation matters, and he asked me, so far as I was able, to answer any questions. I do not know whether I can answer the gentleman's question, but I shall be glad to if I can.

Mr. WOODRUFF. To what extent are the national forests to be used for recreational purposes?

Mr. CRAMTON. They can not be so used at all under this act, because this act has only to do with public lands under the Interior Department.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman from Michigan in favor of this bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Very much so.

Mr. BLANTON. Since when?

Mr. CRAMTON. Since I learned there was such a bill. I have been in favor of the purposes of such a bill for a long time. It grew out of the recreational conference organized by the President, representing the different departments. They had a rather impressive program, but this is a small part of it.

Mr. BLANTON. It does not call for an enlarged program?

Mr. CRAMTON. No. It authorizes certain exchanges.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized, in his discretion, to withhold from all forms of appropriation unreserved nonmineral public lands, which have been classified by him as chiefly valuable for recreational purposes and are not desired for Federal administration, and to accept title on behalf of the United States from any States in and to lands granted by Congress to such State, and in exchange therefor to patent to such State an equal quantity or value of surveyed land so withheld and classified, any patent so issued to contain a reservation to the United States of all mineral deposits in the land conveyed and of the right to mine and remove same, under regulations to be established by the Secretary, and a provision for reversion of title to the United States upon a finding by the Secretary of the Interior that for a period of five consecutive years such land has not been used by the State for park or recreational purposes, or that such land or any part thereof is being devoted to other use: Provided, That lands so withheld and classified may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be also held subject to purchase and may be purchased by the State or county in which the lands are situated, or by an adjacent municipality in the same State, at a price to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, through appraisal or otherwise, subject to the same reservation of mineral deposits and the same provision for reversion of title as are prescribed for conveyances to the States in consummation of exchanges hereby authorized, or be held subject to lease and may be leased to such States, counties, or municipalities for recreational use at a reasonable annual rental for a period of 20 years, with privilege of renewal for a like period. And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make all necessary rules and regulations for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into effect.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

M'LENNAN COUNTY, TEX.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9212) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to McLennan County, in the State of Texas, the sum of $20,020.60 compensation for the appropriation and destruction of an improved public road passing through the military camp at Waco, Tex., in said county, by the Government of the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas a question. Is the gentleman from Texas willing to say to this House that when they sought to locate this camp and aviation field at Waco they did not at least imply that they were doing this for the Government without cost?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Well, I will ask the gentleman what he means by "doing that without cost"?

Mr. BEGG. Locating this aviation field there.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will explain the situation.

Mr. BEGG. If there was an understanding, implied or expressed, that the Government was to pay for the damage they did then I think we owe this debt, but if, on the other hand, the city of Waco—and among all cities within any reasonable radius of these camps there was a rivalry to get them located there—implied that if the Government would locate there they would furnish this land, I do not think they have a leg to stand on, so to speak, in asking compensation for damages. If the gentleman from Texas will state, on his word, that there was no such implication from the city of Waco, I shall not object.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will say to the gentleman that the gentleman from Texas is not going to state on his word anything he does not know. The gentleman from Texas was not there and he does not personally know about what the gentleman is asking, but the gentleman from Texas can briefly explain the circumstances surrounding this matter as they appear to be.

Mr. BEGG. That is not an answer so far as the gentleman from Ohio is concerned, because I think I know all of the facts.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. All of the land within this field except the public roads was leased by the Government and it paid rent for it. There was no gratis matter about that at all. There was a public highway that went through the field—

Mr. BEGG. May I interrupt the gentleman right there to ask him a question?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Did the Government just go in and practically coerce the holders of this land to lease it or did the city of Waco tender the Government this land with a road on it?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. No; I will say to the gentleman that neither one of his assumptions is correct.

Mr. BEGG. I would like to have the gentleman explain the circumstances.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The War Department, early in the war, decided that these aviation camps—and for that matter all training camps—should be located somewhere in the country where the weather would give the opportunity of all-year flying, so the result was that most of them were located in the South.

Of course, Waco wanted these camps, like every other city wanted them, but as a matter of fact that chamber of commerce at Waco went out and leased from the owners the lands which the Government thought were desirable for aviation purposes; then the chamber of commerce in turn leased those lands to the Government and the Government paid rent each year on every acre that was in the field. Within this aviation field there were several tracts. Here was one tract, there was another tract, and over there was another tract, and they leased all of those tracts. This improved highway passed through what was afterwards the field. Now, the chamber of commerce at Waco agreed with the Government that it would have those roads closed and the county voluntarily closed them to travel. The county received no compensation or rent. It closed the roads to accommodate the Government. After they were closed to travel the Government came along and plowed up part of the road, dynamited a concrete bridge on the road, filled up the ditches and leveled them. Now, the contract between the chamber of commerce, who had leased the lands from the private owners, and the Government contained provisions about damage to lands and fixed the rights of the parties. But the county had no contract and received no rent.

Mr. BEGG. That is just exactly the information I wanted.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. But the county was not a party to that contract.

Mr. BEGG. That does not make any difference.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. And consequently the owners, who had their contract with the Government, could present their claims to the War Department, but the county, having no contract, must come to Congress.

Mr. BEGG. As far as I am concerned, the gentleman has satisfied me. When he states there was a contract, either express or implied, that they would compensate for damages, the gentleman has given me the information I desired.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the amount of $9,403.42 been computed or is that the maximum, as the bill now stands, which could be appropriated?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. There is a committee amendment which I will offer.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is for $20,020.60?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. No; the amount is $9,403.42.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to McLennan County in the State of Texas, or to the proper fiscal officers of such county, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,020.60 to compensate the said county for the value of an improved public highway in said county and which passed through a military camp at Waco, Tex., and which said improved highway was appropriated by the United States Government and was closed to public use and was destroyed by the Government in order to make said military camp available as an aviation field, and to compensate said county for the expense of constructing temporary roads in lieu of such road to accommodate travel during the use of said road by the United States.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to McLennan County, in the State of Texas, the sum of $9,403.42 compensation for the appropriation and destruction of an improved public road passing through the military camp at Waco, Tex., in said county, by the Government of the United States."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 7, strike out the figures "$20,020.60" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$9,403.42."

On page 2, line 6, after the word "field," strike out the comma and the language "and to compensate said county for the expense of constructing temporary roads in lieu of such road to accommodate travel during the use of said road by the United States."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the bill, after the figures "$9,403.42," insert the words "which sum is hereby appropriated."

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, we can not do that in this bill. The best we can do is to authorize it to be appropriated.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. All right; I offer an amendment to insert "is hereby authorized to be appropriated."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONNALLY of Texas: Page 1, line 7, after the figures "$9,403.42," insert "which sum is hereby authorized to be appropriated."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman what is the purpose of that amendment? On the first line of the bill you have the language "the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay," and so forth.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I took it up with the parliamentary clerk, and there seems to be some doubt about it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "appropriated," insert the words "not to exceed."

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, there is no need of that amendment. We are appropriating a particular sum.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I asked the gentleman from Texas if all the damages had been computed.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will say they have been. The Committee on Military Affairs has passed on the damages and has estimated them.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the damages have been computed in that amount, of course, my amendment is not necessary. If they have not been, I do not see any use of appropriating a fixed sum when the final sum may be less.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The damages have been computed.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then I ask permission to withdraw the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to McLennan County, in the State of Texas, the sum of $9,403.42 compensation for the appropriation and destruction of an improved public road passing through the military camp at Waco, Tex., in said county, by the Government of the United States."

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 14 REFERRED

Senate Concurrent Resolution 14, authorizing change in enrollment of the bill H. R. 8132, to the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

BIRTHPLACE OF HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 289 (H. R. 8267) a bill referred to a moment ago.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman if he can assure the House that this society is a historical or a literary society of standing, or is it just a proposition of one man or just a few men who want these coins or medals for the purpose of selling them for their own purposes? If the gentleman can assure this House this society stands as a literary society or as a historical society of merit, of course, I shall not object.

Mr. THURSTON. I will make this reply to the gentleman from New York: This matter was thoroughly and fully presented to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures by the secretary of the International Longfellow Society. I understand, and it was so stated before the committee, this organization owns the home in Portland, Me., where Henry Wadsworth Longfellow was born, and that the property is becoming dilapidated and needs funds for additional repairs. The idea is to sell these medals for the purpose of obtaining funds to help to maintain and keep this building in good repair.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I understand the purpose of it, and, of course, there can be no objection to the purpose if back of it there is a society of standing, either literary or historical; but if it is just a sort of exhibition proposition I do not see why we should pass an act of Congress to permit these people to coin medals or anything else.

Mr. STEPHENS. Will there be any expense on the Government?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No.

Mr. LOWREY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. LOWREY. This was first a proposition to coin 1,000,000 copper-cent pieces to be sold at 5 and 10 cents in the schools of America for school children to provide the money to restore and perpetuate the Longfellow home as a memorial. The Treasury Department sent a man before our Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, protesting against the passage of any more of these coin bills, and I will say frankly I had been voting against them before the Treasury sent this man before the committee; but the Treasury stated that with the payment of the full value by the society, they would be glad to coin a medal, which was not to be legal tender and was not to interfere with our coinage system.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Exactly; but as the gentleman says, you are coining a 1-cent piece or a medal, and some private organization is going to sell it for 4 or 5 cents as the case may be. If there is a worthy cause back of it, no one, of course, is going to object. If it is a literary or historical society of standing, of course, there is no objection, but if it is a private association, I should think this House would want to know more about it before we put into circulation these medals or these coins, and I therefore would ask the gentleman to withdraw his request and let this go over for a week, so that we may look up the standing of this society.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. Surely.

Mr. TILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BEGG. Is this home open to inspection by the public or is it a private proposition where you pay an admission fee?

Mr. THURSTON. It is open to the public.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas demands the regular order. The regular order is, is there objection to returning to the bill (H. R. 8267), No. 289 on the calendar?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

EAGLE LAKE

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9724) declaring Eagle Lake, which lies partly within the limits of the State of Mississippi in Warren County and partly within the limits of the State of Louisiana in Madison Parish, to be a nonnavigable stream.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BEGG. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask a question.

Mr. SANDLIN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER], who is the author of this bill, is not present.

Mr. BEGG. My question is why is this request?

Mr. SANDLIN. I am not familiar with it.

Mr. BEGG. I ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TILSON). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE DELAWARE RIVER NEAR BURLINGTON, N. J.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10001) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Delaware River at or near Burlington, N. J.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AMENDING THE JUDICIAL CODE

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3745) to amend section 96, chapter 5, of the act of Congress of March 3, 1911, entitled "Judicial Code."

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 96, chapter 5, of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1911, and therein designated "The Judicial Code," be amended so that the same shall read as follows:

"SEC. 96. The State of New Jersey shall constitute one judicial district, to be known as the district of New Jersey. Terms of the district court shall be held at Newark on the first Tuesday in April and the first Tuesday in November, at Trenton on the third Tuesday in January and the second Tuesday in September, of each year, and at Camden at least once in each year at such time as the court may from time to time, by rule, designate. The clerk of the court for the district of New Jersey shall maintain an office, in charge of himself or a deputy, at Newark and at Trenton, each of which offices shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of the court, and shall maintain an office at Camden, in charge of himself or a deputy, which office shall be kept open for the transaction of the business of the court for such times as the court may, by rule, direct, and the marshal shall also maintain an office, in charge of himself or a deputy, at Newark and at Trenton, each of which offices shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of the court, and shall also maintain an office, in charge of himself or a deputy, at Camden, for such times as the court may, by rule, direct."

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, lines 1, 2, and 3, strike out the words "at least once in each year at such time as the court may from time to time, by rule, designate" and insert in lieu thereof the words "on the first Tuesday in December."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXCHANGE OF UNSERVICEABLE AMMUNITION

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9218) to authorize the Secretary of War to exchange deteriorated and unserviceable ammunition and components, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. I object.

OIL AND GAS MINING LEASES ON UNALLOTTED LANDS, INDIAN RESERVATION

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. I object.

RETURN OF SILVER SERVICE PRESENTED TO BATTLESHIP NORTH DAKOTA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10394) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy in his discretion to deliver to the custody of the State Historical Society of North Dakota the silver service which was presented to the battleship North Dakota by the citizens of that State.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COYLE. Reserving the right to object, there are some committee amendments and the title is to be corrected by striking out the words "historical society" and returning the custody to the State authorities.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a similar Senate bill be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, is the State of North Dakota what we call an Indian giver?

Mr. COYLE. This ship has been stricken off from the Navy list.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The ship is out of commission. The silver service was donated by the school children of North Dakota. We want it delivered to the historical society.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania says that there is an amendment to deliver it to the State authorities. Why not deliver it to the historical society, and not take a chance on what the governor may do? I know of some governors that you can not tell what they are going to do. [Laughter.]

Mr. SINCLAIR. The Secretary of the Navy believes that it would be more in keeping to give it to the State authorities.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman wants it to go back to the historical society, I would have no objection, but I do not think it ought to go to any political organization.

Mr. SINCLAIR. It will eventually go to the historical society.

Mr. BLANTON. How does the gentleman know?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I have assurances that it will.

Mr. WOODRUFF. These silver services are always returned to the States. That is the invariable custom of the Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. But why not let this go to the historical society?

Mr. COYLE. The State authorities have approved the request of the historical society already. Therefore, if we pass it through the hands of the State authorities, the Federal Government is relieved from any claim on the part of anybody else within that State who might come here hereafter and make some claim in respect to it.

Mr. BLANTON. Let me state to the gentleman what I have in mind. This is a complete set of silver. When you deliver it back to the Governor of North Dakota, if he wanted to, why could he not put it in the governor's mansion and let it stay there?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I do not believe the governor could use this sort of silver. If the gentleman would read the list, he would see that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I shall not object to it, but I think it ought to go to the historical society.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the substitution of the Senate bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the State of North Dakota, for preservation and exhibition, the silver service which was presented to the battleship North Dakota by the citizens of that State: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States for the delivery of such silver service.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The similar House bill was ordered to lie on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the State of North Dakota the silver service which was presented to the battleship North Dakota by the citizens of that State."

DECLARING EAGLE LAKE TO BE NONNAVIGABLE

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar 320 (H. R. 9724), declaring Eagle Lake, which lies partly within the limits of the State of Mississippi, in Warren County, and partly within the limits of the State of Louisiana, in Madison Parish, to be a nonnavigable stream.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, why is it necessary to remove this lake from the navigable-water list?

Mr. COLLIER. Eagle Lake has been a navigable stream. It is the old bed of the Mississippi River prior to the building of the levee between the lake and the river. The only way that a boat from the Mississippi River can now be taken into Eagle Lake would be to take it over the levee. All boats on Eagle Lake will now have to be built on Eagle Lake. It is an inland stream altogether.

Mr. BEGG. How large a lake is it?

Mr. COLLIER. About 18 miles long and about half a mile wide. At one time it was the bed of the Mississippi River.

Mr. BEGG. What is the advantage, and who is going to be the beneficiary if this is done?

Mr. COLLIER. The idea is to have this lake under the jurisdiction of Warren County, in Mississippi, and Madison Parish, in Louisiana, for the purpose of stopping some very indiscriminate seining that has been going on, with seines of several hundred yards in length. As long as the Mississippi River fed the lake with fish it could stand it. I have written down there, and I find that there are going to be no restrictions in respect to fishermen who use a hook and line, either from Warren County or any other county. The lake will be subject to the general laws of Warren County and Madison Parish, represented by my colleague, Mr. WILSON of Louisiana.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to returning to this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Eagle Lake, which lies partly within the limits of the State of Mississippi, in Warren County, and partly within the limits of the State of Louisiana, in Madison Parish, be, and the same is hereby, declared to be a nonnavigable stream.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "stream," insert "within the meaning of the Constitution and laws of the United States."

Page 1, line 9, add a new section, as follows:

"Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The committee amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SILVER SERVICE OF BATTLESHIP "MINNESOTA"

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10539) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the Department of Minnesota, the American Legion, the silver service set in use on the battleship Minnesota.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the Department of Minnesota, the American Legion, for preservation and exhibition, the silver service which was in use on the battleship Minnesota: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States for the delivery of such silver service.

With the following committee amendments:

Line 4, strike out "the department of."

Line 5, strike out the comma after the word "Minnesota" and the words "the American Legion."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK of Texas: Page 1, line 4, after the word "custody of" insert the words "the state of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to conform to the text.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXCHANGE OF CERTAIN LANDS IN HAWAII

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10390) to extend the time for the exchange of Government-owned lands for privately owned lands in the Territory of Hawaii.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is an identical Senate bill on the Speaker's table.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of Congress approved January 31, 1922, authorizing the President to exchange certain Government-owned lands in the Territory of Hawaii, or any interest therein, for privately owned lands or lands owned by the Territory of Hawaii, which were extended by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1925, are hereby further extended to January 31, 1929.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 10399) was ordered to lie on the table.

LITERACY TEST FOR VOTERS IN THE TERRITORY OF ALASKA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9211) to prescribe certain of the qualifications of voters in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to get some information about this bill if any one here can give it. I want to know what purpose is expected to be subserved?

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, in 1924 Congress made Indians, Eskimos, and Aleuts citizens of the United States. In the Territory of Alaska there is no qualification for an electorate other than a residence of one year in the Territory and three months in the precinct. There is no registration of an elector. There is no way of knowing next year who voted last year legally. In Alaska there are about 58,000 people of which about 20,000 are white people and 38,000 are Indians, Eskimos, and Aleuts. Nearly all the white people up there can read and write. Probably three or four thousand Indians and Eskimos can read and write. The balance can not read and write. This bill is to require all persons who vote in Alaska to be able to read and write.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The purpose then is to disfranchise a certain class of Indians who can not read and write in the English language?

Mr. CURRY. No; it does not disfranchise anyone; Indians, whites, or anyone else. There are a number of whites who can not read and write, and a number of Indians who can not read and write. I do not think any person ought to vote, whether white or Indian, who can not read and write. If they wish to vote, they can learn.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman who called my attention to this bill said the purpose was to disfranchise a certain class of the Indians—

Mr. CURRY. That is not true.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. And since we have just passed an act granting citizenship to all Indians, I thought it was rather a step backwards, so I was somewhat opposed to the bill, but the other day I had a letter from a prominent Republican citizen in Alaska, which kind of shook me in my faith in my objections. This good Republican wrote me that the purpose of this bill was to wreck the Republican Party and defeat a lot of honest Republicans. Of course, I was in full sympathy with the first proposition; that is, the wreck of the Republican Party, but I thought if there were any honest Republicans they must be peculiarly indigenous to the climate of Alaska. Furthermore, I felt very strongly that that particular breed of this political faith ought to be preserved. [Laughter.]

Mr. CURRY. Every Chamber of Commerce of Alaska, the Democratic, and Republican Committee, the city trustees and mayors of cities up there, have asked for the passage of this bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I want to state that there has been no solicitation by the Republican Party of Alaska. I happen to represent that party. I want to protest against such a statement.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Oh, the gentleman misunderstood me. This Republican who wrote me was protesting most vigorously against the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I protest against the statement of the gentleman from California.

Mr. CURRY. I will put in the Record all of these resolutions sent to me when the bill is considered. It is not to stop the Indians from voting.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Well, Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances I think we should find out something more about this measure before taking action on it, and I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Alaska is here to-day and I would like to have his impression of this bill and what he thinks about it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If I may have time to explain. The Legislature of the Territory of Alaska passed this literacy test and put in a provision protecting the voters, just as the State of Maine, from which the gentleman who introduced this bill comes. They brought down this bill to eliminate that, and the purpose is to disfranchise every illiterate in the Territory of Alaska.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I object.

Mr. CURRY. If this goes over without prejudice we can straighten this thing out. I do not want to eliminate any person who has a right to vote, and I would like to have it go over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the bill going over without prejudice?

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I will not object to the bill going over without prejudice, but I object to its being considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to its going over? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will report the next bill.

CREATION OF A NATIONAL MILITARY PARK AT COWPENS BATTLE GROUND

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4532) to create a national military park at Cowpens battle ground.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BEGG. I object.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not know that we need as much authorization here on this proposition as we need an appropriation. This was one of the crucial battles in the South during the War of the Revolution. By Bancroft and other eminent historians it is stated to be one of the crucial battles and one of the most remarkable that have been fought in the South. The Washington Light Infantry 40 years ago built a monument there on a small area of land. We want 10 acres more of land, and they have it so designated that it will not go into the plowed-up fields of that country.

Mr. BEGG. I will say to the gentleman that if I do not object there will be half a dozen others that will.

Mr. STEVENSON. If you are bound to object, of course we will have to fight it out at some other time.

Mr. BEGG. That is what you ought to do. There ought to be some debate on it. A majority of the House is for it, and I am for it. But I do not think it ought to be passed by unanimous consent.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the half dozen who might object, I wish to state that in my humble judgment not nearly so much as $25,000 is necessary in order to accomplish what it is thought to be desirable to do by the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Mr. BEGG. If that land in South Carolina is worth $25,000, it is but another instance where we have to pay like thunder when we buy land.

Mr. McSWAIN. I will say to the gentleman that one lady has donated 5 acres of land, and others are going to give some land. All we need is to get $5,000.

Mr. BEGG. If you cut it down to $2,000 I will vote for it.

Mr. McSWAIN. Two thousand dollars will buy all the necessary land, and another $3,000 should be given to build roads so as to enable visitors to drive through it, so that these points of interest can be visited. The Daughters of the American Revolution will take care of it, as they have bound themselves to do. Let us have $5,000 anyhow.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$2,000."

Mr. BEGG. With the understanding of that amendment to be offered by the gentleman from South Carolina, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment. But first the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to preserve that part of the Cowpens battle grounds near Ezell, Cherokee County, S. C., where Gen. Daniel Morgan, commanding, participated in the Battle of Cowpens on the 17th day of January, 1781, the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase or otherwise, as much as 10 acres of land for the preservation of said battle field, to the end that it may be declared to be a national military park.

SEC. 2. To enable the Secretary of War to carry out the provisions of this act, purchase of the necessary lands, surveys, maps, marking boundaries, opening, constructing, or repairing necessary roads and streets, salaries for labor and services, traveling expenses, supplies and materials, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to remain available until expended, and the disbursements under this act shall be reported by the Secretary of War to Congress.

With committee amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "purchase" insert the words "gift, condemnation."

Page 1, line 9, strike out the words "as much as" and insert the words "not less than."

Page 1, line 9, after the word "ten" insert "nor more than twenty-one."

Page 2, line 4, after the word "act" insert the word "to," and after the word "purchase" insert the word "of."

Page 2, line 5, insert at the beginning of the line "to make necessary," and after the word "maps" insert the words "markers, points, or signs."

Page 2, line 6, after the word "boundaries" insert the word "for."

Page 2, line 8, at the beginning of the line, insert the word "for."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STEVENSON: Page 2, line 9, strike out "$25,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,000."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was ordered to be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

SALE OF MARINE HOSPITAL AT DETROIT, MICH.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9875) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell the United States marine hospital reservation and improvements thereon at Detroit, Mich., and to acquire a suitable site in the same locality and to erect thereon a modern hospital for the treatment of the beneficiaries of the United States Public Health Service, and for other purposes," approved June 7, 1924.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BEGG. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a little information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio reserves the right to object.

Mr. BEGG. Which bill are we considering? Is it Consent Calendar 342 or 343?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is No. 341.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas reserves the right to object.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio what are we going to do with all the hospitals in five years from now?

Mr. BEGG. What is the matter?

Mr. BLANTON. I am asking the gentleman a question, because the gentleman from Ohio is presumed to be over there watching over the Treasury.

If the gentleman allows the Public Health Service to tear down the building that is there now—

Mr. BEGG. This bill, I think, is all right.

Mr. BLANTON. And another new hospital is built, what are we going to do with all of them in five years from now? We have vacant beds now in every single one of them that we can not use.

Mr. BEGG. I will say that if we do not stop making more people eligible to use the hospitals free of charge we shall have to build twice as many, but I think this proposition is all right. I have gone into this, and I think it is all right.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Will the gentleman from Texas yield to me?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. ELLIOTT. In 1924 this Congress passed an act authorizing the sale of the marine hospital at Detroit, Mich., and authorized them to acquire a new site and to use the money to build a new hospital. Now, what this bill is proposing to do is this: To authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to transfer to the Department of Commerce a small piece of land at Detroit, Mich., for lighthouse purposes; another one at Key West, Fla., for lighthouse purposes; and the Department of Commerce is authorized to transfer a piece of land at Detroit, Mich., upon which this hospital can be built.

Mr. BLANTON. And is to build a new hospital?

Mr. ELLIOTT. That is already taken care of in the act we passed in 1924.

Mr. BLANTON. But they have never built it yet?

Mr. ELLIOTT. No.

Mr. BLANTON. What is standing in the way?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Well, they are trying to get a suitable site, and they can get this site on Government-owned land by making this transfer.

Mr. BLANTON. And the gentleman knows that when we pass this bill, then the next knock will be at the door of the Appropriations Committee for a deficiency appropriation to build this hospital.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Well, I do not think so; but if they did, it would be all right, because they need a marine hospital in Detroit and have had one there for many years.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman know we need one there?

Mr. ELLIOTT. All I know about it is that the Secretary of the Treasury and the Surgeon General of the United States have recommended this.

Mr. BLANTON. If I could stop the bill by one objection, I would do so; but, as I understand it, it requires three objections.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does.

Mr. BLANTON. And realizing that I can not get two other objections, I am not going to take up any more time.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will be one of three.

Mr. SCHAFER. So will I. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without objection.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER, Mr. BLANTON, and Mr. LAGUARDIA objected.

CONSTRUCTION AT MILITARY POSTS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10275) authorizing appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three objections are required. Mr. LAGUARDIA and Mr. BLACK of Texas also objected.

GOVERNMENT WHARF AT JUNEAU, ALASKA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 139) authorizing the construction of a Government dock or wharf at Juneau, Alaska.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the following work of improvement is hereby adopted and authorized to be prosecuted under the direction of the Board of Road Commissioners for Alaska, in accordance with the plans recommended in the report hereinafter designated:

Dock or wharf at Juneau, Alaska, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 561, Sixty-eighth Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document: Provided, That the sum authorized to be so expended shall not exceed the sum of $22,500.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LAND FOR PARK PURPOSES IN HENNESSEY, OKLA.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9496) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to convey certain lands reserved for park purposes in the town of Hennessey, Okla., to said town of Hennessey, Okla.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I would like some information or else I shall object, and I may object anyway.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I do not know anything at all about this bill, but I see it is introduced by Mr. THOMAS, of Oklahoma.

Mr. BEGG. I know it is, and I hate to object in his absence.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. He has been called to Oklahoma on some business, and, therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 103 OF THE JUDICIAL CODE

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House for a moment to No. 383 on the calendar (S. 2763). This House passed a bill granting permission to hold court at Lewisburg, in my State. The Senate two days before had passed a Senate bill of the same nature. I tried to have the House bill passed in the Senate, but it will not be reached there for some time, and this is a matter of immediate and great concern to the sitting judge. An additional judge was asked for in that district under his predecessor, who is now dead. The present judge said he could get along and do the work without an additional judge, but that he needs this accommodation at his home town. The House passed the bill; the Senate passed another bill; and in order to clarify the situation, I simply ask unanimous consent that the House now pass the Senate bill. They are exactly the same, and this will relieve us from a sort of legislative confusion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the fifth and sixth sentences of section 103 of the Judicial Code, as amended, are amended to read as follows:

"Terms of the district court shall be held at Scranton on the second Monday in March and the third Monday in October; at Harrisburg on the first Mondays in May and December; at Lewisburg on the third Monday in January; and at Williamsport on the first Monday in June. The clerk of the court for the middle district shall maintain an office, in charge of himself or a deputy, at Lewisburg; the civil suits instituted at that place shall be tried there, if either party resides nearest that place of holding court, unless by consent of parties they are removed to another place for trial."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CODIFICATION OF GENERAL AND PERMANENT LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass, without reading except by title, the bill (H. R. 10000) to consolidate, codify, and reenact the general and permanent laws of the United States in force December 7, 1925.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio moves to suspend rules and pass without reading the bill H. R. 10000, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a second.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Tennessee for 20 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that I asked for this second in order that the gentleman might give the House a brief statement, as I am sure he will be glad to do, showing just what additions have been made to the bill since we passed it before.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I understood that that was the course of procedure which had been adopted heretofore.

Mr. Speaker, with this bill which we have before us (H. R. 10000) we are approaching, I hope, the culmination of the efforts of more than 30 years to codify the laws of the United States.

This bill embodies the work of our late Member, Col. Edward C. Little, former Congressman from Kansas, who devoted his time unsparingly both day and night, until many of us feel that his life was shortened and that he gave it to this great work.

Unfortunately in the preparation of a work of this kind there can be no changes made in the law. This committee of the House must come before you and give assurance that there is no change made. There are many portions of the law that are obsolete; there are many portions of the law that are contradictory; there are many portions of the law that I think we could unanimously agree to change if attention were directed to them; but if this committee attempted to present a code embodying changes, it would open the matter to discussion; the Members would certainly want to know what the changes were and why they were made; differences of opinion would arise; and if a reading of this bill were insisted upon, requiring a month or more of time, it could not pass. Consequently, with all the humility which I can assume, I must ask the House to take this bill on trust, as they have done former bills in the Sixty-sixth, Sixty-seventh, and Sixty-eighth Congresses.

Let me now tell you something of what has been done. In the preparation of H. R. 12, as we knew the bill in the Sixty-seventh Congress, and also in the Sixty-eighth Congress, there were efforts made by different departments of the Government to change the law. They had placed certain interpretations on the law under which they were working, and I do not blame them for wanting it changed, because there were really very good reasons why that should be done; but Colonel Little could not consent to it and did not consent. Then when the matter got to the Senate there was an accumulation of criticisms about the bill, some of them because of the very fidelity with which the former chairman of this committee had acted.

I could illustrate, but it would take considerable time. The Senate committee was impressed by the criticisms and would not act favorably on the bill. So after this House had unanimously passed the bill in the Sixty-sixth Congress and the Sixty-seventh Congress and the Sixty-eighth Congress, failure being repeatedly encountered in the Senate, it became necessary to proceed along somewhat different lines. Joint meetings and conferences were held by the Senate committee and the House committee, and at first we thought we could proceed along the lines that Colonel Little had pursued and employ experts or specialists to perfect, as the Senate put it, some of the imperfections in the code and bring it down to date. The course or stream of legislation is passing continually along. We must stop somewhere. This bill (H. R. 10000) stops at the beginning of this Congress. We have already enacted a great many laws of a permanent nature since then, and some of great importance, such as the revenue act. At the time of Colonel Little's bill we had enacted a great tariff act as well as a revenue act, and the Senators objected for the reason the Little code was not up to date.

Under an agreement which I believe has paved the way for the successful handling of this bill through the Senate, if the House approves, we submitted a proposition to the two great law publishing concerns of the country, the West Publishing Co. and the Edward Thompson Co.; and, historically, I may say it was rumored at least that some 20 years ago it was the opposition of not one of these companies but one of our law publishing concerns that caused the work on which hundreds of thousands of dollars had been spent to be wasted and come to nought.

Senator PEPPER, of the Senate committee, conferred with Mr. Homer P. Clark, the president of the West Publishing Co., of St. Paul, when we found the experts that we wanted to work on the bill were so immersed in duties at the Columbia University and elsewhere that we could not secure the kind of men we wanted. Senator PEPPER having spoken to President Clark, of the West Publishing Co., suggested that perhaps the publishing concerns were opposed to the publication because naturally both concerns had got out great annotated codes of their own and had many thousands of dollars invested in them. Mr. Clark said that they would not take any such attitude; that they thought it was very unfortunate for the United States and the courts that they had no authoritative statement of the law.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield? It has been suggested that it might be advisable to read the bill. Has the gentleman any objection to that this afternoon? [Laughter.]

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I will agree to read it to anybody that will agree to listen to it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. I think it would be something of a job. I am sure the gentleman is competent to tell us all the iniquities involved in the bill without reading it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I ask the gentleman one or two questions?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. After I have finished this thought. The Senate passed an appropriation of $10,000, and when they found the West Publishing Co., headed by Mr. Clark, of St. Paul, did not take the sort of selfish attitude that had been anticipated, the matter was brought before a conference of the two committees on the question of getting the two great law publishing concerns with their splendid staffs of specialists to take the Little bill, H. R. 12, as it was known in the former Congresses, and go through it and bring it up to date and make a modern code out of it.

These two concerns were called into conference. The presidents came here to Washington. Mr. M. B. Wailes, of the Edward Thompson Co., and Mr. Clark, of the West Publishing Co., and as a result of the conference, they undertook the work under a $10,000 appropriation of the Senate. Nine months of work have gone into this bill, with the Little code as its base. They have spent not only the $10,000 but have become so interested in it that it has cost the two concerns over $20,000 in excess of the appropriation. They came to Washington, maintained from 10 to 15 experts and had this code checked all through the departments. I have a splendid letter here in the report from the Secretary of the Navy, approving the code. This was the department so hostile to H. R. 12 in the preceding Congresses. Now, I will yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I will take the liberty of asking the gentleman a few questions, because I happen to have been on the Committee for the Revision of the Laws when Mr. Little was chairman, when the bill was brought here in the Sixty-sixth, Sixty-seventh, and Sixty-eighth Congresses and passed by the House. The gentleman knows I am in full sympathy with the general purpose he has in view.

I would like to ask the gentleman this: He stated that representatives of two great publishing companies have done this work. Has Professor Carpenter examined the work carefully so as to satisfy himself that it is properly done?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I do not know as to Professor Carpenter, but in order that there might be an independent check made on the work we employed Joseph Chamberlain, of the research department of Columbia University, to make a cross-section test of the accuracy and completeness of the work. That is also set forth in the report.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I really had in mind Professor Chamberlain instead of Professor Carpenter. Of course, the gentleman himself has not had any opportunity to examine it.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I can not quite say that, although mine has been a humble contribution compared with that of those who have worked on it. I have gone through, line by line, many parts of this work.

Now, I would also like to direct the attention of the House to quite a different provision in the bill from that which the House has been content to pass in connection with the three former bills for codification of the laws. Formerly there was a repealing clause which was more or less complete. I regret to say that the repealing clause in this bill is not of the character of the former bills. On page 1 is the important part of the bill. That contains the various enacting and repealing sections and all saving clauses. I say I regret it, because it was due to the Senate rather than ourselves that the extra saving clause was put in. In other words, if there is any mistake or omission in the code it has no effect at all because of the way the repealing clauses have been worked out by the two committees.

Wherever the law is "substantially identical" this code supersedes the old law; that is, the great mass of law as it existed on the 7th of December, 1925, but wherever there is any substantial difference the old law will still prevail and will control until the 1st day of July, 1927; the idea being that so many hundreds of thousands of dollars having been spent already on this work in order to insure, if possible, its passage through the Senate and allay apprehension of the great dangers that would flow from some error or omission or mistake to leave by this repealing clause a sort of interregnum during which errors, if found, can be corrected. It is my purpose to follow this bill with a bill for the publication which will provide that there will be inserted in every copy that goes out an explanation of these repealing clauses, together with requests for the scrutiny of the code by all of the different departments and bureaus, with the intention of passing amendatory laws or a series of amendatory laws to correct any errors disclosed.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. This is the so-called Fitzgerald bill?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. It bears my name because Colonel Little is dead, but it is really the colonel's great work.

Mr. BLANTON. It is not supposed to contain any change of any existing law?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. None at all.

Mr. BLANTON. And is a mere codification of existing law?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. That being the case, for one I am willing to accept it on trust, but I might add this, that not knowing a single thing in any one of these numerous pages, and the bill is a foot thick, I know it could not be half as dangerous as another Fitzgerald bill which I know of which would seek to put this Government into the business of insurance, and I would rather have this one than the other.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I am giving the gentleman a choice this afternoon.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I know nothing more about the contents of the bill than any other Member of the House, and must take it, of course, on trust, but I wish the gentleman would explain section 3 of the bill with reference to the distribution of the code after it is printed.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. That is the bill that I shall call up immediately after this passes this House this afternoon.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. We might consider the whole matter at one time.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Section 3 is a portion of the bill relating to the publication, which recites what the committee hopes to add to the bare code itself, in order to make it usable. There is set forth the preface, the table of contents, four sets of parallel reference tables, and then the four great institutions of the country—the Declaration of Independence, the Articles of Confederation, the Ordinance of 1787, and the Constitution of the United States with amendments—together with an appendix, in which we will endeavor to codify, but not distribute through the work, the general and permanent law of this first session of Congress, so that when this is published it will be right down to the minute, so far as it is humanly possible to have it. We will then submit the whole thing for the scrutiny and constructive criticism of the departments and others during this interim until the 1st of July, 1927. Then, most important of all, is the index. That will take some three or four months to prepare. Of course, it is very difficult to use any work without an index. There is a provision in an appropriation bill that passed the House a couple of weeks ago for $5,000, which will be the cost of preparing this index. Nothing has been done to add to the expense of this measure, nor will anything be done until it has passed the House and the Senate.

The index alone will cost $5,000. This bill has only been printed as you see it here, on one side of the paper. When the code is completed, even with the index, preface, and so forth, it will be less than half the thickness of the bill as you see it now. If this committee had proceeded in the ordinary way to have this bill introduced and printed as ordinary bills are introduced and printed, it would have been plated, and would have cost $186,584.36. As it stands now, the Public Printer's work on it amounts to $16,627.25. There is a difference of about $170,000 in the expense which would be entailed between the presentation of this bill as we have it here and the way an ordinary bill is presented. This saving of about $170,000 is made possible by Public Resolution 24 of the Sixty-sixth Congress. It operates until the original bill, H. R. 9389 of the Sixty-sixth Congress, or some successor of that bill shall have passed the House and the Senate and become a law.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. What is estimated will be the cost that each lawyer will have to pay in order to get a copy of this?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. The estimate received from the Public Printer this afternoon is $5.

Mr. WINGO. Will the Public Printer have the exclusive sale of it?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. So far as I know there will be no one else from whom this can be obtained. That is less than half of what a similar work would cost if published privately.

Mr. WINGO. What number is contemplated to be printed in the first printing?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. That I can not say. I suggest the gentleman from Arkansas get a copy of the bill H. R. 11818. I want to take that up immediately after this bill passes. This bill, H. R. 11318, provides for the elimination of the slip print and that there shall be printed in a pamphlet form only such number of copies of the code, until the index is ready, as may be requisitioned. The idea is not to distribute any more copies of the bare code without the index than are actually necessary to be used by those who need it, and as soon as the index is prepared the rest of the distribution will be made in accordance with the general statutes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I asked for a second because the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK] did not happen to be in the Chamber at the time. I ask that the control of the time be transferred to him.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and also have granted the same privilege to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PEERY], a member of the committee, who has been suddenly called away by sickness.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record, and also that the same privilege be granted to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PEERY]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PEERY. Mr. Speaker, this bill comes to the Congress with a unanimous report from the Committee on Revision of Laws favoring its passage. The object of the bill is to present to the country a compilation of the laws of the United States of a general and permanent nature that were in force on the opening day of this session of the Congress. The official name assigned to the work is "The Code of the Laws of the United States of America."

The last official code of laws was enacted in 1874. Unfortunately, supplements to that code have not been enacted from time to time. Volumes of laws have been enacted since that date, but there has been no compilation of the same into an official volume from which official and definite information as to what the law is may be definitely and readily obtained. In order to ascertain the law it has been necessary to search the various volumes of the United States Statutes at Large that contain the laws enacted since that date. The situation has been met and helped to some extent by the publication of codes by the various publishing concerns; but the need for an official code, compiling and bringing the laws down to date in one volume, has been recognized by the legal profession, judges of the court, and the country in general. It is important that the judges of the land, lawyers, and those charged with the administration of the law may have access to an official compilation of the Federal laws in order that they may promptly ascertain the law and state the same.

This bill is intended to meet this demand. The bill represents the consummation of long and laborious work by those to whom this responsibility has been given. For some 30 years work has been going on to attain this end. Bills similar to this were reported to the Sixty-sixth, Sixty-seventh, and Sixty-eighth Congresses, and all of them were passed by the Lower House, but none of them passed the Senate, and so the work has continued. The bill passed by the Lower House in the Sixty-eighth Congress encountered some criticism and opposition in the Senate. The effort has been made in each succeeding Congress to meet all criticism that was justifiable and to perfect the work. The present bill represents a consummation of all these labors.

The bill that came to the Sixty-eighth Congress was the result of the splendid work of the late Col. E. C. Little, a Representative from Kansas, who made it the outstanding work of his service. Associated with him in the work were experts of high standing and distinction. I am sure that it is a matter of regret on the part of the membership of this House that Colonel Little could not live to see his work crowned by enactment into law, and our distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD, who has likewise rendered signal and distinguished service in connection with the present bill, pays to Colonel Little beautiful and unselfish tribute when he says that although the present bill bears his name, "It is really the Colonel's great work." The work of Colonel Little and his committee was taken as a basis for the present work and the two great publishing concerns of the country, the West Publishing Co. and the Edward Thompson Co., furnished a large staff of the very best trained experts for the completion of this work.

We feel that the work has been well done and the committee presents it to the Congress with faith in the correctness and integrity of the work. The one outstanding instruction guiding all of the experts, who have collaborated in this great work, was that there should be no basic change in the law. It was felt that if any basic changes were made in the law it would defeat the passage of the bill, and so the statement of the law comes to the Congress with all its inconsistencies and its contradictions. The staff of experts who are skilled in the compilation of codes have arranged and classified the law into appropriate titles and statement of contents, which of themselves are no part of the law but which are so essential in any volume containing the law.

This arrangement comprises 50 titles, the first 6 of which cover the establishment of the Government and the various departments thereof. The remaining 44 titles are arranged in convenient and alphabetical order. In addition to the alphabetical arrangement of titles there are cross references from which any desired enactment of Congress may be readily located. The numbering system that has been followed will allow the insertion of new titles in the future without disturbing the number of existing titles. This is an important feature as it furnishes a scientific scheme for future supplements of the code. The work has been carefully compared, checked, and verified.

In addition to checking by the experts charged with the preparation of the work and by the experts in the various governmental departments and commissions to whom various sections of the work were referred, an independent test for accuracy was made for the committee by Prof. Joseph P. Chamberlain, one of the trustees of the legislative drafting research fund of Columbia University, of New York, who has given special attention to work of this character for the past 15 years. We would not dare to say that the work is void of error, but we do say that the most painstaking care and effort has been made to avoid error and that we believe that the work will prove itself as free from error as any work of a similar nature in our history.

Under clause 2, chapter 1, the sections of this code shall be in force in lieu of corresponding provisions contained in statutes enacted prior to December, 1925, which, where substantially identical, are repealed. The repeal of all acts of a general or permanent nature shall not become effective until July 1, 1927. Under clause 3 accrued rights are reserved. Clause 6 also contains a saving clause on the question of the code as evidence. Until July 1, 1927, in case of any inconsistencies between the provisions of any section of the code and the corresponding portions of legislation passed prior to that date, effect shall be given for all purposes whatsoever to earlier enactments. After July 1, 1927, the code, with any subsequent amendments, shall be conclusive as evidence. It is felt that this clause will give opportunity for ascertaining and correcting any possible error, if any, that may have crept in. It is hoped that this work will stand up before the careful scrutiny and criticism of the legal profession and that it will meet the approval of the profession and the country in general.

Mr. BLACK of New York. May I ask the chairman of the committee if he wants to use any time? Now I have only—

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Several Members have asked me to secure a little more time in order to answer questions, and I am pleased to do so.

Mr. BLACK of New York. I have some requests on this side from Members who wish to criticize the bill. The gentleman may have Members who want to support the bill. I can let the gentleman have more time in support of the bill.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I would be very glad to have time to answer questions.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CARSS. Mr. Speaker, it has been brought to my attention there have been some changes made in the law. I want to know in regard to the locomotive inspection laws. A statement has been prepared by an attorney that gives the original law and the codified version. Will the gentleman please explain the situation in regard to that?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I desire first to say to the gentleman from Minnesota that when the code was prepared in 1874 it was not perfect, and no code ever will be, and if we attempt perfection we will never get a code. The original code was followed by one bill after another amending defects. Now, in reference to what the gentleman asks me specifically. This morning the representatives of the inspection of locomotives of the United States called at my office with two Members of Congress and the matter was gone into at considerable length. One gentleman has prepared an analysis of what he thought were differences. I think the difference centered on three objections. Before we left the discussion there was possibly only one difference. This is argumentative.

I can not say to you that there might not be such an interpretation placed on the law, as one of these gentlemen, who is an expert on this, says there would be. In 1911 the first law was passed, and in that law there was provision for certain things to be done in three months; that is, certain rules, and so forth, were to be adopted. There was no provision for the inspection of anything except the boilers of locomotives. Now, some years went by and an amendment was made to the law—and right here I wish to say that the hope of this committee is to evolve a system hereafter whereby there may be a sort of continuous codification or some machinery set up so these troubles will not come.

When this amendment was passed there was an extension of the scope of all this work, an extension of inspection in regard to the locomotives and to appurtenances and to the tenders of the locomotives and there are changes going on in equipment all the time. A question arose when these gentlemen came to deal with the Interstate Commerce Commission. If the railroads neglected to make inspection rules for new equipment, and so forth, would the three months' provision for them to make such rules continue to govern? This amendment under the law did not specifically state as clearly as I would like to have it state, that it extended the time for inspection rules and modification indefinitely beyond the three months' time, making it a continuous affair for all time. Yet I believe that that is what the House in its enactment would have done if anybody had asked them to do it. When we came to study the law we did not dare to extend it. We never thought to do that. I myself have given the most rigid instructions to these revisioners, and they have also had the same instruction from the Senate, that no matter how foolish it may seem, we must regard the law as Congress made it and not try to change it even to improve it.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Has the gentleman finished?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. In a moment. I believe that most of the complaint on the part of these men is they are fearful of a restatement of the two laws. That not being contrasted as two separate laws they may not be construed one with the other and desire to have both titles stated as an additional safeguard. I go further and say that if they will present the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, at any time in the interim, before July 1, 1927, or afterwards, a restatement of this law which they have worked out, and which I believed everyone would agree to, that it could be cared for in a series of amendatory bills which can be presented to this House. For historical purposes, I add the following data:

The first Code of Federal Laws entitled the Revised Statutes was passed in 1874. It embraced volumes 1 to 17 inclusive of the Statutes at Large. The cost of preparation for printing was $100,000. The bill passed the House without the repealing clauses having been printed. The bill passed the Senate in 40 minutes May 26, 1874. There were about 250 errors corrected by subsequent bills.

A commission to codify the laws was appointed under the act of June 4, 1897. About $300,000 was expended and nothing came of the work. Col. Edwin C. Little, when he became chairman of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, undertook the stupendous task and wore himself out with his indefatigable efforts.

His bill H. R. 9389, 1,262 pages, codifying the laws to March 4, 1919, passed the House unanimously December 20, 1920, in the Sixty-sixth Congress.

Again his bill H. R. 12 unanimously passed the House May 16, 1921, in the Sixty-seventh Congress, and again his bill H. R. 12 with supplement, index, cross-reference tables, and so forth, 1,627 pages, passed the House unanimously January 7, 1924, in the Sixty-eighth Congress.

This bill H. R. 10000 has 1,705 pages. The law is arranged in 50 titles. The first six are general and the remainder are arranged in alphabetical order, beginning with agriculture and ending with war.

Mr. CARSS. I thank the gentleman for his explanation.

Mr. LaGUARDIA rose.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Does the gentleman from New York desire time?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Very well. I first yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I realize the importance of a codification of the law, but I can not vote for this codification which materially changes existing law enacted for the purpose of compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their locomotives with safe and suitable boilers and appurtenances thereto. The present section 5 of the existing law is made section 28 of the codification and as codified the existing law would practically be nullified.

THE CODIFICATION

Section 5 of the present law reads in part:

That each carrier subject to this act shall file its rules and instructions for the inspection of locomotive boilers with the chief inspector within three months after the approval of this act, and after hearing and approval by the Interstate Commerce Commission such rules and instructions, with such modifications as the commission requires, shall become obligatory upon such carrier.

Therefore it is very clear that the words—

with such modifications as the commission requires—

give the Interstate Commerce Commission authority to amend the rules and instructions when it shall become necessary. Without this authority the act would be ineffective, as new equipment and new conditions require amended rules. It is very clear that the words—with such modifications as the commission requires—

were incorporated in the present law in order to make it effective. Without granting the commission authority to amend rules and instructions, old, obsolete, impractical rules would be continued indefinitely, and the commission would be precluded from requiring changes or amendments.

Section 28 of the codification, which is to displace section 5 of the original law, reads as follows:

SEC. 28. Rules and instructions for the inspection of locomotive boilers which have been made by a carrier subject to this chapter and approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission are obligatory on such carrier until changed in the manner hereafter provided, and a violation thereof shall be punished as provided in section 34. A carrier may from time to time change such rules and instructions, but such change shall not take effect and the new rules and instructions be in force until the same shall have been filed with and approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The chief inspector shall also make all needful rules, regulations, and instructions not inconsistent herewith for the conduct of his office and for the government of the district inspectors: Provided, however, That all such rules and instructions shall be approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission before they take effect.

It may be stated without any contradiction that section 28 of the codification prohibits the Interstate Commerce Commission from requiring amendment to rules and instructions in effect. Amendments or changes in rules and instructions can be made, but only the carrier, under the codification, may from time to time change rules and instructions, with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Therefore, section 28 of the codification, codifying section 5 of the existing law, takes from the Interstate Commerce Commission the authority to compel common carriers to amend rules and instructions, even though such amendments be absolutely necessary for the safe operation of locomotives.

It is well known that equipment on locomotives continually changes and that it is necessary that rules and instructions be amended to meet new conditions. The original law should not be emasculated, as the codification would accomplish, thereby placing the Interstate Commerce Commission at the mercy of the railroad corporations whom they are to regulate, as no amendments could be made unless initiated by said railroad corporations.

The enactment of this codification will practically repeal and nullify the existing law, which was enacted to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their locomotives with safe and suitable boilers and appurtenances thereto. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. SCHAFER. I wish I had more time to discuss this important matter. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER. I incorporate the following statement under the permission given me by the House to extend my remarks:

CODIFICATION OF LOCOMOTIVE INSPECTION LAW

A perusal of the codification of the locomotive inspection law, commonly known as the locomotive boiler inspection law (36 Stat. L. 913), as amended (38 Stat. L. 1192 and 43 Stat. L. 659), which has for its purpose the promotion of the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their locomotives with safe and suitable boilers and appurtenances thereto, indicates that the codifiers handled the subject without due regard to the retention of the provisions of existing law.

It was generally understood that the object of the codification was to remove obsolete provisions of the laws which had been superseded by subsequent amendments, delete unnecessary words and classify and consolidate the various acts. It is universally conceded by those informed on the subject that a codification can not properly be used as a vehicle to introduce changes or ambiguities in existing laws, and certainly should not be used for the purpose of rendering present laws ineffective.

Section 24 of the codification of the locomotive inspection law clearly nullifies portions of the requirements of section 3, for which it is a substitute, in so far as the duties of the chief inspector and assistant chief inspectors are concerned.

Section 3 of the law contains the requirement, among other things, that the chief inspector and assistant chief inspectors shall see that the requirements of this act and the rules, regulations, and instructions made or given hereunder are observed by common carriers subject hereto. The codified version substitutes the word "inspection" for "act," and thereby limits the scope to inspection, whereas the act itself is much broader in scope. If the codification stands as now written, there will be no authority charged with the duty of seeing that the carriers "equip their locomotives with safe and suitable boilers and appurtenances thereto," that the locomotive, boiler, and appurtenances thereof "are in proper condition and safe to operate," no authority to see that the locomotives, boilers, and appurtenances are able "to withstand such test or tests as may be prescribed," no authority to require the carriers to "repair the defects which such inspections disclose," no authority to see that the locomotives are properly maintained. In short, the act requires such construction as will insure safety, the equipment of locomotives with safe and suitable boilers and appurtenances, the ability to withstand certain tests, proper maintenance in order that safe operation may be obtained, and requires that defects be repaired. None of these requirements are covered by the word "inspection," and a perpetuation of the present wording of section 24 would remove any possibility of these requirements being enforced.

The codifiers' section 28, which is a substitute for section 5 of the law, would unquestionably change the provisions of existing law. The proposed codification does not authorize the chief inspector to prepare rules and instructions to be observed by carriers in the absence of carriers filing their rules, nor does it authorize the commission to make any change in the present rules or any rules filed by any carrier, even though they might be ever so inadequate; neither does it require any carrier to file rules, it only permits them to do so. Therefore, it is apparent that the structure of the law in this respect is seriously weakened. The present rules and instructions were prepared by the chief inspector and agreed to by and between the representatives of the carriers and other interested parties. Such authority is not given if the proposed codification is accepted.

The proposed codification is—

Rules and instructions for the inspection of locomotive boilers which have been made by a carrier subject to this chapter and approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission are obligatory on such carrier until changed in the manner hereinafter provided . . . a carrier may from time to time change such rules and instructions, but such change shall not take effect and the new rules and instructions be in force until the same shall have been filed with and approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission. . . .

It will also be noted from this that the section provides only for rules covering the locomotive boiler, whereas the law covers the entire locomotive, its boiler, tender, and all parts and appurtenances thereof.

Ambiguities exist in other sections; viz:

Section 22 of the proposed codification, which is a substitute for section 1 of the law, is designated "Inspection of locomotives and appurtenances"; definitions, whereas nothing is defined in this section other than the terms "carrier," "common carrier," "railroad," and "employees." Inasmuch as no mention is made in this section of locomotives and appurtenances the designation of the section is incorrect and unquestionably changes the existing law. The existing law reads in part:

That when used in this act, the terms "carrier" and "common carrier" mean a common carrier by railroad . . . , etc.

The definitions in the original act are clearly applicable to all portions of the act and not only the inspection of locomotives and appurtenances, as the title of section 22 of the codification would indicate.

The designation of section 23 of the proposed codification, which is a substitute for section 2 of the law reads: "Use of unsafe locomotives and appurtenances unlawful; inspection and tests." This designation is somewhat ambiguous as the law requires "proper condition and safe to operate," etc., and does not employ the words "unsafe locomotives." The designation may well be changed to "Use of locomotives and appurtenances thereto not in proper condition and safe to operate without unnecessary peril to life or limb; unlawful." In order to more clearly express the purpose of the codified section and conform to the existing law.

The latter part of section 23 refers to "rules and regulations hereinafter provided for," but there are 23 additional sections in this chapter, and it would be inferred from the expression "hereinafter provided for" that any or all of the following 23 sections would have reference to the "rules and regulations hereinafter provided for," whereas, as a matter of fact, only 11 following sections refer to the locomotive inspection law. The section which provides for rules and regulations should be specified, otherwise the reference is misleading.

That the Congress recognized the importance of the law and its proper enforcement is evident when it is taken into consideration that it required that the chief inspector and the assistant chief inspectors be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, specified in detail exacting qualifications required of the chief inspector, the assistant chief inspectors, and the district inspectors, and specifically set out the duties of each.

On the other hand, the codifiers treated the matter very superficially, as is evidenced by the foregoing and by their action in combining the locomotive inspection law into a chapter along with numerous other laws which have no relation thereto other than that they come under the general heading of "railroads." It would appear that the combining of various unrelated laws into one chapter would lead only to confusion and misunderstanding. There is no apparent reason why the locomotive inspection law should not be set up in a separate chapter, as has been done with various other acts, such as the liability act, the hours of service act, the care of animals in transit act, the mediation act, and so forth.

The present law seems so well understood by those concerned that any change in language or method of expression may seriously affect its understanding. However, if it is necessary to change the language for the purpose of codification, the existing requirements, including its purpose and the methods for accomplishing the purpose, should by all means be fully retained.

A codification which makes worthless an act of such importance as the locomotive inspection law is indeed regrettable. The employees and their friends labored for years to accomplish the passage of this law. It appears to be fulfilling its intended purpose admirably, is apparently entirely satisfactory to both the employees and the carriers, and is a distinct protection to the employees and the traveling public. It will be difficult for the hundreds of thousands of individuals affected by its change to understand why the House could seriously consider the approval of a codification which would rob them of the protection afforded by the law as it now stands.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 11 minutes remaining.

Mr. BLACK of New York. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Speaker, there has been no compilation or revision of the laws of the United States for about 50 years. The last revision was made in 1874, and a supplementary revision was made in 1878. Since then there have been published about 25 volumes containing the statutes passed by as many Congresses, and in order to find out what the law of the United States is the inquirer must, in many cases, wade through all these volumes. The difficulty is increased when it is considered that legislation is sometimes found in so-called appropriation bills, wherein one does not expect to find permanent law made or modified. This condition for all these years would have been wholly intolerable if private enterprise had not stepped in and published unofficial compilations of the statutes. That was done by the West Publishing Co., The Edward Thompson Co., the Barnes Publishing Co., and perhaps others. Nevertheless, during all these years we have had no authoritative and official compilation which was entitled to judicial notice.

For the past 30 years efforts have been made in and by Congress to provide an official compilation, but such attempts, for one reason or another, have met with failure. The Government during this time has spent several hundred thousand dollars for compilations and revisions, and when these at different times were ready for adoption they failed of passage in either or both Houses of Congress. The chief difficulty in the past has been that Members of Congress feared that the offered compilation or revision failed to state the existing law correctly, and there is some such fear on the bill offered here to-day. It must be frankly admitted that such a fear is not groundless when we know that in the revision of 1874 about 250 errors were discovered, which had to be rectified by subsequent legislation.

A commission to codify the laws was created by act of June 4, 1897. That commission consisted of three members, each drawing $5,000 a year. The commission labored, I am informed, about 10 years, and it cost the Government for their salaries and moneys expended under their supervision about $300,000. It is stated that this commission did prepare a revision—I mean a real revision as distinguished from a compilation—but Congress refused to adopt it, actuated by the fear that the law was not accurately restated.

The later attempts to codify the laws were made by Col. Edward Little, as chairman of the Committee on Revision of the Laws of this House. Colonel Little did much of the work personally. He took the work seriously and for a number of years overtaxed his strength, and there is no doubt that the tremendous work done by him contributed to his untimely death. The code prepared by him, which we speak of as the Little Code, passed the House of Representatives in 1920, in 1921, and again in 1924, but each time failed of approval in the Senate.

The work now presented to you, embodied in H. R. 10000, is based on the Little Code, with what the committee believes are improvements. This bill contains 1,705 pages and is probably the largest bill ever presented to any legislative body in the world.

The members of the Committees in Senate and House on Revision of the Laws, with all their other duties, and the fact that they are not expert revisers, can not perform the stupendous task of revising or compiling the laws of the United States. By a very fortunate arrangement the chairmen of the two committees were able to interest the two great law publishing houses of this country, the West Publishing Co. and the Edward Thompson Co., in the work of getting up the present codification. The work thus far has been done under a Senate appropriation of $10,000, for which these two firms agreed to do it, but we are informed that they have already invested $20,000 of their own money in addition to this sum. These two firms have done this work from patriotic motives and are entitled to great credit. Increased reputation is what they will get for their pains and expenditure. This work, then, represents the efforts of the trained staffs of these two firms, and I am sure that the work has been done by the best talent obtainable in the United States. The work has been checked and rechecked by these experts, many of whom are lawyers and have had years of experience at it; and in addition to this, the various titles have been submitted for scrutiny to the Cabinet officers, various boards, commissions, and officers of the Government.

In the Little Code the sections ran consecutively through the whole volume. In the present work each title is separately numbered and each title has its own section numbers. In this way each title becomes a unit, and this method permits of additional sections without disturbing the numbering of other titles and also permits the insertion of additional titles.

The first six titles of the present work are concerned with what might be termed the set-up of the Government of the United States, as follows: 1, General and repeal provisions; 2, The Congress; 3, The President; 4, Flag and seal, seat of Government, the States; 5, Executive departments and Government officers and employees; 6, Official and personal bonds. The rest of the titles are arranged alphabetically, and run from number 7, Agriculture, to number 50, War.

This code now offered contains all general and permanent laws of the United States in force December 7, 1925, that is, up to the beginning of the present Congress. In addition to this bill, an additional bill has been reported from our committee, providing that if and when bill H. R. 10000 becomes a law—that is, when bill H. R. 10000 has passed House and Senate and has been approved by the President—it shall be known as "The Code of the Laws of the United States," and may be cited as "Code L. U. S." This further bill also provides that when and if H. R. 10000 becomes law, there shall be added a preface, table of contents, parallel reference tables to the Revised Statutes, and so forth, the Declaration of Independence, articles of Confederation, the Ordinance of 1787, Constitution of the United States, Appendix of laws passed by first session of the Sixty-ninth Congress, and an index. If the code now offered becomes law, the completed volume, with the additions stated, should be ready about three months after this session of Congress adjourns. It is contemplated that the volume shall be for sale by the Public Printer for about $5.

The code now offered by the committee has the usual saving clauses in it so as not to disturb acquired right, pending criminal and civil cases, statutes of limitation, and so forth. It provides for the repeal of existing law, but at the same time provides for a continuity of the law. It is evident that if the new volume is to have the force of law that it must repeal prior law and it must speak from some definite date. The committee has given very careful consideration to the so-called repealing clauses, and the clauses which you will find on the first page, in addition to the so-called saving clauses, provide that where the prior enactment is substantially contained in the present code, that as to it the code takes effect as of December 7, 1925, and as of that date the prior enactment is repealed. If any question should arise as to this, it would be for a court or official or any interested party to determine what is meant by the word substantial. I take it to mean in this connection a full restatement of the intent and meaning of the prior law. It is further provided that if any prior law is not so substantially restated that as to it the repeal does not take effect until July 1, 1927. The two provisions may fairly be stated to mean that this code, if it becomes law, is presumptive evidence until July 1, 1927, and thereafter it becomes absolute. We have therefore arranged to give the code this probationary period, and any errors which may be found can be corrected in the second session of this Congress. Any errors of consequence will doubtlessly be found before the second session, as thousands of judges, lawyers, Government officials, and employees are constantly referring to the statutes and may be relied upon to detect any errors.

Perhaps it may be well to say a word here in reference to the terms "code," "revision," and "compilation." I think the most apt name for the present work is "code," as a code is a systematic statement of the law, which is what has been attempted. A revision of law contemplates a rewriting of the law and even contemplates changes in the law. This has not been the object of the committee. We have religiously endeavored to leave the law as it is, but we have attempted to arrange an orderly statement. A compilation of laws does not contemplate much more than an orderly collection. The present work goes a little beyond that, because the various titles of laws have been omitted; laws which are manifestly obsolete by reason of expiration by their own terms have been omitted. Also laws found in appropriation laws have been placed in proper titles. It should be understood that the present work is not a revision of the United States statutes. If this work should become law there will still be plenty of work to do for the Committees on Revision of the Laws in future Congresses, as it is desirable that a real work of revision should later be undertaken. The present work will lay the foundation for such a revision; it will much facilitate such a revision, because the committees can devote their attention to one or more titles, as may be feasible in a particular session of Congress.

It is probable that there are some errors in the code now offered. A thousand expert revisers could probably not make it error proof. I feel safe in saying that it is as free from error as it can be made, because it has been prepared by the best talent available and has been severely scrutinized and checked by independent investigators. The possibility of error should be no objection to its passage. The question is, Is it the best to be had? If we allow more time to elapse we shall create more possibility for error. The work has been too long neglected already, and I sincerely hope that this code may become law at this session. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. VOIGT. May I have a minute more?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I am sorry, but I can not yield more time.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I do not think there will be any serious objection to the codification, which is covered by the bill H. R. 10000. But this bill is to be followed by another bill providing for the distribution of the code when printed. I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD]. When the second bill (H. R. 11318) comes along I would like my friend to explain as fully as he can section 3, which has reference to the matter of distributing the code after it is printed. That section provides that:

In addition to quotas already provided by law.

And so forth. I would like a specific reference to the law which is now assumed to provide the quotas. Then the section proceeds and says that the code when bound in buckram shall be distributed in the manner stated to the Members of Congress.

That is all right, but I would like to know whether there is anything in this second bill that would specifically require that the Government Printing Office should continue the printing of this code and put it on the market so it may be bought by anyone who wishes to purchase it at a price not exceeding the cost of printing and delivery.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, this is no effort to revise the laws. It is simply an effort to codify them. If there was excuse for the enactment of the Little code, then there is abundant reason for the enactment of this code. It attempts to bring the Federal statutes together in one work and makes it possible for the profession to know what the law is and where to find it.

The Committee on Revision of the Laws was unanimous in its support of this measure. I want to say to you that the chairman of that committee has given of himself most liberally in the preparation of this work. It is the Little code improved upon, of course, by the work of the chairman, the work of the committee, aided by the experts of these great law-publishing houses of the country, to whom reference has been made.

You gentlemen, of course, realize that this committee, in the time it has had to prepare this bill, could have accomplished nothing of any consequence except that it had been aided by the experts of the country whose business it is to codify the laws. We had these experts at our service by reason of the efforts of the chairman.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I will.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Georgia one additional minute.

Mr. STEVENSON. I want to ask this: In case there is a difference between the text of this and the text of any statute—

Mr. COX. The statute prevails up to July 1, 1927, when the law as stated in this code would prevail.

Mr. STEVENSON. In other words, if we pass this just as it is and there is no legislation making it the only general law and a conflict arises between the text of this and the original statute and the original statute prevails, then that will not help very much, will it?

Mr. COX. Of course, it would be almost impossible to prepare a work that would satisfy the demands of the profession except there be some effort at a revision of the laws. This work is burdened with a great many obsolete laws, because in codifying the laws there has been no effort made to rewrite them.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has again expired.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker, the only thing I can tell the House about this bill is that the general plan and the scope of this compilation follows the New York Consolidated Laws, which have proven very satisfactory to all the working lawyers of the State of New York and to everybody who has had to use the statutes of the State of New York.

You will find the law very readily in this work. You have your titles arranged alphabetically, and you have your laws set forth in the proper sections, one after another, where they belong, just as in the New York system.

As to the personnel which worked on this revision, I know the men from the Thompson Law Co. very intimately. Mr. Eldridge, who has had charge of this work, is a most painstaking, careful, and conscientious man. I know that, as far as that company is concerned, from my intimate knowledge of it everything has been done that could be done to insure care in this compilation. I will warrant that that bill is as perfect as any compilation could be, knowing so well that Mr. Eldridge himself is so scrupulous in everything he undertakes in connection with law publications. He is an experienced law writer, and he is largely responsible for the most used annotations to the New York Consolidated Laws, which annotations have proven of such working value to all New York lawyers.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes, in order to answer my friend from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. The first page of this code the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] will find accurately covers the whole situation. All statutes of limitation are saved, all matters pending in the courts are saved, and then, after the specific saving clauses, the gentleman will find that if this code differs from the present law the prior law must prevail until the 1st of July, 1927. Personally I do not like this delay, but the Senators have prevailed upon both committees to make this concession of leaving this period open, because they think that such a provision will be necessary in order to pass the bill in the Senate.

Mr. STEVENSON. Then, as I understand it, the answer of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] that the original statute prevails and not the provision in this bill, where they differ really means that the original statute prevails only up to July 1, 1927.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Only up to that time, and then this code is final and conclusive.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. How would you correct errors? For instance, my attention has been called to the fact that in the original law there is provided a salary of $3,600 for a certain officer, and in the proposed code here the salary is $1,800. That clearly is an error. How is that going to be corrected—by an act of Congress prior to July 1, 1927?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. If that is an error, as the gentleman has stated, the original law must prevail up until the 1st of July 1927.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And we will have to correct it before that?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. We can correct it before that time, because we have an entire session of Congress in which to do it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I would like to ask the gentleman as the chairman of the committee, for the purposes of the Record, whether the bill now in the possession of the reading clerk of the House is the measure which he has moved to suspend the rules and pass.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. To the best of my knowledge and belief.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Well, is it?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I can not tell unless I look at it. Apparently it is.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. We had this same situation some years ago, and Mr. Mann wanted that made clear.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin demands the yeas and nays. As many as are in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Two gentlemen have risen; evidently not a sufficient number.

So the yeas and nays were refused.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

PUBLICATION OF THE CODE OF THE LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 11318) to provide for the publication of the Code of the Laws of the United States, with index, reference tables, appendix, and so forth, with amendments.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when and if H. R. 10000, a bill to consolidate, codify, and reenact the general and permanent laws of the United States in force December 7, 1925, shall become a law in the Sixty-ninth Congress, it shall be known as "The Code of the Laws of the United States" and shall be so entitled and labeled and may be cited as

"Code L. U. S."; that such act shall be plated from the type in which H. R. 10090 was printed when it shall have passed the House of Representatives and shall be printed in the same style and form; that the general provisions of the code for the printing and distribution of laws are hereby modified with respect to such code as follows:

1. No slip copies as provided in section 191, of Title 44, of the Code of Laws of the United States, need be printed or distributed.

2. In lieu of distributing the code in pamphlet form as provided by section 195 of Title 44, the Public Printer is hereby authorized and directed to print a sufficient number of copies without the index, reference tables, and other ancillaries provided for in section 2 hereof, to supply the regulations therefor, and to furnish one copy each to Members of the Sixty-ninth Congress and others who are entitled by sections 191 and 195 of Title 44 to copies of laws in slip or pamphlet form.

SEC. 2. That the Committee on the Revision of the Laws of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized to have prepared for said code to be published with it in a single volume, and the Public Printer is authorized to print as ancillaries thereto—

1. Preface.
2. Table of Contents.
3. Parallel Reference Tables to the Revised Statutes of the United States.
4. Parallel Reference Tables to the Statutes at Large of the United States.
5. Parallel Reference Tables to the United States Compiled Statutes, Annotated.
6. Parallel Reference Tables to the Federal Statutes, Annotated.
7. The Declaration of Independence.
8. The Articles of Confederation.
9. The Ordinance of 1787.
10. The Constitution of the United States and amendments.
11. Appendix with the general and permanent laws of the first session of the Sixty-ninth Congress.
12. Index.

SEC. 3. That in addition to quotas already provided by law, except as modified by section 1 hereof, there shall be printed, published, and distributed of said code with the said ancillaries all bound in one volume in law buckram 10 copies for each Member of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Sixty-ninth Congress for his use and distribution, and in addition for the Committees on the Revision of the Laws of the Senate and House of Representatives a number of bound copies equal to ten times the number of members of the respective committees.

SEC. 4. That the Committee on the Revision of the Laws of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized to prepare, and the Public Printer to print, in slip form and furnish with each copy of the code distributed before July 1, 1927, a statement calling attention to the repeal provisions of the code, sections 2 and 6, inviting scrutiny of the work and encouraging constructive criticism.

SEC. 5. That this code shall be published as Part I of volume 44 of the Statutes at Large.

Mr. LUCE and Mr. BLACK of New York demanded a second.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LUCE. Is the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK] opposed to the bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK] is a member of the committee.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the demand for a second.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I demand a second, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Virginia a member of the committee?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. No; I am not, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts rose first, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts to demand a second.

Mr. LUCE. I am opposed to the bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this bill provides for a different sort of printing than would ordinarily take place. In the first place, this code as presented to you this afternoon is printed on only one side of the paper. It is the linotype work of the Government Printing Office. It has not been plated and not prepared for publication beyond that point which is necessary to fix its identity. This bill—H. R. 11318—provides for the code being printed from the plates prepared from this set-up in the type we have before us. The slip laws are done away with and the pamphlet laws are to be distributed on requisition to those who need them until the index and other aids in the use of the work are prepared. When the whole work is completed it will be distributed as other laws of the United States.

Answering my friend the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE], the general law which will operate upon the code in accordance with the terms of this bill may be found in title 44 of the proposed code. I do not know that I can recall the sections in Barnes's code, but they are in title 44 of this code and are sections 191, 194, and 195 of title 44.

There is a general provision that all public documents, including this code, are to be printed and sold by the Superintendent of Documents at cost. I got the estimate on the cost as late as to-day. The code complete with index and other features can be sold by the Superintendent of Documents in any number and throughout the United States at $5 a volume. I also investigated to find out what other codes cost, and I understand the cheapest code is $12.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. How many copies will be distributed through the folding room?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I could not say offhand.

Mr. BLANTON. There will be at least one copy to each Member?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes; you will get 10 bound copies as soon as it is completed and you will get one copy long before it is completed.

Mr. BLANTON. There will be 10 bound copies distributed through the folding room for each Member?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. As soon as possible after it has passed the Senate and before indexing, every Member will have a copy.

Mr. CRAMTON. What does the gentleman estimate will be the cost of the 10 bound copies to be furnished each Member?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I think $5 leaves a little profit—$4.50 or $4 probably.

Mr. CRAMTON. About twenty or twenty-five thousand dollars?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes. We have wasted now more than a half million dollars in attempting to pass this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. If there is anybody on earth that ought to know what the laws of the United States are and have access to them, it is Members of Congress.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; but does every Member of Congress need 10 copies?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, we can get 10 for about the price that we get one.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman will understand that I am not criticizing or antagonizing the bill; I want to get some information. I understand that if we print the code, it will be distributed not only to Members of Congress as specified and provided under existing law, but there is a distribution to all departments and agencies of the Government and Federal courts.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. As provided by law.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. As provided by existing law.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. That is true.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And when that is done the Government Printing Office will continue to print the code, so that it will be on the market at a price not exceeding the cost of printing and the cost of delivery?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes; through the Superintendent of Documents.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. So that we have guarded against the code falling into the hands of private printers, who might sell it at a profit?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. There is no opportunity for exploitation.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I will.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is not the inquiry of the gentleman from Texas answered on page 4, line 3? The gentleman from Texas asked how many copies each Member would have, and, as I read it, each Member of the House and Senate will have 10 copies.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. That is the intent to have it bound with all the accompanying features—there are 12 different features, the appendix, the cross reference to the Revised Statutes, the Constitution, and the others enumerated.

Mr. TREADWAY. Are these 10 copies that go to the Members of the House and Senate to be bound in buckram?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes; but they can requisition other copies if necessary.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. Are these bound volumes to go to the folding room, and will each Member get 10 volumes, or will they be distributed to anybody?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. As carefully as I could draw the provision, each individual Member will have 10 copies to his credit.

Mr. BARBOUR. I have found in other cases that the documents in the folding room have been distributed to others.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. This provides that each Member will get 10 copies.

Mr. TREADWAY. Does not that mean that the 10 copies will be listed to each Member in the folding room and put to his credit, and nobody else can go in and demand a copy belonging to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. It means that there shall be 10 copies for each individual Member of this Congress.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. In connection with the indexing, I take it that the representatives of both of these book companies will be in charge of the indexing.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. We have no written contract but the presidents have indicated that they will undertake to do this work. The Declaration of Independence and Constitution of course will be furnished by the Secretary of State, but these concerns are willing to furnish the cross reference tables, which are another feature, to their own annotated works. The other cross reference tables I have to have made with the help of the legislative index division of the Congressional Library under an appropriation already given to this committee.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The index is such an important part of any code, and especially one that is new, that it seems to me it is quite essential that both of these concerns lend their assistance to indexing as well as to the other work.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. They have agreed to give it to the Public Printer for $5,000.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. COX. In order that the publishers of this may realize the benefit of whatever may grow out of the labors they have put into the work, having superintended the preparation of this bill, would it not be necessary for them to proceed to the completion of the work by the preparation of an index?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes; and this country will be under great obligations to these two concerns if they will finish that job as they promised me they will. They have expended more than $20,000 out of their funds on the work already done.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does the gentleman leave it in the air as to whether or not this volume is to be indexed with a comprehensive index? Does the gentleman not think it ought to be fixed by law?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I have to anticipate as well as I can. I secured from this House an appropriation of $5,000 to do this. This is the estimate that I have had prepared by these companies, but I can not employ them to do it until the bill passes the Senate.

Mr. BRIGGS. The gentleman does not anticipate that the Congress will object to providing an adequate amount to prepare a comprehensive accurate index?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Oh, no.

Mr. BRIGGS. What does the gentleman estimate will be the price of this volume when it is prepared and ready for the public?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. If it were to be sold by a private concern it would be $12 or $15, but as coming from the Public Printer it will not exceed $5, and it might be a little less. I might add that we have had here in Washington as the headquarters the staffs of these two great law-publishing concerns. The presidents of both of the companies, Mr. Homer P. Clark, of St. Paul, and Mr. M. B. Wallis, of New York, have been here personally on the job. The editor in chief, Mr. Harold N. Eldridge, who has been so properly poised on the floor here to-day by the gentleman from New York, has been here and personally has superintended the work. We have had 11 of the most expert lawyers from the staffs of these two companies, and over 40 expert clerical persons on the work here continuously for weeks and weeks.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, of course, I want this published, and I have not the slightest desire to use 20 minutes, but I did want to make sure that I would have a chance to call the attention of the House to what seems to me an unfortunate provision in this bill. Paragraph 2 of section 1 calls for the publication and circulation of what I should say from a hasty glance at the law will be between three and four thousand copies, evidently intended for immediate use, until the bound volume is accessible.

Section 2 prevents even the insertion of a table of contents in this temporary volume. A book of this sort without a table of contents and an index is of small worth. Those of you who have had the volume we refer to as the "Little Code"—we have had it on our bookshelves now for two or three years—must have shared in my own annoyance in trying to find things in it without the help of an index. A book like this without an index is a pest and a plague; it is a nuisance. It wastes a very great amount of time and an additional amount of temper.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of New York. If the gentleman will look at the code, he will notice that it is alphabetically arranged under main titles, under which main titles there are subtitles, and in looking for a law one would go to the general, wholesale title, and under it then would find what he wanted in a subtitle. It is practically a table of contents for each section of the law.

Mr. LUCE. While the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Roy G. Fitzgerald] was talking I had occasion to look to find out whether the sections relating to the library had been attended to, as I understood they were to be attended to. I am glad to find that they have been, but I stood there, it seems to me, an interminable time trying to find out where the provisions were.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Can the gentleman give us any information as to how much it will cost to print these approximately 1,000 volumes in that particular form?

Mr. LUCE. I am not a member of the committee. The gentleman will have to ask some member of the committee for that information.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield to see if we can get that information from some one?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, if I understand the question correctly, I might state that this bill as we have it before us cost in the Printing Office alone for the work $16,627.25. If the bill had been printed as an ordinary bill is printed, and they had plated it and gone through with it, it would have cost $186,584.36. They estimate at the Printing Office that they can finish this with the index and all these other appurtenances and put it out and sell it to the public at $5.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. The gentleman is not giving the information that I desire. I want information as to the cost of printing the copies covered by paragraph 2; that is to say, the copies of the bill which would be distributed, one to each Member, and to departments of the Government before the index and preface, and so on, are prepared.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I have no definite information about what the bare code itself would cost, but you would have to divide $160,000, the cost of plating and printing this work, and apportion it among the different volumes, depending upon the number that we printed. That is best way that you can arrive at it.

Mr. Speaker, in this connection I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record a letter I received from the Public Printer to-day, which analyzes the cost and also the savings which have been alluded to here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to have printed the letter referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE,
OFFICE OF THE PUBLIC PRINTER,
Washington, D. C., April 19, 1926.

MY DEAR MR. FITZGERALD: Now that the code bill has been put in type and it is ready for consideration by Congress, I want to take this occasion to thank you and your committee for its cordial cooperation in the printing of this monumental work. We also deeply appreciate the excellent service of the representatives of the West and Thompson publishing companies in connection with the preparation of copy and revision of thousands of proofs of the code. I am sure that everyone concerned in this great undertaking has reason to feel proud of the accomplishment.

I also want to compliment you and the committees of the House and the Senate on the economies that have been effected in the printing of the code. If the code had been printed in the usual bill form as introduced, reported, and passed, it would have made 13,720 pages and have cost $186,584.36. By printing the code in the form adopted by your committee, its size was reduced to approximately 1,700 pages, at a cost to date of only $16,627.05. The net saving in the printing of the bill for consideration by Congress is thus $169,957.31.

By eliminating the duplicate distribution of the code in the slip and pamphlet forms, as proposed by H. R. 11318, an additional economy of $16,363.86 will be effected. To this saving should be added $7,927.86, which would be the extra cost of separate prints of the code in its present form if the regular bill number had been printed as introduced, reported, and passed in the House and the Senate.

From this statement you will see that the total saving in the method of printing the code, as approved by your committee, will be approximately $200,000.

If the code shall receive the approval of Congress at this session, I can assure you that this office will put forth every effort to expedite its publication.

Again congratulating you upon the splendid service that you and your committee have rendered the country in this great work, I beg to remain.

Respectfully yours,

GEORGE H. CARTER,
Public Printer.

Hon. ROY G. FITZGERALD,
Chairman House Committee on Revision of the Laws,
House of Representatives, United States,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understood the gentleman to state just now that section 2 provides for the distribution to supply the Members of the Sixty-ninth Congress and others that are entitled to them with copies of this law in pamphlet form, but without any index whatever. If the gentleman will yield, I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD] to state why we would not better wait and let the Members have an indexed volume?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. The purpose is to save money as much as we can. It will take from three to four months to prepare the index and cross-reference tables and to compile the law of this session of Congress, including the revenue law. In the meantime there are a great many people who will demand copies of the code. It is the best and most compact statement of the Federal laws in existence, and it would be intolerable to withhold it three months or more from the public, awaiting the index and other features. This bill has been worded and reworded a great many times. The gentleman will notice it has been amended by the committee because the Public Printer felt it would be wiser to put it in the present form and thereby permit greater economy.

As originally drawn I cut out all the strip laws and cut in two the pamphlet copies. The Public Printer feels that he ought to be authorized to print just so many as may be demanded.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It does seem to me there ought at least to be printed a table of contents, making an index from the various titles and making it possible to ascertain the contents.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. There is no reason why that can not be done. This only permits the Public Printer to print the code bare of the index and other features to meet necessary requirement during the three or four months that the index is in preparation. He is willing to put in a table of contents, and I am willing personally to have it prepared. But this bill simply permits the printing in this form to meet the demands of those who must have it before the index can be completed.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The bill says they are to be printed without the index.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. This is permission to the printer to print enough to meet the demands.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But this permission provides that he does not put in any index.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. That is not the intention.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have read it over carefully.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. He has already got permission to print.

Mr. TILSON. If the gentleman will yield, what is the use of printing these ponderous tomes until the index is ready? It is specifically stated that the law as contained in the publications heretofore issued shall be construed to be the law until 1927. Surely we can go on for the three or four months necessary to complete the index just as we have been going on for 50 years. Why not let it go until the index is completed? Why lumber up the shelves in our offices with one copy each of this volume while it is without an index or table of contents?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. We give the Public Printer permission to do this if it is demanded of him. I do not think with a code of this kind in existence that we should be put in such a position that Members of Congress could not have a single copy of it. This book ought to be made available as soon as it becomes a law in order that errors may be ascertained, if there are any.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the fact that in paragraph 2 the Public Printer is not authorized but directed to print a sufficient number of copies without index, and so forth, and if you try to print an index after passing this law, you are in great danger that some accounting officer might say you did it without authority.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. There is no danger of printing the index, because it can not be prepared until the law passes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If you try to print a table of contents without authority you may have difficulty.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. This is intended simply to meet the demand of those who are entitled to a copy or feel they ought to have a copy of the bare code without a delay of months. This bill is calculated to save thousands and thousands of dollars.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Is it not a fact that under each title there is practically a complete index?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes; the first six titles relate to the form of government, and after that it is in alphabetical order, with more than 500 cross references.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman explain what would be the effect if we should not adopt his committee amendment, but would let the text stand here as originally drawn?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. The Public Printer sent up a protest against that. We would save something like $7,000 by letting it stand in that way. In this way it would save something like $14,000 or $15,000, if too many copies are not demanded. It seems, if this bill passes the Senate and becomes a law, it will take three months to make the cross-reference tables and index. In the interim we should not be shut off from reference to the code, and therefore he has been directed to print a sufficient number to meet a reasonable demand. That, I think, is the best way to handle it, but I am not wedded to one way or other. My sole idea is simply to produce the law as stated here in its bare form and available in case of necessity, and to provide against the waste and loss which would be entailed by the general printing.

Mr. LUCE. Of course the gentleman understands that I have no desire to prevent the publication of the book. My question has been raised largely in the hope that inasmuch as the bill can not be amended here, somewhere else permission may be given to print a table of contents and index in even the first batch of copies.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course it can not be amended here under the rules except by unanimous consent. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio if he would not be willing, by unanimous consent, to insert in line 21, after the word "ancillary," the words "except a table of contents."

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Certainly, I would be very glad to.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That would improve it very much.

Mr. LUCE. That would help.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It should not come before the word "Provided." It should come in after the word "hereof."

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to offer the amendment as follows: Page 2, line 21, after the word "ancillaries" add "except a table of contents."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to offer an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 21, after the word "ancillaries" add the words "except a table of contents."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, that had better come after the word "hereof."

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I agree that that is so. If there is no objection, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amending words follow the word "hereof."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 21, after the word "hereof" insert "except a table of contents."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. Is further time desired? If not, the Chair will put the question. The question is on accepting the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Roy G. Fitzgerald] and suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR CONSTRUCTION AT MILITARY POSTS

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 10275) authorizing appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes, with the amendments which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 10275, with committee amendments.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $5,770,000 from the net proceeds derived from the sales of surplus War Department real property, including the sale of surplus buildings, deposited in the Treasury, as authorized by the act approved March 12, 1926 (Public No. 45, 69th Cong.), said sum to be expended for the construction and installation at military posts of such buildings and utilities and appurtenances thereto as, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, may be necessary, as follows:

Fort Benning, Ga., continuing of barracks construction, $725,000; Fort Monmouth, N. J., barracks for enlisted personnel, $555,000; Fort Monmouth, N. J., hospital, $100,000; Camp Lewis, Wash., beginning construction of post hospital, $125,000; Fort Sam Houston, Tex., barracks, $500,000; Selfridge Field, Mich., barracks, $570,000; Selfridge Field, Mich., noncommissioned officers' quarters, $180,000; Camp Meade, Md., barracks, $410,000; Fort Bragg, N. C., barracks, $360,000; Fort Humphreys, Va., barracks, $500,000; Camp Devens, Mass., barracks, $500,000; Erie Proving Ground, Ohio, barracks, $47,000; Edgewood Arsenal, Md., officers' quarters, $90,000; United States Disciplinary Barracks, Fort Leavenworth, Kans., hospital, $125,000; Mitchell Field, N. Y., barracks, $287,000; France Field, Panama, officers' quarters and noncommissioned officers' quarters, $139,000; Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, noncommissioned officers' quarters, $72,000; Fort Wadsworth, N. Y., barracks, $285,000; Maxwell Field, Montgomery, Ala., barracks, $130,000; noncommissioned officers' quarters, $70,000; Provided, That any unexpended balances or combined unexpended balances of any of the above amounts shall be available interchangeably for appropriation on any of the hospitals or barracks herein authorized.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this kind of a bill ought not to be called up here at this time of day and passed under suspension. I make the point of order that we have no quorum. This is an important bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and ninety-three Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, on page 2 we have stricken out Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, $450,000, for hospital construction, and the item for barracks at Camp Lewis, Wash., $800,000, for the reason that both of these items are contained in the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JAMES. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. What is the purpose of providing that certain sections of the Revised Statutes—sections 1136 and 3734—shall not apply?

Mr. JAMES. That language has been stricken out.

Mr. McKEOWN. It has been stricken out of the bill?

Mr. JAMES. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAMES. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. My understanding is that the item for Schofield Barracks is carried in the current Army appropriation bill, and is specifically appropriated for.

Mr. JAMES. The hospital; yes.

Mr. WINGO. And I suppose this language in the bill does not hurt that proposition?

Mr. JAMES. No.

Mr. WINGO. It does not affect the status of it?

Mr. JAMES. As I stated, it has been stricken out, and it was stricken out because the matter has already been taken care of in the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. WINGO. Then, as I understand it, the item for Schofield Barracks is stricken out of this bill?

Mr. JAMES. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. And that is because it is already appropriated for in the current Army appropriation bill?

Mr. JAMES. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. All I want to be sure of is that that hospital be finished.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. We know you are interested in it.

Mr. JAMES. On March 1 of this year the House passed a bill (S. 1129) which authorized the sale of surplus War Department real estate in order to provide funds from which to build barracks and quarters. This act approved March 12, 1926 (Public Law No. 45) provided for the establishment of a fund known as the military post construction fund, and further provided that estimates of the moneys to be expended from that fund, including a statement of the specific construction projects embraced in such estimates, shall be submitted annually to Congress.

H. R. 10275 comprises the first of such annual estimates and includes a list of construction which can be accomplished this year from funds now on hand from the sale of real estate.

These funds now amount to practically $7,000,000, and by July 1 will have had added considerable sums from sales now under negotiation.

The bill as introduced by the War Department originally called for construction items totaling $6,820,000. This amount has been revised by your Committee on Military Affairs, and as revised authorizes the expenditure of $5,770,000.

It was deemed advisable to strike out two items—one for the continuing of hospital construction in Hawaii, $450,000, and one for the construction of barracks at Camp Lewis, Wash., $800,000, for the reason that these items are already included in the Army appropriation bill. It was also deemed advisable for the reasons giving in our committee's report (Rept. No. 616) on this legislation, to add an item of $200,000 to provide for new construction at Maxwell Field, Ala., to replace war-time cantonment buildings.

These amendments, as I have stated before, bring the total amount authorized by this bill down to $5,770,000, which will provide hospital accommodations and permanent shelter for over 6,000 men and officers who are now living in war-time shacks and barracks.

As has been brought out many times in hearings on this subject, there are now living in war-time frame buildings over 40,000 officers and men of the Regular Army out of a total of 118,000; the buildings were designed and built with the idea of using them for not more than five years. It has now been nearly nine years since they were built—nearly twice their estimated life—and most of them have deteriorated to an extent where it is extremely uneconomical to try to keep them in repair; underpinnings rotted out, roofs and sills sagging, and windows and doors warped.

To compel our Regular Army to live much longer under conditions so detrimental to morale and discipline should not be countenanced by Congress.

It was brought out in the hearings before our committee that the same unsatisfactory conditions obtain at every post and station where troops of the Regular Army are occupying these cantonment buildings, and the greatest problem the War Department had in making up this year's construction list was to determine what could best be left out, rather than deciding on what should be built.

It will be noted that all the items included in this bill are either to replace war-time buildings or to furnish shelter where none now exists.

Taking up the items as they appear in H. R. 10275, I will run over briefly the reasons why these items were selected:

1. Fort Benning, Ga.: Continuing of barrack construction, $725,000. There are stationed at this post two Infantry regiments, the Twenty-fourth and Twenty-ninth, who have been living in tents for more than six years. Last year Congress appropriated $386,000 to commence permanent barracks from this appropriation, and there has been completed accommodations for about 360 men. It is desired to continue this construction this year to the extent of building three more sections of the barracks, which when completed will house an additional 685 men. The winters are cold in this part of Georgia, and these troops in tents have been subjected at times to great hardships.

2. Fort Monmouth, N. J., barracks for enlisted personnel, $555,000.

The Signal Corps battalion and special troops numbering about 600 men stationed at this post are quartered in temporary frame war-time buildings, which offer little protection against the cold winters of northern New Jersey; the buildings have deteriorated to a point where it is cheaper to build new quarters than attempt to keep the old ones in repair.

3. Fort Monmouth, N. J., hospital, $100,000.

The same remarks apply to the hospital building as to the barracks; the present hospital is a wooden shed, absolutely unfit for further use for hospital purposes. It is proposed with this sum to erect a 27-bed hospital in order that the sick may be suitably cared for.

4. Camp Lewis, Wash., beginning construction of post hospital, $125,000.

The hospital at Camp Lewis is located in a frame war-time structure unsuited for further occupancy as a hospital. The Army appropriation act contains provisions for beginning barracks at this post, and it is desired to furnish at least two permanent wards at this time as a part of the permanent garrison construction.

5. Fort Sam Houston, Tex., barracks, $500,000.

There is stationed at this post the Second Infantry Division, which for the greater part is quartered in war-time cantonment buildings, the condition of which has already been explained. It is desired with the amount specified to construct barracks for one of the Infantry regiments less two battalions, about 600 men, and for a brigade headquarters company, about 30 men. The completed barracks will require about $600,000 more, which will be included in future lists.

6. Selfridge Field, Mich., barracks, $570,000.

All of the Air Service stations except two were built during the war and are of the light frame construction which was deemed adequate for the duration of the war. All these posts must be rebuilt, and Selfridge Field was placed first on the list on account of the cold climate of northern Michigan.

7. Selfridge Field, Mich., noncommissioned officers' quarters, $180,000.

This amount will provide for the construction of 30 sets of noncommissioned officers' quarters. At the present time there are no noncommissioned officers' quarters at this field, and the men are living in improvised shacks or are on a rental status in the near-by town of Mount Clemens.

8. Camp Meade, Md., barracks, $410,000.

The Seventeenth Tank Battalion, comprising a total of about 512 men, are living at present in cantonment buildings which are about ready to fall down. The necessity for replacing these structures is evident, as has been stated before. This appropriation will provide permanent accommodations for the entire battalion. There is also stationed at this post the Army Tank School, living under similar conditions, but pending the determination as to the ultimate location of this school, the War Department did not include any construction for them.

9. Fort Bragg, N. C., barracks, $360,000.

This amount will provide for the construction of barracks for one battalion of Field Artillery, approximately 447 men, who are now living in war-time cantonments which are unfit for habitation. The roofs leak, floors sag, and the buildings are rapidly becoming uninhabitable.

10. Fort Humphreys, Va., barracks, $500,000.

Two regiments of Engineers are living in war-time buildings which should be replaced. The $500,000 for construction will provide permanent barracks for the personnel of these regiments, comprising about 650 men, with the exception of noncommissioned officers. All of the buildings at this post are of the frame war-time construction type and will have to be replaced at an early date. Other construction items will be placed on future lists.

11. Camp Devens, Mass., barracks, $500,000.

The same conditions apply here as at other posts where troops are quartered in cantonment buildings. The severe climate makes service here a real hardship. The amount contemplated will provide barracks for one Infantry regiment, the Thirteenth, less two battalions, and barracks for brigade headquarters company, and when completed will house approximately 620 men.

12. Erie Proving Ground, Ohio, barracks, $47,000.

There are about 50 enlisted men of the Ordnance Corps who are stationed at this post. The post occupies an exposed position on the shore of Lake Erie, and the frame buildings offer little shelter from the winter storms. This amount will provide permanent shelter for the enlisted men of the garrison.

13. Edgewood Arsenal, Md., officers' quarters, $90,000.

There is a serious shortage of quarters for officers at this station. A number of them are at present quartered in stucco noncommissioned officers' quarters and in tar-paper shacks, and others are on commutation status. There are no adequate housing facilities for the officers on commutation status in this vicinity, entailing an additional expense and a loss of time for travel to and from their station. This should be remedied without delay as an economic measure.

14. United States Disciplinary Barracks, Fort Leavenworth, Kans., hospital, $125,000.

This amount, it is contemplated, will build permanent hospital accommodations to replace a ward which is now installed in an old cell room. The cell room in which the present hospital is located is entirely unsuited for hospital purposes, is a fire hazard, and should be abandoned at the earliest possible date.

15. Mitchel Field, N. Y., barracks, $287,000.

No remarks are necessary concerning the necessity for this construction, as the same reasons apply as were cited in the case of Selfridge Field. This new construction will provide barracks for 355 enlisted men now living in war-time barracks.

16. France Field, Panama, officers quarters and noncommissioned officers' quarters, $139,000.

There is a serious shortage of quarters for both officers and noncommissioned officers at this field. Due to its isolated position, there are no houses in the immediate vicinity which can be rented, and it is necessary to provide shelter at the field for the officers and noncommissioned officers on duty there. With this $139,000 it is proposed to erect 6 sets of bachelor officers' quarters, 4 sets of married officers' quarters, and 12 sets of noncommissioned officers' quarters.

17. Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, noncommissioned officers' quarters, $72,000.

This post is in an isolated position, in a farming country where there are no houses available for rent nearer than 6 miles. It is proposed to build 24 sets of noncommissioned officers' quarters to house an equivalent number of these enlisted men who are now living in improvised shacks.

18. Fort Wadsworth, N. Y., barracks, $285,000.

S. 1129 authorizes the sale of Fort Schuyler, where one battalion of the Eighteenth Infantry, comprising about 350 men, are now living in war-time cantonments. With the above sum it is proposed to construct permanent barracks for this battalion at Fort Wadsworth, N. Y., thus releasing Fort Schuyler for sale in order to provide additional funds for this housing program.

19. Maxwell Field, Ala., barracks, $200,000.

This amount will provide permanent barracks for the headquarters, Fourth Division, Air Service Twenty-second Aero Squadron, Fourth Photo Section, and service detachments, a total of 162 enlisted men, and will construct quarters for 13 noncommissioned officers of the first three grades. The conditions at this post are practically the same that obtain at all Air Service stations—war-time cantonment buildings, which must be replaced.

As I have stated before, the conditions under which so large a portion of our Regular Army is living are disgraceful. The natural effect on the morale of the officers and men is most detrimental. Another serious effect has been the loss of time taken from training to allow large fatigue parties to work on these buildings, not only to keep them half way habitable but, indeed, to prevent their absolute collapse.

To fail to take action on this bill at this session of Congress means a delay of another year before construction can even be commenced, which means that for that length of time troops will be subjected to a further unnecessary hardship. The money is available and has been set aside for this specific purpose. I should like to call your attention to a letter from the Secretary of War, dated April 6, 1926, urging early and favorable action. This letter is as follows:

THE SPEAKER,
House of Representatives.

SIR: In connection with H. R. 10275, now pending in Congress, I feel that it is my duty to urge early and favorable action.

The housing conditions under which a large proportion of our officers and enlisted men are compelled to live is a disgrace to the Government and should be remedied without further delay. These deplorable conditions have been emphasized from year to year in the annual report of my predecessor and have been fully described in hearings before the Congress.

This year with the passage of the act of March 12 (Public, No. 45) it seemed that means were at hand to remedy matters without imposing any burden on the taxpayer, as the act in question created a fund now amounting to practically $7,000,000, from which new construction is to be financed.

H. R. 10275 sets forth a list of construction items at 18 places with a total expenditure of $7,020,000 for this year's construction.

Until this bill is passed authorizing the appropriation, it seems that the War Department is unable to get estimates for this construction passed by Congress. To fail to do so will result in at least a year's delay in providing the shelter so urgently needed—meaning that another winter and possibly two summers will elapse before the buildings can possibly be completed for occupancy.

In view of the urgent necessity for action, may I request that this bill be placed on the suspended calendar for early consideration?

Respectfully,

DWIGHT F. DAVIS, Secretary of War.

I wish to also call attention to the letters from Major Brant and the Director of the Budget:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
WAR DEPARTMENT GENERAL STAFF,
Washington, March 25, 1926.

HON. W. FRANK JAMES,
Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. JAMES: With further reference to the concluding paragraph of H. R. 10275 which removes certain limitations, the following information is submitted:

The War Department having determined what construction is necessary to accommodate certain troops or equipment, the Quartermaster General is notified of the location, character, and capacity of the buildings required. The Quartermaster General then presents estimates based on the information furnished him by the War Department, and arrived at by determining the cubical contents of the building, and applying the cost of labor and material per cubic foot. In preparing this preliminary estimate the same method is followed as is used by all civilian contractors, and, of course, is only an approximation. This approximation, however, taking into consideration the varying costs of labor and material in different sections of the country, has been found by actual experience to work out very closely.

These estimates then are submitted to Congress asking for authority to construct the buildings and for an appropriation to defray the expense. Having received authority from Congress to do the necessary construction, detailed plans and estimates are then worked out in the office of the Quartermaster General, who, under the act of June 3, 1916, is charged with the direction of all work pertaining to the construction, maintenance, and repair of buildings, structures, and utilities other than fortifications connected with the Army.

These plans and specifications include all the necessary details to enable bidders to calculate the cost of construction and present their bids. No new construction work is done until such competitive bids have been invited by public advertising through the medium of newspapers, etc. Plans and specifications on file in the office of the Quartermaster General are available for all prospective bidders. On being received, these bids are publicly opened at a specified hour on a specified date, and awarded to the lowest bidder complying with the requirements. It will be seen from the brief statement above that there is no opportunity for collusion between the Quartermaster General and prospective contractors, as was intimated in the hearings on this bill.

With reference to the clause which provides for waiver of sections 1136 and 3734, Revised Statutes, it is not really essential that this be included in the present legislation, as it is really a matter which pertains to appropriations. It was included in order to clear the situation and prevent any misunderstanding which might tend to prevent the execution of the construction projects.

Section 1136 provides that no permanent barracks in excess of $20,000 shall be constructed until detailed estimates have been submitted to Congress and approved by special appropriation for the same. If this remains in effect, it is apparent that detailed estimates which have not yet been prepared, would have to be submitted for each and every item of construction included in this bill. It is held by the War Department that the information submitted already to the committee which gives the location, character of construction, accommodations for enlisted men and officers, together with size and estimated cost, is all that can be produced at this time. To draw up detailed plans and specifications prior to the granting of authority to construct these buildings would be merely a waste of time, inasmuch as Congress might eliminate any number of the buildings which it is proposed to construct.

Section 3734 provides that before a new building for the use of the United States is commenced, plans and estimates therefor shall be prepared and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, Postmaster General, and the Secretary of the Interior. It seems perfectly clear that they are not interested in the construction of Army barracks, and it is thought best to include this waiver in order to eliminate any possible question. As a matter of fact, the act of June 3, 1916, prescribes that this work is a function of the Quartermaster General under authority of the Secretary of War, and makes no reference to the Post Office, Treasury, or Interior Departments. It is believed that this particular section was written up by Congress to cover the erection of public buildings such as post offices, etc. This same clause including these waivers will be found, for example, in the Army appropriation act for 1926, which provides for new construction at Madison Barracks, and the Air Field at Dayton, Ohio. The Quartermaster General states that Mr. Anthony is quite familiar with the necessity for the inclusion of such clause where Army construction is involved.

Trusting that the above information is what is desired—if any further details are considered necessary, please advise me and I will endeavor to obtain them.

Letter covering the same points has been forwarded this date to Mr. MORIN, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and signed by the Acting Secretary of War.

Sincerely yours,

G. C. BRANT,
Major, General Staff.

BUREAU OF THE BUDGET,
Washington, April 17, 1926.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF WAR.

SIR: Referring to your letter of April 16, 1926, you are advised that the proposed amendments to bill H. R. 10275, authorizing appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes, which you mention in your letter, are not in conflict with the financial program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

H. M. LORD, Director.

In view of all the circumstances set forth above I wish to urge the passage of this bill, not only as an economic measure but in justice to the officers and enlisted men of our Regular Army, who for so many years have been compelled to exist under such disheartening living conditions.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

MR. LAGUARDIA. If gentlemen want to vote $7,000,000 away without consideration, I certainly can not do very much to prevent it.

I believe, when we have a bill of this kind under consideration, the least we can do is to make a record and show what we are doing. Let the country at least know what is going on.

Gentlemen will recall that a few weeks ago a bill passed the House under suspension, and it has since become a law, authorizing the War Department to sell surplus property and to put the proceeds of the sales into a separate fund and to use that fund for repairs and construction. I opposed it at the time. I pointed out that the War Department would simply go wild in spending money, and here is your first bill appropriating $7,200,000. And it is only a starter; it is only the first bill. My objection to the bill authorizing the sale of surplus property was the creation of a separate fund. It is my firm belief that the proceeds should go in the Treasury, in the general fund.

To-day you appropriated $200,000 for an artillery field at Fort Ethan Allen, Vt. To-day you authorized the Navy Department to build several hospitals, and a few weeks ago you authorized the Veterans' Bureau to build more hospitals and build extensions. I want to point out that several departments are building hospitals; the House is appropriating huge amounts of money and there is bound to be a great deal of unnecessary building. The War Department is authorized to sell surplus property and place the proceeds in a separate fund. Having this authority they will spend more money than they would otherwise. In addition to what we have already authorized them to sell, they are already planning to come here with a new list of surplus property and get authority to sell more, and then turn right around and ask for authority to sell more.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. How can the gentleman possibly reason that either Congress or the War Department could run wild when it is proposed to provide suitable quarters for regiments and it costs $1,000,000 per regiment to house them?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Of course there is no objection to that, as the gentleman would know if he would follow what I have said. Here is $7,000,000. Now, let us concede that every cent is necessary.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Absolutely.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. All right. But does the gentleman know what they are selling and what they are building?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I know of one tract of land in my district, owned by the War Department, covered with valuable fir timber worth a great deal of money, which should have been sold many years ago. It will soon be dead-and-down timber and not of real commercial value.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. And I know of one tract in my city that the War Department is going to sell, and they do not know the value of it.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman from New York has been holding up to the House as one of the horrible examples of legislation the bill that passed the House this afternoon by unanimous consent authorizing the Navy Department to build certain hospital facilities?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. No; I am simply pointing out that you have three departments of the Government now building hospitals. You have the Veterans' Bureau spending millions; you have the Navy Department; and now we are asked to authorize the Army to do the same thing. It seems to me that where you have hospitals in close proximity to each other you should use those hospitals for the various departments. The Veterans' Bureau hospitals to-day have thousands of vacant beds, with an enormous overhead, and yet the various departments come here and ask for more money to build more hospitals. There seems to be no coordination of hospital facilities.

Only last Saturday, in a New York paper, there was an inspired statement by the War Department and I want the gentleman to know of it. The War Department says it has more surplus property to sell and it has suggested that Governor's Island in New York harbor would bring $18,000,000. They say it is worth only that, but they really do not know anything about values there. Then there is a proposal to sell the Presidio in California.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman says we have already given them $20,000,000 and it may be $30,000,000, and this bill appropriates $7,000,000 more, but how are we going to stop this bill?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. That is it exactly.

Mr. BLANTON. How are we going to stop it. Whenever the powers that be ordain that a certain bill shall pass, they are going to pass it.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. The least we can do is to bring these matters to the attention of the House and to the attention of the country. The War Department, I repeat, only a few weeks ago having been empowered to sell surplus property is now looking around for more property to sell, and will come in with another bill very soon.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. No; the gentleman can get time from the proponents of the bill.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. I think about all this money is derived from Florida lands or at least several million dollars of it, might we not just as well put it back into circulation.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. It does not go back into circulation in the gentleman's State.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. No; not in my State.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Is the gentleman a member of the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. No; I am not.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I have just been wondering since I read in this report that at certain Army posts men and officers are living in tents. One of the major posts is in my district and men and officers to-day are living in tents without any roofs on the tents, and not only that, but many of the warehouses there that have the provisions are in the same condition.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. The gentleman does not get my point.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I have been wondering how they distributed this fund.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Is not the gentleman's post included?

Mr. HUDSPETH. No; not one dollar, and I just wanted to know how they distribute this.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Well, that is typical. Probably the gentleman can tell us about the clubrooms we are appropriating for.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Oh, if we could take care of these non-commissioned officers out there and the men who are living in tents, we would do away with the clubrooms, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Let me say to the gentleman from Texas that this is what they will do. They will first get this $7,000,000—

Mr. HUDSPETH. I want to get on to the system. If the gentleman can put me next to the system, I will appreciate it, because I represent one of the major posts out there.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. This is the system. We have given the War Department authority to sell $20,000,000 of surplus property, and the proceeds go in a separate fund. They will come in with the same old story that this does not require any new appropriations because they have got the money.

They will take this first list contained in this bill and they will spend all of the money, and then they will come in later on and will put in the gentleman's post, and they will take some other districts—scatter them around and pass another bill and there will be no end.

Mr. HUDSPETH. When will they do it? If the gentleman will give me that information, I will thank him.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. When they are good and ready; when all the officers are quartered and when all the club rooms are built.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I am going to support the bill, but I want to get on to the system, and I thought the gentleman, being a military man, could put me next to the system.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. When you get on to the system of the War Department, then you are on to some system, believe me.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Then I am going to endeavor to get on to the system.

Mr. O'CONNELL of New York. And they have it patented too, have they not?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Seemingly.

Let me call your attention to this language in the bill:

That any unexpended balances or combined unexpended balances of any of the above amounts shall be available interchangeably for expenditure on any of the hospitals or barracks herein authorized.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. That is not the correct language. The correct language is "for appropriations" and not "for expenditure," which means that in order to do what the gentleman has suggested they would have to go to the Committee on Appropriations and get the necessary consent.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. What do these four lines mean then?

Mr. JAMES. Where you have "expenditure" it should be "appropriation," which means they would have to go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. I got the bill from the only source I can get bills.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Here is a copy of the bill which I will give the gentleman. I have almost worn it out studying it.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. That is the same bill I have.

Mr. HUDSPETH. There is no chance to amend the bill.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. That is the same bill I have.

Mr. JAMES. If the gentleman will examine the bill at the Clerk's desk, he will find the word "appropriation" instead of the word "expenditure."

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Is that the "old army game," one bill at the Clerk's desk and one before us?

Mr. JAMES. I read the gentleman the language as amended.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. All I know is the bill I have and the bill that all the Members have. If there is something else at the Clerk's desk, I think we ought to know it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] That is not going to take me off my feet. I have been too long in the business for that.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will state to my friend, if he will put me on to the system, I will appreciate it and will be under lasting obligations to him.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. I will tell the gentleman how he can get on to the system. Let us vote down this bill.

Mr. HUDSPETH. No; we would not get anywhere by doing that.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. The gentleman would get the repairs at the post he is interested in.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Oh, no.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Then I will tell the gentleman what is going to happen. If the gentleman is going to pass this bill and wait until his post comes along, then they are going to keep it until the last so the gentleman will vote for every bill that comes along.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman is painting a gloomy picture for me.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. The situation is gloomy.

Mr. LOZIER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. LOZIER. Does not the report show that this is simply the beginning of a series of demands that the War Department is to make for similar appropriations?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Certainly; now this is interesting, and I want any gentleman on the Military Affairs Committee to deny this: You have posts in New York where you have a major general in command of about 200 men. This Army is top heavy with major generals, and we have to create posts for them. That is why you have to have headquarters and suitable buildings for all attachés, and that is why the soldiers in the gentleman's [Mr. HUDSPETH] State is not properly housed. There are three or four commands around New York where there is a major general with only 300 men in the whole command. A lieutenant could take command of those posts. Now if that is not so I would like to have some gentleman deny it. This corps of high ranking officers is selling land and selling property and making these repairs. There are a great many barracks throughout the United States that need repairs, but they will be the last on the list.

Mr. SCHAFER. What would the gentleman have the major generals do?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. I would have a proper table of organization and have the high command in proportion to the number of enlisted personnel. You do not have to be a military expert to know that.

Mr. HUDSPETH. But the gentleman from New York assures me that I will be on the list?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. I can not assure the gentleman of that if he votes for every bill that comes from the Military Committee.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. This bill provides for the quarters for enlisted men. Is not the gentleman satisfied, in view of the fact that it provides for the urgent need of the enlisted men of the Army to-day?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. I believe if the War Department knows what they need they could come in with a complete list at this time. Will the gentleman say that this is all that they will ask for?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. This is only a start, of course.

Mr. JAMES. I will assure the gentleman that this will be the last bill; that the Military Affairs Committee will not appropriate money unless it is in the Treasury. After this bill passes the House and the Senate, the War Department will, if they want to spend any money, have to come to the Appropriations Committee, and that will have to go before the House and the Senate.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. I am aware of that, but the gentleman knows that we made an appropriation for an artillery range, and he knows that they are selling land all over the country, and they are coming in with a bill for the sale of more surplus property.

Mr. JAMES. The gentleman stated a little while ago that they were going to sell Governors Island. Has the gentleman seen the statement in the paper that the Secretary of War denies that statement?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Will the gentleman say that no more bills of that kind will come in for the sale of surplus property?

Mr. JAMES. I do not know.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. The gentleman can only guess; he does not know what they are going to do, but when the War Department brings in a bill it generally goes through the gentleman's committee.

Mr. SNELL. Does not the gentleman think this property should be sold if the Government does not need it?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Yes. They are selling a piece of property in the gentleman's own town—Watertown. Does the gentleman know if Army officers will sell it for its real market value?

Mr. SNELL. I do not know anything about it; but what would a piece of property in Watertown be used for for governmental purposes?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. If it is of no use, sell it, but sell it intelligently and put the proceeds in the general fund of the United States Treasury.

Mr. SNELL. That is what we are trying to do.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. But you are keeping the funds separate and encouraging lavish expenditures on posts where it is not needed.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman tell us one object that is not necessary for the convenience and comfort of the personnel of the Army?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. I can tell the gentleman of other posts where it is more urgent.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. There are posts on the list that are very urgent.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. But there are others more urgent. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. WRIGHT. The gentleman will concede that every item in the bill is meritorious, will he not?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. No.

Mr. WRIGHT. And that these improvements are needed at every point designated in the bill?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. No.

Mr. WRIGHT. Which is not needed?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. I say that there are other posts. The gentleman from Texas mentioned one of these posts a moment ago.

Mr. WRIGHT. But I am talking about the items included in this bill. Do they not need construction at every point mentioned in the bill? If not, will the gentleman please point out at which they do not need construction?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. The War Department knows the condition of every post in this country, and they should come in with a complete bill, so that we would know just what posts were more urgent than others.

Mr. WRIGHT. Does not the gentleman know that the War Department has offered a comprehensive program of construction going through a series of years, and that that whole matter was threshed out before a joint committee of the Senate and the House last year, that it is a matter of record, and that this is the beginning of the program?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Exactly; and I want to know how great this program is and how much more property the department is going to sell.

Mr. WRIGHT. If the gentleman will read the testimony taken he will see that it is comprehensive.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. This is only a start.

Mr. WRIGHT. It is just the beginning of it.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Exactly; and that is the point that I am trying to make. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON].

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, as I understand this bill, it is simply carrying out the policy that we entered upon a short time ago when we authorized the War Department to sell certain property that was found to be surplus. Through the development of the military art and changing conditions certain property owned by the Government has come to be surplus. A short time ago this House authorized the sale of this surplus property, but it was known at the time we authorized the sale that it was the intention to ask to invest the proceeds of the sale, or substantially the same money, in new buildings, which are very much needed to house the Army; and that is all this bill does. We are not entering upon a new policy of wild expenditure. We are in effect using the old property that has become surplus to construct new property that is absolutely necessary. What is wrong about it? It seems to me to be such a sensible, businesslike thing to do that I can not see where there can be anything wrong about it.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LOZIER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for one minute, all the time the gentleman has left.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, in the one minute allotted me, I can not discuss this matter in detail, but I can say that I intend to vote against this bill for two reasons: First, because it is proposed to railroad it through this House under a suspension of rules, without debate, and with no opportunity being given to consider its details and merits. From appearances, this bill carrying an appropriation of over $7,000,000, will be rushed through the House in 20 or 25 minutes, without 1 Member in 50 knowing anything whatsoever about its provisions. Thus it is that Congress functions with lightning rapidity when the leaders decide they want to expend vast sums for military purposes. I am not a pacifist, but I do protest against the recklessness with which Congress grants the requests of the War and Navy Departments for funds.

Secondly, I am opposed to the subtle and cunningly devised plans by which the public funds are appropriated for military purposes, a very considerable part of which is wasted. When the War and Navy Departments ask for funds, the administration never says a word about economy. It always manages to find sufficient funds to maintain large military and naval establishments. And these demands, as in the present instance, are camouflaged under the guise that the funds are badly needed.

The report which accompanied this bill tells us that this is but the beginning of a series of similar appropriations which will be demanded of Congress in the near future, and no one can tell what the ultimate cost will be of this comprehensive program. It will not be denied that this expenditure of $7,000,000 will be followed by others which will drain many million dollars out of the United States Treasury.

But they say the Government sold surplus property and now has this money in the Treasury. That does not change the situation. It is Government money that is being expended by this bill. But "what's the use" to object? A large majority of the Members of this House are eager and impatient to vote for this bill. I realize that I am in a hopeless minority, but my vote will be cast against this bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LOZIER] tells us that this is the beginning of a great military program. If the gentleman means by that that we are embarking upon a policy of enlarging our Army or anything leading toward militarism, he is entirely wrong. [Applause.] The Congress of the United States by law has fixed the size of the Regular Army of the United States. All in the world that this bill does is to take money which has been derived from the sale of surplus military real estate and exchange that money for the construction of buildings to properly house the Army which we have authorized and provided for. [Applause.]

This bill authorizes the appropriation of $5,770,000 for the construction of barracks, quarters, and hospitals for the Army. Under the bill new buildings will be constructed at 20 different military posts of the United States. The War Department is indeed to be commended on its willingness and its efforts to dispose of surplus military property to secure as much as possible of the money necessary for the needed construction rather than seeking to hold fast to this surplus property and endeavoring to get this new construction paid for by money taken from the General Treasury of the Government.

The pending bill comes to this House in answer to an amendment placed by the House on the 1925 War Department appropriation act, which amendment was as follows:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to submit to the Congress at its next session a comprehensive plan for necessary permanent construction of military posts, including Camp Lewis in the State of Washington, based on using funds received from the sale of surplus War Department real estate and from the sale of such property now owned by the War Department as in the opinion of the Secretary of War is no longer needed for military purposes.

The bill is the result of many days of hearings that have taken place since December, 1924. In that month the Committees on Military Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives held joint hearings on the subject of the sale of surplus military real estate and the necessary permanent construction at military posts. In February, 1925, subcommittees of the Committees on Military Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives held hearings on this subject and in January of this year the Military Affairs Committee of the House held further hearings on this same subject. Just about three weeks ago the Military Affairs Committee of the House held hearings on the pending bill. The President of the United States in his annual message to this Congress on December 8 last recommended and urged the adoption of the policy that is being carried out in the pending bill. The Secretary of War in his annual report for the year 1925 plead with the Congress to adopt the policy of the bill and eloquently and elaborately set out the reasons for his plea. The policy was approved by this House on just March 1 last when it passed the bill S. 1129 providing for the sale of surplus military real estate.

The need for the construction of new buildings at many of our military posts is indeed compelling. There are to-day some 40,000 officers and men in the United States Army who are quartered in temporary shacks or in tents. As Maj. Gen. W. H. Hart, Quartermaster General of the Army stated at the joint hearings of the subcommittees in February, 1925, to which I have referred, the temporary shacks are of war-time construction, erected during the years 1917 and 1918 and they were never intended at the time of their erection to last longer than for the emergency then existing. They were constructed of unseasoned lumber and light material hastily thrown together, the time element being the essential factor. As General Hart further stated, many of the temporary shacks now being used as barracks are in extremely poor condition. The lumber has shrunk, the foundations are rotting and in many instances bunks have to be moved or covered during rainstorms. One of the worst features of the situation is the fact that large amounts of money appropriated each year by this House for the maintenance of the Army have to be spent for the upkeep and repair of these shacks. This expenditure is a pure waste so far as any permanent benefit is concerned, but it has to be made, for the officers and men of the Army must be housed. In some instances, General Hart tells us, it has been necessary to expend in one year practically one-third of the original cost on a barrack building in order to provide shelter from the elements. The money spent on such buildings merely tides over temporarily the present needs and gives no permanent relief. As the Hon. Dwight F. Davis, the Secretary of War, well states in his annual report for last year:

It is not too much to say that should such barracks be used many more years, the amount of money expended on their upkeep will soon have equaled the original cost of the structures at their war-time price. Such expenditures constitute an extravagance, not an economy.

This is like pouring water in a rat hole. I submit to the House the following significant statement by General Hart:

To cite a few instances indicating the wastage of repair funds: During the last fiscal year this office has received requests from—

Camp Lewis for an allotment of $230,000 for purely repair work, of which $60,000 is necessary for roofing, $90,000 for floorings and replacing rotten underplinnings, and $68,000 for other miscellaneous carpentry work;

Fort Bliss for $194,000 for repairs, of which $80,000 is for floorings and roofs;

Fort Benning for $71,000 for ordinary temporary repairs. This is in addition to the money that is being spent for tentage at this post; and

Fort Bragg for $120,000 for repairs to the roofs and underpinning.

A considerable part of these requests must be met immediately. The roofs and underplinnings must be attended to if the buildings are going to be occupied, and after a lapse of two or three years there will be no evidence of the expenditure of this large amount, and the work will have to be done over.

On the other hand, if this amount were available for expenditure on permanent structures, a far greater number of buildings could be taken care of; moreover, the repairs would be permanent instead of being quickly lost through the deterioration of the temporary building.

It is conservatively estimated that when soldiers are housed in tents, the cost of tentage per man per year is $20. For the approximately 3,000 men at Fort Benning this would amount to $60,000 per year. This is in addition to the money necessary for repairs to the temporary buildings.

The only solution of the problem is to replace the temporary buildings as rapidly as financial conditions will permit, thereby alleviating this most unsatisfactory condition and, in addition, conserving the annual repair funds allotted for yearly maintenance and upkeep.

The pending bill authorizes appropriations to relieve the conditions at Camp Lewis, Fort Benning, and Fort Bragg, besides relieving the conditions at 17 other Army posts. Do you gentlemen not believe that we should pass this bill and put an end to this awful waste of the people's money? Mark you, the appropriations authorized by this bill will not come out of the General Treasury but out of the funds derived from the sale of surplus property and which funds are now in the hands of the Government.

The temporary shacks in which so many of our officers and men are housed are veritable fire traps. As the commandant of the Cavalry School at Fort Riley, Kans., where conditions are typical, stated in his annual report to the Secretary of War:

The war-time buildings are veritable fire traps, and in case of fire there would probably result a terrible loss of life, as many children live in these quarters. They would not be permitted in any well-regulated municipality.

As the Secretary of War states in his last annual report, the officers commanding units in the field are in constant dread of the outbreak of a conflagration in groups of temporary wooden buildings which are being used for housing purposes. We must remember, gentlemen, that many of these temporary wooden structures, which are mere tinder boxes, are being used for hospitals. The danger of fire in these buildings used for hospitals is naturally greatest during the long, dry summer months, and this is the time when these buildings are used not only for the care of the sick of the Regular Army but for the care of the sick of the National Guard, Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and other civilian units who are in attendance at the training camps. Can you imagine, gentlemen, the feeling of horror that would come over the Members of this House if they were to read in their morning paper that the lives of hundreds of sick soldiers had been snuffed out in some terrible conflagration or that Army women and children had been cremated in some awful fire? There has been heavy loss from fire in these temporary buildings, although fortunately no human lives have been taken. In the last fiscal year the loss reported by destruction by fires, the total number of which was 250, amounted to $914,894.23 for the buildings, based on their original cost, and $669,146.71 for the contents. These losses were to public property and do not include the losses suffered by individual officers and enlisted men of the Army. It is significant to note that in his annual report for 1924 the former Secretary of War, Mr. Weeks, stated:

At the Field Artillery School at Fort Sill the present temporary buildings are rapidly becoming unfit for occupying and in their present condition present a serious fire hazard.

Within a few months after the rendition of the 1924 annual report 116 sets of officers' quarters, all of temporary construction, were burned to the ground at Fort Sill.

Another danger to human lives in the use of these temporary shacks is the danger from the terribly dilapidated condition of many of them. In many instances steps and porches have had to be roped off on account of their unsafe condition.

Col. H. O. Williams, Inspector General's Department, testifying before the joint hearing of the subcommittees to which I have referred, made the following significant statement:

As to the very flimsy nature of those buildings, you have seen the pictures of them, but I would like to give you a little incident that occurred in Panama. We had a truck that got a little unmanageable; the driver put it in reverse and could not get it out, and it ran over a hill and hit one of our buildings that was housing about 60 enlisted men. It crumpled up that building as though it was a paper box or a toy house. Fortunately there were only two men sleeping in there, and the Lord protected them, and they were not hurt very much.

Gentlemen, we can not underestimate the effect that this poor and dangerous housing has upon the morale of the Army. The Secretary of War, in testifying before the Military Committee at our recent hearing, said:

In fact, it is a great surprise to me, when I go around, to see that there is any morale at all. I think it is wonderful that they are able to keep any morale at all.

Much of the time of the men of the Army, instead of being used for drill and military purposes, is taken in an effort to fix up and make livable the old wooden shacks. The men are kept busy fighting dust in dry seasons and mud in wet seasons. Their standards of living keep getting lower and lower, and correspondingly their morale gets lower. As Colonel Williams, to whose testimony I have referred, well said:

Another feature that affects the morale, and this is particularly true of the women, is the lack of privacy; the women have to stay in the house 24 hours; men get out and get a little relief. Outside of the physical discomforts, it being hot in the summer and cold in the winter, is this lack of privacy; the partitions in these buildings are very thin; any noise in one building goes right into the next building; every time a child cries it is heard by the next family; every time some one turns on a wheezy phonograph it is heard in the adjoining rooms; even the flushing of a toilet in one apartment is heard in the next. That gets on the nerves of the women, and they become almost nervous wrecks. I suppose they nag their husbands a bit, and the result is a lowering of tone and of morale.

Can we not imagine, gentlemen, the effect that these poor housing conditions must have upon the morale of the officers and men?

Gentlemen, let us pass this bill as a matter of sound economy, let us pass it and put an end to the danger that now hovers over the lives of 40,000 of the officers and men of the Army, and the lives of their families, let us pass it for the morale and the esprit de corps of the Army. Let us pass it for the Army, an Army that has never known defeat, and that has never failed the Nation in the hour of its need. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 223, noes 11.

So, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, this bill (H. R. 10275) is the first authorization of expenditure for Army posts, barracks, hospitals, and quarters made under the Wadsworth-Hill Act creating the permanent Army-post fund of about $28,000,000, which was passed a few weeks ago.

This bill, as shown in the hearings, for the first time starts development of Army posts along the lines of the nine corps area system of the national defense act. At the hearings on March 20 I put in the following analysis of this bill:

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Here is my pencil memorandum as to the makeup of the 20 items in the authorization and, if that is correct, would you mind putting it in with your remarks? It gives the amount at each corps area and the purposes of the distribution, in a very brief form.

Twenty items of authorization

Overseas, Hawaii and Panama	$691,000
First Corps Area: Camp Devens, barracks	500,000
Second Corps Area:
Fort Monmouth, N. J., barracks	$555,000
Fort Monmouth, N. J., hospital	100,000
Mitchel Field, N. Y., barracks	287,000
Fort Wadsworth, N. Y., barracks	285,000
	1,227,000
Third Corps Area:
Fort Humphreys, Va., barracks	$500,000
Camp Meade, Md., barracks	410,000
Edgewood Arsenal, Md., officers' quarters	9,000
	1,000,000
Fourth Corps Area:
Fort Bragg, N. C.	$360,000
Fort Benning, Ga.	725,000
	$1,085,000
Fifth Corps Area: Erie Proving Grounds, barracks	47,000
Sixth Corps Area:
Selfridge Field, Mich., barracks	$570,000
Selfridge Field, Mich., noncommissioned officers' quarters	180,000
	750,000
Seventh Corps Area: Fort Leavenworth, Kans., hospital	125,000
Eighth Corps Area: Fort Sam Houston, Tex., barracks	500,000
Ninth Corps Area:
Camp Lewis, hospital	$125,000
Camp Lewis, barracks	800,000
	925,000
Total	6,820,000

This bill makes possible the development of Camp Meade, for which I have been working for five years, but that is only one quid of satisfaction.

This bill takes care of very necessary housings in all the corps area. I call the attention of the House to the following extracts from the hearings on the Wadsworth-Hill bill which I reported in the hearings on this bill—showing what this bill starts doing:

Mr. HILL of Maryland: Mr. Chairman, I have marked a few extracts from the joint hearings before the subcommittees of the Committees on Military Affairs, held February 18, 19, and 20, 1925, which I ask permission to have inserted in the record.

Mr. JAMES. Without objection, they may be incorporated. The Chair hears none.

The extracts referred to are as follows:

"Colonel KNOX. It is not as far as the combat arms are concerned, for this reason: The reservations are quite small and they are largely covered with buildings and fortifications. There is very little extra space for troops of the line to drill. There are no facilities for target practice with the rifle and with the machine gun. Also in some cases, particularly in the First Corps Area, the animals for the trains of Infantry organizations and the animals for machine-gun carts have to be cared for at Camp Devens. These posts are largely on islands, which makes it necessary to use water transportation for both personnel and supplies, so they are generally unsatisfactory for mobile troops of the Regular Army. As a means of shelter, which is all they are getting at the present time, they will shelter the troops, but invariably in summer troops go for training purposes to Camp Devens.

"That is just one corps area, and the other corps areas along the Atlantic seaboard are in a similar situation.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. In that corps area you would concentrate everything at Camp Devens if you could?

"Colonel KNOX. Yes, sir.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. And that is your theory of national defense?

"Colonel KNOX. Yes, sir. They have to go there, anyhow. That is what we want. Of course, the Coast Artillery posts that we would thus vacate have valuable equipment, the care of which is necessary, and the Coast Artillery would care for this and would retain these posts, or a large majority of them.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. And the same in the third area; you have your Artillery brigade at Fort Howard, have you not?

"Colonel KNOX. We have an Artillery brigade there less one regiment.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. Is not that Infantry headquarters?

"Colonel KNOX. Yes, sir; the Twelfth Infantry, less one battalion.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. It ought to be at Camp Meade, ought it not?

"Colonel KNOX. Yes, sir.

"The Third Corps Area is in a similar situation. It formerly had no strictly Infantry stations or mobile army stations other than at Fort Myer, which has Field Artillery and Cavalry.

"Chairman WADSWORTH. Are there any questions the members of the committee desire to ask the major?

"I see these photographs display typical quarters.

"Major PRENTISS. Yes, sir.

"Chairman WADSWORTH. I have seen a good many of them myself.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. Yes; for instance, at Camp Meade there is a large number of barracks which are the type of one of these at Fort Bragg.

"Major PRENTISS. Yes, sir.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. A number of them have been condemned; you can not put troops in them.

"Major PRENTISS. That is the fact.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. And, as a matter of fact, a majority of them are in that condition.

"Major PRENTISS. An increasing number each year have to be abandoned. Last year one of those buildings collapsed with some Reserve Officers' Training Corps students in them, and it was a miracle that they were not injured.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. There is an enormous danger from fire?

"Major PRENTISS. Yes; there is.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. At those places?

"Major PRENTISS. At Camp Meade one of the buildings half burned down, and they put up a tar-paper partition so as to fix up the other end, and they are still living in that end of the building.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. That night the whole camp nearly burned down.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, has it appeared in the record what camps in the nine corps areas are considered as ultimate corps area training camps? Has that been put in the record? For instance, I take it that Camp Devens is intended to be the central mobilization and concentration point in the First Corps Area; is that right?

"Major PRENTISS. Yes; I think Colonel Knox can give you that.

"Colonel KNOX. I think the corps area headquarters will remain in Boston.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. I mean the mobilization and instruction headquarters.

"Colonel KNOX. Yes.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. That is Camp Devens?

"Colonel KNOX. Yes.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. And the second?

"Colonel KNOX. Camp Dix.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. And the third?

"Colonel KNOX. Camp Meade.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. And the fourth?

"Colonel KNOX. Camp McClellan.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. And the fifth?

"Colonel KNOX. Camp Knox.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. And the sixth?

"Colonel KNOX. Camp Custer.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. And the seventh?

"Colonel KNOX. We have several in the seventh; I don't recall just now.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. Well, that can be put in.

"Colonel KNOX. I think it is Fort Riley.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. And the eighth, I suppose, is San Antonio?

"Colonel KNOX. Yes.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. And the ninth?

"Colonel KNOX. Camp Lewis.

"Chairman WADSWORTH. You own the land necessary, do you not?

"Colonel KNOX. Yes; with the exception of a small portion at Camp Devens.

"Senator FLETCHER. Of what are the permanent establishments composed in the fourth area? Of course, at Camp McClellan, Ala., you need a number of permanent buildings.

"Major PRENTISS. Yes; that is the training center for that corps area.

"Senator FLETCHER. And where else?

"Major PRENTISS. The permanent buildings will be covered by Captain Hobson.

"Chairman WADSWORTH. Do you want to ask any more questions concerning the condition of buildings occupied for the distribution of troops? We have heard Colonel Knox and Major Prentiss on those phases.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. Is it not a fact that practically all of these central mobilization and instruction points, and the points you have mentioned, are temporary construction for the war, and are in practically the same condition as the buildings you have shown at Camp Bragg?

"Major PRENTISS. Yes.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. In other words, these nine points in the nine corps areas are made necessary by the new policy of defense in the nine corps areas?

"Major PRENTISS. Yes, sir.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. And practically new construction should be made in all of them?

"Major PRENTISS. Yes, sir.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. You have, however, drainage and sewerage and plenty of land?

"Major PRENTISS. Yes. The underground utilities in general are in good shape with the exception of certain water mains, where they used wood-stave pipes. The sewers, and so on, are in good shape, so it would be much more costly to build on new sites than the old sites.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. Could you give us an estimate of the cost in the way of roads and land at these nine points now?

"Major PRENTISS. It runs up into a great many million dollars. Yes; I could give you that for the record.

"Mr. HILL of Maryland. I think that would be interesting to show what the Army proposes to build on at these permanent stations.

"Major PRENTISS. That will be inserted in the record."

This bill means a start on an orderly development of the national defense, for which every Secretary of War has endeavored for many years.

It also includes $90,000 for needed officers' quarters at the Edgewood Arsenal, Md., making a total expenditure of $500,000 in Maryland.

SALE OF MARINE HOSPITAL AT DETROIT, MICH.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, on Calendar 341, to which objection was offered, I desire to withdraw my objection, and

I understand the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] desires to withdraw his objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that it can not be done after—

Mr. LA GUARDIA. I am asking unanimous consent.

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8132. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the war with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, or the China relief expedition, to certain maimed soldiers, to certain widows, minor children, and helpless children of such soldiers and sailors, and for other purposes;

S. 124. An act for the relief of the Davis Construction Co.; and

S. 3031. An act for the relief of George Barrett.

REGULATING FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to file a conference report on the Ketcham seed bill for printing under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2465) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate foreign commerce by prohibiting the admission into the United States of certain adulterated grain and seeds unfit for seeding purposes," approved August 24, 1912, as amended, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the special order of business for tomorrow I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes on veterans' legislation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that upon the completion of business in order to-morrow he may address the House for 15 minutes on the subject of veterans' legislation. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

NATIONAL PARKS EAST OF THE MISSISSIPPI

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on national parks in the East, with the privilege of inserting a report of the Southern Appalachian Commission.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by incorporating a report of the Appalachian Commission. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Reserving the right to object, how much is this report?

Mr. THATCHER. About five letter pages double; not much.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, one of the most important functions of government is that of providing adequate parks and recreational grounds for the people. A city is largely measured by its system of parks. If that system be ample and well planned; if the units involved are wisely located and rendered accessible and attractive, the very highest purposes are secured. The same is true as to State parks, and eminently true as to national parks.

Of course, there are certain standards involved as to the establishment of national parks which it is well to observe. These standards are most aptly indicated in the "Statement of national-park policy," outlined in the letter of instructions issued on May 13, 1918, by the Secretary of the Interior, Franklin K. Lane, to the Director of the National Park Service, Stephen T. Mather. See Report of the Director of the National Park Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, pages 419 to 421. Here are some of these standards as then defined by Secretary Lane, and which have been generally accepted by those having charge of our National Park Service:

In studying new park projects you [the Director of the National Park Service] should seek to find scenery of supreme and distinctive quality, or some natural feature so extraordinary or unique as to be of national interest and importance. You should seek distinguished examples of typical forms of world architecture, such, for instance, as the Grand Canyon, as exemplifying the highest accomplishment of stream erosion, and the high, rugged portion of Desert Island, as exemplifying the oldest rock forms in America, and the luxuriance of deciduous forests (p. 421).

It is not necessary that a national park should have a large area. The element of size is of no importance so long as the park is susceptible of effective administration and control (p. 421).

Secretary Lane, by experience, observation, and general ability was most excellently qualified to enunciate the rules whereby national-park projects should be tested. Those rules were formulated after years of close study of the national-park problem. He knew our national parks through sympathetic contacts. He was, and is, regarded as being a most eminent authority on the subject.

With a single exception, all of our national parks lie west of the Mississippi River. That exception is Lafayette National Park, a small recreation ground of a few thousand acres on the coast of Maine. Also all of our national parks, with the exception of Lafayette National Park, have been carved out of the national domain. Yet it must be remembered the national domain is as much a national asset as money in the Federal Treasury. The lands of the Lafayette National Park were donated by public-spirited citizens.

Not only are all of our national parks, with the single exception just noted, west of the Mississippi, but practically all of them are west of the eastern rim of the Rocky Mountains. One is in the far-away tropical isles of Hawaii and another in the remote and frigid mountains of Alaska. All of our western and territorial national parks, however striking or wonderful they may be, are for all practical purpose inaccessible to the great masses of our American population. These great masses lie east of the "Father of Waters," and but few of them ever have the opportunity of seeing a national park. Yet these masses, by reason of superiority in numbers and wealth, pay by far the greater part of our Federal taxes.

The national parks of the West are the proud possessions of all our people, and Federal funds to the extent of millions of dollars have been used in their maintenance and operation; and these expenditures must continue so long as these parks are maintained. All Americans approve of these expenditures; but it is high time, not only as a matter of need, but of justice as well, that an adequate system of national parks be created and maintained east of the Mississippi. The Mammoth Cave region of Kentucky, the Great Smoky Mountains of North Carolina and Tennessee, and the Blue Ridge-Shenandoah section of Virginia are eminently qualified to become national parks, and to form, with the Lafayette National Park, an adequate system of national parks east of the Mississippi. These three projects measure up to the high standards prescribed by Secretary Lane. Under the act of Congress approved February 21, 1925, and in accordance with its direction, these three areas were visited and examined during the past year by the Southern Appalachian National Park Commission, touching their worth as national-park projects; and recently all three of them have received the unequivocal approval of that commission, which is composed of the following members:

Hon. H. W. TEMPLE, Member of Congress from Pennsylvania, chairman; Maj. W. A. Welch, chief engineer and general manager of the Palisades Interstate Park of New York and New Jersey; Mr. Harlan P. Kelsey, former president of the Appalachian Mountain Club, of Boston, and well-known landscape architect; Mr. William C. Gregg, of the National Arts Club of New York, and a student of recreational agencies; and Col. Glenn S. Smith, acting chief topographic engineer of the United States Geological Survey, and representative of the Interior Department on the commission.

The commission on the 8th of the present month made its unanimous report to the Secretary of the Interior, declaring all three projects eminently worthy of inclusion in our national-park system and recommending that such inclusion be made upon the condition that the necessary lands be conveyed to the United States free of cost. The commission also, in its report, set forth the boundaries and areas which should be so acquired for national-park purposes as to the three projects. This report was transmitted to the Congress by the Secretary of the Interior on April 14, 1926, and he made recommendations as to the boundaries of the proposed Shenandoah and Great Smoky Mountains National Parks but made no present recommendation as to the Mammoth Cave project.

While it is true that the same progress in the matter of raising funds and securing offers of donations of lands has not been made as to the Mammoth Cave project as have been made as to the other two projects, it is also true that the other two projects have had the great advantage of having received in 1924 the approval of a like commission, in the form of a special committee, appointed by the Secretary of the Interior and made up of the same personnel as that constituting the present commission. The older body was not appointed agreeably to any act of Congress, but was named by the Secretary to aid him in investigating Southern Appalachian park projects, including those of the Shenandoah and Great Smoky Mountains. The approval of these two projects in 1924 enabled their friends to launch intensive campaigns for the raising of funds with which to purchase the respective lands needed therefor. The Mammoth Cave project was not included in the survey of 1924 because there seems not to have been made any request therefor, though the idea of converting the Mammoth Cave region into a national park has been under discussion for years, and during the past 10 or 15 years various bills have been introduced in Congress providing for appropriations for such purpose. Also, in the year 1920, as will be presently shown, the acquisition of the Mammoth Cave section and its conversion into a national park was strongly advocated by Mr. Stephen T. Mather, then and now Director of the National Park Service. See his annual report of that year, pages 84 and 85. In his recommendations then made he went so far as to indicate his approval of the making of congressional appropriations for the purchase of the Mammoth Cave lands for national-park purposes. See, also, his annual report of 1918 (page 33) and his annual report of 1919 (page 40), earnestly urging that the Mammoth Cave area be converted into a national park.

Under leave granted, I now include, as a part of these remarks, the report of the Southern Appalachian National Park Commission made April 8, 1926, and transmitted to Congress in the manner already shown, omitting, however, the detailed boundaries of the three projects set forth in the report, because of their length.

REPORT OF SOUTHERN APPALACHIAN NATIONAL PARK COMMISSION
APRIL 8, 1926.

HON. HUBERT WORK,
Secretary of the Interior.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: The members of the Southern Appalachian National Park Commission, appointed in accordance with the act of February 21, 1925 (Public, No. 437, 68th Cong.), have complied with the requirements of the act and with your instructions and desire to report as follows:

We suggest that reference be made to the report of your special committee submitted December 12, 1924, which gave the reasons for definitely recommending the Shenandoah National Park area and the Smoky Mountains National Park area as worthy of being acquired as national parks. In conformity with the requirements of the above cited act of Congress, members of the commission have during the past year made a more careful study and investigation of these and other areas and have found much additional evidence of the eminent worthiness of these two areas for acquisition as national parks. Your commission has also made a careful examination of the Mammoth Cave region of Kentucky and believes sufficient reasons exist to warrant its acceptance as a national park if requirements are met as outlined in this report. Below are briefly outlined some of these reasons.

Mammoth Cave is the best known and probably the largest of a remarkable group of limestone caverns, 20 or more of which have been opened up and explored to a greater or less extent. Included in this group are Colossal Cavern, Great Onyx Cave, New Entrance to Mammoth Cave, Salts Cave, Proctor Cave, Long Avenue Cave, Great Crystal Cave, Cave of the Hundred Domes, Diamond Cave, Mammoth Onyx Cave, Dixon Cave, and others, all of which contain beautiful and wonderful formations. There is good evidence that many more caverns yet to be discovered exist in this immediate territory, and it seems likely that most, if not all, of this entire group of caverns eventually will be found to be connected by passageways forming a great underground labyrinth of remarkable geological and recreational interest perhaps unparalleled elsewhere. The territory which embraces this network of caverns consists of about 15,000 acres, or an area approximately 4 miles wide and 6 miles long. Another geological feature of much interest is found in the thousands of curious sink holes of varying sizes through which much of the drainage is carried to underground streams, there being few surface brooks or creeks.

The Mammoth Cave area is situated in one of the most rugged portions of the great Mississippi Valley and contains areas of apparently original forests which, though comparatively small in extent, are of prime value from an ecological and scientific standpoint and should be preserved for all time in its virgin state for study and enjoyment. Much of the proposed area is now clothed in forest through which flows the beautiful and navigable Green River and its branch, the Nolin River.

All this offers exceptional opportunity for developing a great national recreation park of outstanding service in the very heart of our Nation's densest population and at a time when the need is increasingly urgent and most inadequately provided for.

Your commission has carefully investigated the above-recommended areas with a view of selecting on the ground the most suitable boundaries or limits of purchase area for the proposed parks. Your commission, through the cooperation of the Army Air Service, obtained airplane photographs of the Shenandoah and Smoky Mountains park areas, and these photographs proved to be a great help in determining suitable boundaries.

In accordance with your instructions the associations and organizations in the States in which these national-park areas are located were informed that the lands within the areas must be presented to the United States Government in fee simple before such areas could become national parks. On May 27, 1925, identical letters were addressed by the commission to the leading groups in these States, suggesting that they definitely organize to carry out the requirements of the commission and stating further that "to facilitate this work the commission considers it necessary that an organization state-wide in scope be incorporated to act for the citizens and organizations of such State for the purpose of centralizing their efforts; * * * and in order that it may be custodian of moneys, lands, and options for the purchase of lands within the proposed park areas to be held in trust for park purposes." In compliance with these suggestions of the commission the following organizations were incorporated: In Virginia, the Shenandoah National Park Association (Inc.); in Tennessee, the Great Smoky Mountains Conservation Association; in North Carolina, the Great Smoky Mountains (Inc.); and in Kentucky, the Mammoth Cave National Park Association. These organizations have been engaged in obtaining donations, both of money and of land, and options, with the following results:

The Shenandoah National Park Association (Inc.) reported April 3, 1926, that the total amount raised in donations is $1,249,154, and a minimum net sum of $1,200,000 for the purchase of the proposed Shenandoah National Park. The Great Smoky Mountains Conservation Association and the Great Smoky Mountains (Inc.) reported April 1, 1926, that Tennessee and North Carolina have raised jointly the total sum of $1,066,693.91. The Mammoth Cave National Park Association reported April 1, 1926, two donations of property aggregating 3,629.13 acres, of which 1,324.10 acres are to be covered by fee simple title and 2,305.03 acres by cave rights. Included in this area are the caves exhibited by the Colossal Cavern and by the New Entrance Co., but not including Mammoth Cave.

In addition, these organizations reported that they have obtained many signed options covering considerable acreage. The Great Smoky Mountains Conservation Association, the Great Smoky Mountains (Inc.), and the Shenandoah National Park Association (Inc.) have entered into an agreement to carry on a national campaign to procure additional and sufficient funds to purchase substantially all the lands within the purchase areas of the designated Shenandoah National Park and the Smoky Mountains National Park.

As the Great Smoky Mountains Conservation Association (Tennessee) and the Great Smoky Mountains (Inc.) (North Carolina) jointly, and the Shenandoah National Park Association (Inc.) have complied with the requirements submitted to them by your commission, we therefore recommend that the two areas designated as above indicated be made national parks and administered as such when 250,000 acres in each of them have been transferred in fee simple to the United States. We also recommend that the Mammoth Cave National Park be established when the Mammoth Cave National Park Association can transfer to the United States in fee simple one-third of the proposed area (approximately 20,000 acres), including all the caves, and can assure you that steps will be taken to obtain additional and sufficient funds to purchase substantially all the lands within the designated boundaries.

Boundaries: The boundaries recommended in this report, being largely natural and easily determined, are such as to include all the area that the commission hopes will ultimately be acquired as national parks, it being well understood that there may be holdings within the recommended areas near these boundaries which may on further inspection be found impracticable or not economical to include.

(a) [Here follows a detailed description of the general boundaries of the Shenandoah National Park area (all in Virginia), comprising approximately 521,000 acres.]

(b) [Here follows a detailed description of the general boundaries of the Smoky Mountains National Park area (all in North Carolina and Tennessee), comprising approximately 704,000 acres.]

(c) [Here follows a detailed description of the general boundaries of the Mammoth Cave National Park area (all in Kentucky), comprising approximately 70,618 acres.]

I earnestly favor all three of these projects. All three are eminently eligible for national parkhood. The time is ripe for their consummation. Because of the greater masses of our population to be served east of the Mississippi, there is the greater need for national parks in this great section of our country than in the West. But national parks are needed in both the East and the West. I am glad to vote for adequate appropriations for the maintenance of the national parks of the West, and I believe that it would be just that Federal funds be expended for the acquisition of lands in the East for national-park purposes, though there is not being made at this time any demand for such action. The present movement contemplates that the lands needed for the three projects under discussion shall be acquired through private and local enterprise and turned over, free of cost, to the Federal Government for national-park purposes. If, and when this is done the parks thus created will have to be improved, of course, under Federal expenditure, just as is the case as regards our existing national parks.

In the case of the Mammoth Cave National Park, however, the guide fees and other charges of an incidental character and the usual revenues from concessions will insure from the outset a substantial income; and the fact that the cave region is accessible by motor, rail, and river every day of the year, and is already "sold" to the world at large because known throughout the civilized earth as one of the "seven wonders of the world," will cause it to be, in our deliberate judgment, the most frequented, the most popular, and the best revenue producer of all our national parks.

In the House and Senate bills have recently been introduced having for their object the creation of the Shenandoah and Great Smoky Mountains National Parks, in accordance with the terms and recommendations embodied in the recent report of the Southern Appalachian National Park Commission. I have also introduced in the House H. R. 11320, and Senator ERNST has introduced in the Senate S. 3988, a bill having for its object the creation of all three of these proposed national parks—Shenandoah, Great Smoky Mountains, and Mammoth Cave—in accordance with the terms and recommendations of that report.

Under this bill the total areas required for the three projects, as indicated in the report of the commission, must be conveyed to the United States Government free of cost; and unless such conveyance is made as to any one of the three projects, that project fails and the Government is involved in no outlay. Also under this bill, which provides for equality of treatment as to the three proposed parks, each project may qualify and become a national park regardless of the other two projects. Thus each must stand or fall upon its own merits, though it is deemed wise to set up the legislation and administrative machinery necessary for the conversion of the three projects into national parks in a single bill or act for the reason that in the act of February 21, 1925, already mentioned, the commission was directed to survey the three projects; the survey of the three projects was thereupon made, and the findings and recommendations of the three projects have been embraced in a single report. Moreover, it will be easier to secure the enactment of one bill in Congress than it will be to secure the enactment of two or three separate bills.

There is no conflict of interest between these enterprises. They are separated by sufficient distances to preclude rivalry, yet are close enough to each other to permit their convenient negotiation, by tourists, as a single delightful, recreational adventure. Each of these parks—if established—will serve its particular purpose, and the three will constitute a vast triangle of national parks admirably located to serve the great masses of our people.

In addition to the strong seal of approval placed on the Mammoth Cave national park project by the Southern Appalachian National Park Commission, other eminent official recognition of the merits of that project are to be noted. Thus, in his letter of June 5, 1924, to the Chairman of the Public Lands Committee of the House, Hon. Hubert Work, then and now Secretary of the Interior, declared that—the Mammoth Cave is one of the most widely known natural features of America—unquestionably the Mammoth Cave is worthy of national-park status.

As already suggested, Mr. Stephen T. Mather, then and now Director of the National Park Service, in his annual reports of 1918, 1919, and 1920 indicated, in the strongest manner possible, his approval of the Mammoth Cave National Park project and declared that it fully met the requirements of the standard or test prescribed by Secretary Lane, already quoted, in that the Mammoth Cave region constituted one of the most remarkable of—distinguished examples of typical forms of world architecture.

Let us quote the following from the statement of Director Mather touching the Mammoth Cave national-park project, as set forth in his 1920 report:

Many efforts have been made in the past to secure the Mammoth Cave, of Kentucky, with sufficient adjoining area, including the recently discovered Onyx Cave, to permit of its full development for a national park, but thus far these efforts have been fruitless. Nature's most magnificent, and certainly the largest, limestone cavern, with approximately 40 miles [now 150 miles] of wonderfully formed underground passages and chambers, is not only known to every school child in the land, but is already the mecca of travelers the world over.

The land itself, covering the cave and contiguous areas, contains thousands of acres of the splendid virgin growth of the deciduous forest growth of the East. Its location at the head of navigation of the Green River contributes another particularly fascinating detail of the richness of that region. Its accessibility not only to our large centers of population but through ease of approach by motor, rail, and boat would insure it a popularity in the East that is so common to the major parks of the West. That part of the United States lying east of the Mississippi River contains only one national park, Lafayette National Park, in Maine, which, by the way, is constituted solely of lands contributed by public-spirited citizens. More national parks are needed in the East, and the inclusion of the Mammoth Cave region would add one of the most remarkable of "distinguished examples of typical forms of world architecture" to the proud national-park family. More than that, by virtue of its favorable location, it would at once perform its important function as a breathing spot available to every man, woman, and child of our large industrial centers at a minimum expenditure of money. (P. 84 of report.)

Thereupon, in the same report, Director Mather discussed the question of congressional appropriations for the purchase of the Mammoth lands for national-park purposes. He said:

Once proponents of the project secured hearings on a bill (H. R. 1606, establishing the Mammoth Cave National Park; hearing held May 3, 1912, before the Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives, 62d Cong.) for its purchase. More recently the project has secured fresh impetus, and many of its friends, including local organizations, are rallying to the support of a similar measure. On May 26, 1919, Representative R. Y. Thomas, of Kentucky, an ardent advocate of the project, who has introduced a number of bills in Congress of similar purport, introduced H. R. 3110, but no action has been taken. The property is in private hands, administered under the terms of a famous will which directs that upon the death of the last-named heir under the will the property is to be sold at public auction. It is understood that the advanced age of the two surviving devisees under the will makes it practically certain that before long the property will be put up at auction and sold to the highest bidder.

The famous Mammoth Cave may then go into speculative private hands and be forever lost for development as a national park for the benefit of the people of the country. It may be doubted whether Congress will see fit to appropriate the money needed to acquire the necessary lands. All national parks, with the exception of the Lafayette National Park, have thus far been carved out of the public domain. But certainly the fame of this great natural exhibit should constitute the greatest appeal for an exception to the rule. It is to be hoped that if Congress can not see its way clear to appropriate the funds necessary to acquire the areas needed, public-spirited parties will acquire it at the auction and donate it to the Government for the benefit of posterity. It ought to become the Nation's property. (Pp. 84 and 85 of report.)

Certainly no stronger official sanction of the Mammoth Cave National Park project can be found than that contained in this report of Director Mather. Since 1920 additional caverns in the Mammoth Cave region have been discovered and opened up to the world, and the end of such discoveries is not yet in sight. This whole region is honeycombed with marvelous caves and their ramifications, and in the aggregate they undoubtedly constitute the most wonderful system of caves in the world. At present the various caves are under diverse ownership and management. Should the Mammoth Cave National Park be created, all of these cave units would come under a single management—that of the Federal Government—and the limited accommodations now provided for tourists and visitors would be replaced by adequate and pleasing hotels and camps of the character now provided in the national parks of the West.

The holder of the life estate in the old Mammoth Cave is a woman more than 90 years of age. At her death this particular property must be sold at public auction. This is an added reason why legislation permitting the creation of the Mammoth Cave National Park should be enacted at the present session.

Director Mather's strong approval of this project is reinforced and strengthened by the sweeping and emphatic approval given by the Southern Appalachian National Park Commission in its report already quoted. Secretary Work, as has already been pointed out, has likewise declared the national park status of the Mammoth Cave project. The commission, as indicated in its report, recommended a smaller boundary for the proposed Mammoth Cave National Park than for the other two proposed parks. This is for the obvious reason that the stupendous caverns and underground passages making up the Mammoth Cave system constitute such a striking example of world architecture as to form, of themselves alone, a feature worthy of national park recognition. Moreover, these cave properties are highly valuable. They are included in something between fifteen and twenty thousand acres of area. The cost of these cave lands, in fee, when added to the cost of the 51,000 acres contiguous and picturesque hill and knob country embraced in the total Mammoth Cave National Park boundary recommended by the commission, will be, perhaps, as much as the cost of the total area in either of the other two projects. The total cost of acquiring the necessary lands for the three projects will be several millions of dollars; and if they are acquired without cost to the Federal Government those responsible therefor will be entitled to the highest praise.

In the course of these observations, I must not fail to commend, as earnestly as may be possible, the splendid work performed by our colleague, Doctor Temple, and his associates on this commission. Untiringly, zealously, wisely, and without any compensation or reward except that which comes through the consciousness of having performed with marked success a highly important undertaking, they have made their surveys and studies in keeping with the spirit and purposes of the act of Congress authorizing the commission's appointment; and their report should result in the prompt creation of the national parks they recommend. Too much praise can not be given these distinguished and public-spirited men for the service they have rendered. The creation of these national parks will constitute a splendid recognition of an arduous task splendidly performed.

The present session of Congress is drawing to a close. The friends of these three great enterprises should join together and work as a unit in securing the enactment, at this session, of the necessary legislation to permit the establishment of these three national parks agreeably to the terms and conditions set forth in the report of the commission. I believe that the enactment of such legislation will constitute a great forward step in national-park and conservation work. I am sure that such action will be heartily approved by our entire population, East, West, North, South, and in our territorial and insular possessions. One of the greatest needs of the Nation is a system of national parks east of the Mississippi. The hour is ripe for their creation. It has now come to pass that "the waters of the pool are troubled," and we must enter them. Congress has the power to act, just as it has the responsibility. Let us, the Members of Congress, take advantage of the opportunity offered, and unite in this great movement, and write a new and splendid chapter in our national-park history. By doing so we shall earn not only the approval of the present generation, but, as well, the approval of the generations to come through all the future.

OUR SOLDIER DEAD IN FOREIGN LANDS

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HARDY] have leave to extend his remarks in the Record by inserting a report of his visit to the American cemeteries in Europe.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HARDY] may extend his remarks in the Record on the subject of his visit to the American cemeteries in Europe. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I was recently in Europe and while there visited the battle fields where American troops were engaged in the great World War and the principal American cemeteries in France where more than 30,000 brave American boys rest in peace.

I want to tell the House and the country that the American cemeteries in Europe are permanently located, charmingly situated, well developed, and beautifully kept. It should be a pride and comfort to the mothers and comrades of those who fell and were left in France to know that no graves anywhere and no cemeteries in all the world are better cared for than these. I have visited or passed by hundreds of cemeteries in Europe where literally millions of the soldiers of the World War are buried. The English cemeteries are fairly well kept up. The French, German, and Italian cemeteries have a sadly neglected appearance. The American cemeteries are in tiptop condition and are the best cared for of all.

The American cemeteries are beauty spots in Europe and will be hallowed ground to Americans who visit them for centuries to come.

It has taken some years to develop this system of cemeteries for the American dead. During the war it was necessary that burials be made at convenient points. At the end of the war November 11, 1918, there were 2,007 places where six or more burials had been made. By preliminary concentration by the American Expeditionary Forces this number was reduced to 789. Final concentration work began January 1, 1920, and the eight permanent cemeteries were located and developed. About this time many bodies were removed to the United States for burial at the request of relatives. For a time relatives had that option. In all 46,234 bodies have been brought to the United States, 604 were shipped to homes in foreign lands, 139 at the request of relatives were left where originally buried and at this time 30,502 rest in the eight permanent national cemeteries of Europe. A total of 77,552 graves are known and registered at home and abroad. The option of removal on the part of relatives expired April 1, 1922.

These removals left the cemeteries badly torn up—many vacant graves scattered around. This has all been corrected now. The cemeteries have all been laid out in perfect order—the rows even and straight, the arrangement artistic and impressive. Our men who fought in France have found their final resting places where they will sleep through the ages.

We have in Europe now eight American cemeteries—six in France, one in Belgium, and one in England. The lands have been acquired by the United States Government and the Government has assumed the responsibility for their care. Funds have been provided liberally by Congress and the War Department has given its best men for the development of the cemetery system.

The permanent cemeteries in France are located in picturesque spots near the great battle fields in which most of the men buried lost their lives. No two of the cemeteries are alike, but all are uniformly beautiful, well arranged, and are being given excellent care. They are all covered with blue grass and are as green as any Washington lawn. Trees and shrubbery have been planted, beauty spots laid out and are being developed. At the entrance gate of each is a caretaker's home and hostess house, where relatives may find quarters when required. In the center is a tall flagpole, from which an American flag flies always in the daytime.

The graves are marked by white crosses. At present the crosses are of wood, painted white. The names and organization numbers are painted in black. Once a year or oftener the crosses are washed, repainted white, and the names restenciled. Always the rows and rows of crosses stand out in the green field clean and conspicuous. From miles away over the rolling fields of France you can pick out an American cemetery with its American flag flying and its field of even systematical rows of snow-white crosses.

On the back of each cross is an aluminum strip, giving the name and organization number of the soldier. This is to avoid the possibility of any mistake. Over a few graves straight slabs bearing a six-pointed star—the star of David—in place of the cross appear. These are the graves of the orthodox Jews. There are 425 such stars in the eight cemeteries. In the near future white-marble crosses will take the place of the wooden crosses. Congress has appropriated nearly $500,000 for the start, and the change is well under way.

In these eight cemeteries are now buried 30,502 American heroes. One thing that impressed me as I walked around reading the names on the crosses was the fact that there is no distinction given to rank or prominence. I found a brigadier general laid in an inconspicuous spot with a private on each of the four sides. An American ace whose name was much in both the American and foreign press for his bravery in attacking and bringing down German airplanes lies between privates whose names you have never heard. Officers and men, Young Men's Christian Association workers, and Red Cross nurses all rest together without special marks or distinction. Included in the heroic dead in these eight cemeteries are 1,397 officers, 42 Young Men's Christian Association workers, 5 Knights of Columbus workers, 41 Red Cross workers, 44 nurses, and 1,656 graves are marked "Unknown."

The most important, so far as number of graves goes, is the Meuse-Argonne Cemetery. In it are 14,091 graves. The name indicates the battles in which they lost their lives. It covers 130 acres. The graves are on a sloping hillside and the arrangement is in the shape of a great shield. Down at the bottom of the slope is a fountain and lily pond. The caretaker's home and hostess house are upon another elevation overlooking the whole. You can hardly imagine a more picturesque situation than this cemetery presents from the caretaker's home, and its beauty will grow as the shrubbery and trees so artistically arranged around the edges develop with age. This cemetery is near the little village of Romagne-sous-Montfaucon, Meuse, France, and is 156 miles from Paris.

The St. Mihiel Cemetery covers a section of the battle field of that name and has 4,141 graves. Many of the boys buried here lost their lives in the St. Mihiel drive, and some of them almost at the spot where they are buried. This cemetery covers 37½ acres. It is more or less level, but on an elevated tract, and can be seen from miles around. It is being beautifully decorated with trees and shrubs and has good buildings at the entrance gate. St. Mihiel Cemetery is near the little village of Thiaucourt, Meurthe-et-Moselle, France, and is 180 miles out from Paris.

In the Aisne-Marne, named for the two rivers along which so many battles were fought, are 2,212 graves. It is in the uniform style more or less, and is being given the usual good care and development, covering 34 acres. It lays near the battle field of Belleau Wood and is near the well-known French town of Chateau-Thierry and only 52 miles distant from Paris, so is easily reached.

The Oise-Aisne Cemetery is the second largest of them all, having 5,934 graves. It is in the neighborhood of Fere-en-Tardenois and only 67 miles from Paris. It covers 32 acres of ground and is being beautifully developed.

From here I drove out a little way in the country to see the grave of Quentin Roosevelt, who is buried in the field where he lost his life. It was the desire of his distinguished father that he lie where he fell. Over the grave is a cross and near by on the public highway is a beautiful memorial fountain erected to his memory. The inscription on the fountain reads:

Lieut. Quentin Roosevelt, age 20, Air Service, U. S. A., fell in battle Charnery, July 14, 1918.

And below are the lines:

Only those are fit to live who are not afraid to die. (Theodore Roosevelt.)

This cemetery is not far from Rheims.

The Somme Cemetery covers only 14½ acres of ground but is the resting place for 1,816 of our Nation's heroes. It is near Bony and 83 miles distant from Paris. It is the only American cemetery in France I did not visit.

In the outskirts of Paris, in fact only 7 miles distant, is Suresnes Cemetery, which will naturally because of its convenient location, be the most frequently visited of them all. Already thousands of Americans who visit Paris have come here to pay their homage to America's dead. It has a beautiful location on a little hillside under the protecting shade of the historic old Fort Valeron. From the grounds one looks out over the River Seine and the Bois de Boulogne into the city of Paris, a magnificent view indeed. This cemetery lends itself especially well to decoration and, being one of the first located on a permanent basis, it is the best developed. It contains the graves of 1,506, many of whom died in the hospitals of Paris.

In Belgium, near Waerzeghem, is Flanders Field Cemetery, 85 miles from Brussels and 183 miles from Paris. It contains only 6 acres and has 365 graves.

In England we have the Brookwood Cemetery at Surrey, which is 28 miles from London. It embraces only about 5 acres of ground and contains the graves of 437 persons, some of whom died of diseases or accident while in England on their way to France, and some bodies, known and unknown, washed ashore from transports torpedoed off the western coast of Great Britain.

These permanent cemeteries in Europe are under the administration of the American Graves Registration Service, Quartermaster Corps. The chief officer in Washington is an assistant to the Quartermaster General, in charge of cemeterial division, War Department. Headquarters are maintained in Paris, where the officer in charge has general supervision of all the American cemeteries in Europe. Any person having business in connection with graves in American cemeteries can address the Quartermaster General, Washington, D. C., or the American Graves Registration Service, 20 Rue Molitor, Paris, France.

Each cemetery has its caretaker, who is superintendent in charge. The caretakers are a fine bunch of men, all members of the American Expeditionary Forces, and all have their hearts in their work.

Every possible courtesy is shown relatives of American soldiers buried in these cemeteries. Many mothers have visited the graves of their sons, and other relatives have shown keen interest. Both in the Washington and Paris offices a complete record is kept of each grave. By inquiry it is easy to ascertain in what cemetery and its exact location—row and number—is any grave. Where accommodations can not be found easily near the cemetery, the service is taking care of relatives who wish to visit the grave at comfortable hostess houses at a moderate cost. Any mother can have a photograph taken of her son's grave without cost by asking for it. And relatives can arrange with the service to have any grave decorated at special times or stated dates by providing the funds for the expenditure desired. We found many graves with flowers and special decorations on them, either provided for by relatives through the service or through some individual who resides nearby. Elaborate and impressive services are held in all the American cemeteries on Memorial Day, and at that time all of the graves are beautifully decorated. Many of the Gold Star Mothers of America are present at the grave sides of their sons for Memorial Day service.

Scattered over the countries are a number of graves of American soldiers under private care, like that of Quentin Roosevelt. Parents or relatives have arranged for the care of these graves through private channels. Following the example set by President Roosevelt, a number of parents arranged to have their sons buried at or near where they fell in battle or died. The United States Graves Service has no control over these graves and does not participate in their care, but a perfect record of them is kept in the department. They are noted on the records as "Do not disturb" cases. Of these private graves there are 80 in France, 57 in England and Ireland, and 2 in Belgium.

There are still in the battle area something like 1,488 unlocated graves. In the excitement of battle hasty burials were necessarily sometimes made and records made were incomplete or distinguishing landmarks wiped out by shellfire. The most careful search is being made for those unlocated graves. Two searching parties are working continuously on the job. Since July 1, 1925, 93 bodies have been recovered, and of these quite a number have been identified. When a body is found, if identification is not plain the greatest pains are taken to work out clues that will lead to the identification of the remains. This is sometimes done by things the boy carried in his pockets and in a number of instances by the dental work on his teeth.

When a new body is found and identified, the nearest relative is notified and given the option as to place of burial. The body may be sent to the parents' home if desired. But after burial is made in the permanent cemeteries no more removals are now permitted.

I want to say again that mothers, relatives, and comrades of heroes who are buried in our American cemeteries in Europe can rest assured that their graves are well cared for—far better, in fact, than graves are in many of our own cemeteries here at home.

THE UNKNOWN HEROES

I have mentioned the fact that the crosses at the heads of 1,656 graves in American cemeteries bear the inscription "unknown" and that 1,488 American heroes lie in unlocated graves.

In Arlington Cemetery at Washington is a monument to the "unknown" soldier. I was at the impressive burial service of this unknown soldier on November 11, 1921. Greater honor has never been paid to any king or president or any of the world's great personalities than was paid to the unknown soldier on that day. So far as I know no individual ever had a more imposing funeral. The monument stands, among other monuments to America's greatest soldiers, in memory of the 3,144 unknown soldiers buried in Europe.

At Chalons-sur-Marne we went around to the hotel de ville, which is French for city hall, to see the place where this body of the unknown was selected. From four unknown soldiers in sealed caskets brought in from different fields this one was selected by Sergeant Younger. From here the body started on one of the greatest funeral tours in the world's history—across France, across the sea, arriving in New York, signal honors and impressive services everywhere. It passed through a line of bowed heads and flags at half-mast from Chalons to the sea, from New York to Washington. The body lay in state in the Capitol and was buried with military honors at Arlington.

Every American mother who mourns a son in a grave marked "unknown" can feel an intimate thrill of pride in this service and in this monument to the "unknown soldier," for it is in spirit, and may have been in fact, her own son who was so signally honored, her own son who is buried here.

Other countries have followed our example in honoring the unknown soldier. I have visited the graves of the unknown soldier in France, Italy, Belgium, and England.

THE UNKNOWN DEAD

(By John F. Brandon, in the Providence Journal)

The Unknown Dead? Not so; we know him well
Who died for us on that red soil of France,
Who faced the fearful shock of gas and shell,
And laughed at death in some blood-strewn advance.

Nameless in truth, but crowned with such a name
As glory gives to those who greatly die,
Who marched, a simple soldier, with the flame
Of duty bidding him to Calvary.

He is all brothers dead, all lovers lost,
All sons and comrades resting over there;
The symbol of the knightly, fallen host,
The sacred pledge of burdens yet to bear.

Mangled and torn, for whom we pray to-day,
Whose soul rose grandly to God's peaceful throne,
Leaving to us this quiet, shattered clay,
Silent and still—unnamed—but not unknown.

PROHIBITION, THE CONSTITUTION, THE ENFORCEMENT OF PROHIBITION, AND ITS EFFECT

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the subject of law enforcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Mr. Speaker and fellow Members of the House, a great deal has recently been said relative to prohibition, its enforcement, and the lack of same, and I assure you that it gives me pleasure to at this time have the opportunity to express to you my views on this timely and all-important subject. It is always a pleasure to me to defend our prohibition laws and to advocate their rigid and full enforcement. The fact is, as an officer of our Government and as a private citizen I am for the rigid enforcement of each and every law, both Federal and State, because without law and its strict enforcement our Government surely could not long exist.

Inasmuch as our Federal prohibition laws are based upon the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution, I think it well to briefly discuss the Constitution, which is a written instrument declaring the powers granted by the people of the United States for the establishment of the Federal Government; dividing the machinery of government into legislative, judicial, and executive branches; defining the power and duty of each and asserting certain principles by which they are to be governed. It was drafted by representatives selected by the original thirteen States, with the exception of Rhode Island, in a convention held at Philadelphia in the year 1787, written, of course, by Thomas Jefferson.

The Constitution was submitted to and ratified by the conventions of the thirteen States and became effective March 4, 1789, at which time Washington was made President; and, may I say in passing, that the original Constitution had opposers of its ratification; notably among them were such men as the eloquent Patrick Henry, Benjamin Harrison, John Tyler, Richard Henry Lee, Elbridge Gerry, Thomas Sumter, the then Governor of South Carolina, George Clinton, Governor of New York, and many others. Incidentally, their main force of attack was that it was destructive of the rights of the States just as the wet forces are to-day arguing that the eighteenth amendment is destructive of State rights; and, my friends, when I see the distinguished gentlemen of this House from such States as Maryland, New Jersey, New York, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island to-day defending so strongly the rights of the States I wonder how they and their predecessors stood during the years from 1840 to 1870, when the real rights of States were in jeopardy and when the States of my fair Southland suffered their almost every right to be confiscated. We from the South know and thoroughly appreciate what is meant by State rights and have no sympathy with those from the great wet centers when they cry State rights because it interferes with their pocketbook or their vicious appetites.

The Constitution may be amended by a vote of two-thirds of a quorum in the House of Representatives and in the Senate voting for said amendment; this vote offers it to the conventions or legislatures of the various States and must in turn be ratified by three-fourths of these legislatures. The eighteenth amendment, which prohibits the manufacture, sale, and transportation of intoxicating liquor within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from, the United States and all territories subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes was passed by the United States Senate August 1, 1917, and by the House of Representatives December 17, 1917. It was then submitted to the legislatures of the several States, and by January 16, 1919, the legislatures of the necessary three-fourths of the States had ratified the amendment; it was then proclaimed by the Secretary of State and became an integral part of the Constitution, to take effect one year thereafter, going into effect January 16, 1920.

It is singular, Mr. Speaker, that 46 of the 48 States, all States except Rhode Island and Connecticut, ratified the eighteenth amendment. It is also interesting to note that the amendment was submitted by a vote of 282 to 128 in the House of Representatives, and by a vote of 65 to 20 in the United States Senate, in each branch more than the necessary two-thirds. Since the adoption of the eighteenth amendment, measures bearing upon prohibition and its enforcement have repeatedly come before Congress, and it is interesting to note that every time, the dry vote has increased and the wet vote decreased.

Seven years' time was allowed for the various States to ratify the eighteenth amendment, but, Mr. Speaker, only 12 months were required. The total vote in the lower house of the legislatures of the States ratifying the eighteenth amendment was 3,782 votes for, to 1,035 votes against, or 78.5 per cent affirmative. The total vote in the senates of the respective legislatures was 1,310 for, to 237 against ratification, or 84.6 per cent affirmative; and it is also interesting to note that 98.2 per cent of the population of the United States resided in the 46 States which ratified the eighteenth amendment.

The enemies of prohibition should forget the erroneous idea that prohibition came in overnight, so to speak, by the adoption of the eighteenth amendment; the fact is, prohibition has been a live issue in all of the States for years and years, and only through ardent efforts of the dries and the religious and moral workers was it possible to adopt this amendment. Thirty-three States had adopted State prohibition prior to the date upon which national prohibition became effective.

These States and the date of adoption are as follows: Alabama in 1915; Arizona in 1914; Arkansas in 1915; Colorado in 1914; Florida in 1918; Georgia in 1907; Idaho in 1915; Indiana in 1917; Iowa in 1915; Kansas in 1880; Kentucky in 1919; Maine in 1851; Michigan in 1916; Mississippi in 1908; Montana in 1916; Nebraska in 1916; Nevada in 1918; New Hampshire in 1917; New Mexico in 1917; North Carolina in 1908; North Dakota in 1889; Ohio in 1918; Oklahoma in 1907; Oregon in 1914; South Carolina in 1915; South Dakota in 1916; Tennessee in 1909; Texas in 1918; Utah in 1917; Virginia in 1914; Washington in 1914; West Virginia in 1912; Wyoming in 1918.

By adding the area of these, you will find that 95.4 per cent of the total area of the United States and that 68.3 per cent of the total population of the United States lived in no-license territory at the time that the eighteenth amendment became effective, and yet we still have those wet advocates who cry State rights and who would force alcoholic liquors and all of its iniquities over this vast dry territory and this large majority of American citizens. I am sure that since this date, dry area and dry population census percentage has increased. In fact, I do not believe that more than 15 per cent of the peoples of the United States are wet, and this meager minority in their selfish and vicious beliefs would undertake to force intoxicating liquors upon the other 85 per cent.

This meager wet minority, which advocates the modification of the Volstead law, contend that crime and drunkenness have increased and that prohibition has failed. Permit me to say, Mr. Speaker, that the latest official refutation of the charge that prohibition has failed, that drunkenness has increased, and that crimes related to drinking have gone upward is given by the preliminary report of the United States Census Bureau's count of prisoners for the year 1923. Comparing that year with 1910, a year uncomplicated with war, unusual economic conditions, or saloon restriction, the figures in this census report show a remarkable decrease.

There were 121.2 prisoners in penal institutions January 1, 1910, for each 100,000 persons in the country. On January 1, 1923, this had dropped to 99.7, a decrease of 17.7 per cent. The number of commitments per 100,000 population showed an even greater relative decrease, falling from 521.7 per 100,000 in 1910 to 325.1 per 100,000 in 1923, a reduction of 37.7 per cent.

The decrease in drunkenness commitments is especially significant. There were 170,941 such commitments in 1910, but only 91,867 in 1923, the ratio in 1910 being 185.9 per 100,000, and in 1923, 83.1, a decrease of 55.2 per cent. Disorderly-conduct cases dropped 51.5 per cent, assault commitments 53.1 per cent, prostitution cases 28.8 per cent, and other offenses generally related to intemperance and drunkenness in equal degree.

The decrease in the number of commitments to jails and workhouses is more significant in relation to the liquor question than the decrease in the total number of commitments.

The total commitments would have been much lower if "violations of city ordinances," had not risen 67.3 per cent in the ratio per 100,000.

That drink-caused crime has greatly decreased since the eighteenth amendment closed the saloon, the most prolific source of crime and misery, is proven beyond refutation by these Government figures.

I have tables bearing out these statements, but they are rather lengthy and I shall not ask permission to place them in the Record, but will be glad to show them to anyone who may doubt the veracity of the above statements.

The wets claim, I believe, among other things, that the health of the country is worse now than it was before prohibition, but statistics reveal the opposite, as will be seen by the crude death rates issued by the Bureau of the Census for the following years:

1913-----	14.1	1918-----	18.1
1914-----	13.6	1919-----	12.9
1915-----	13.6	1920-----	13.1
1916-----	14.0	1921-----	11.6
1917-----	14.3	1922-----	11.8

I do not have the 1923 statistics officially. Reports from 35 cities, received each week during 1922 and 1923, show a death rate of 13 for 52 weeks of 1923, as compared with 12.5 for the same period in 1922. On the basis of the ratio between the death rate of these cities and the Nation in 1922, the death rate for 1923 may be estimated at 12.2 per 1,000 population. The average annual death rate from 1913 to 1917 was 13.92 per 1,000. Since the influenza epidemic made the 1915 rate abnormal, it may be ignored, although the greater mortality among users of alcohol definitely increased the toll of death. Had the average rate of the five wet years prevailed in the years of prohibition, 873,975 more deaths would have been recorded. Prohibition did not save all of these lives, but no other single factor affecting the entire people did so much to reduce mortality.

The decrease in the death rate from tuberculosis of all forms is significant. This was between 140 and 150 per 100,000 in the years before prohibition, the lowest figure recorded in the wet years being 14.2 in 1916. The following figures, as issued by the Bureau of the Census, show the continuous decrease since alcohol was outlawed as a beverage:

1919-----	125.9	1921-----	99.4
1920-----	114.2	1922-----	97.0

One might quote like decrease in the death rate in other diseases in which the use of alcohol depresses vitality and breaks protective barriers.

The decrease in deaths from alcoholism under prohibition appears in the following figures:

Alcoholism death rates per 100,000 policyholders in the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., industrial department:

1912-----	5.3	1918-----	1.8
1913-----	5.2	1919-----	1.4
1914-----	4.7	1920-----	.6
1915-----	4.1	1921-----	.9
1916-----	5.1	1922-----	2.1
1917-----	4.9

Alcoholism death rate, United States Census Bureau:

1912-----	5.3	1918-----	2.7
1913-----	5.9	1919-----	1.6
1914-----	4.9	1920-----	1.0
1915-----	4.4	1921-----	1.8
1916-----	5.8	1922-----	2.6
1917-----	5.2

The increase for 1922 is marked, due probably to the propaganda of opponents of prohibition, but is still far below the lowest recorded for the license era. This is the more significant, since the intoxicants obtainable are usually poisonous. If any considerable fraction of the former quantities of liquor was now being used, the dangerous beverages of the bootlegger would send the alcoholism death rates soaring. That these rates continue to fall is good evidence of the effectiveness of prohibition in greatly decreasing liquor consumption.

It has also been contended by the wets that the morality and spiritual life of the Nation is lower since the adoption of the eighteenth amendment, but to the contrary, statistics reveal that the opposite is altogether the case. I shall not place in the Record tables showing the great improvement on the morals of our country, as I believe it is too evident to be stressed.

Mr. Speaker, to my great surprise there are those who will contend that prohibition is unsound economically. After all, these great issues resolve themselves in to an economic status, and statistics show that since the advent of national prohibition, America has grown financially by leaps and bounds. America, in reality, was a dry Nation long before the adoption of the eighteenth amendment, because, I say it was dry from the time a majority of its area and a majority of its citizens lived in license free territory; and it is interesting to note this vast and enormous business, economic, and financial growth in the past 20 years has been phenomenal. America's manufactured products have increased from $15,000,000,000 to over $60,000,000,000, her food products have increased from less than $3,000,000,000 to over $10,000,000,000, her mineral products have increased from about one and one-third billion dollars to $6,000,000,000, her imports and exports amounted to $2,450, 000,000 and reports for 1924 showed increase to $8,200,000,000; the bank clearings were, $438,000,000 for 1924, or four times that of 20 years ago, and bank deposits have increased in like proportion and $43,000,000,000 were deposited in the banks of the United States in 1924.

Now, my friends, is there anything which speaks better for prohibition than this great financial steadiness and growth; why, America to-day is the world's banker. Financial experts like Herbert Hoover, Judge Gary, Henry Ford, Roger Babson, R. H. Scott, and others, attribute our prosperity in part to prohibition; you probably know how long drunken employees would be permitted to work for Henry Ford, America's greatest financial wizard. The foreign nations which are jealous of us and envy our prosperity under prohibition criticize us extremely for having adopted prohibition, but when they want money, they come to America after it. And we can not forget that during the great World War America was the only dry nation which had soldiers on the firing line, and their record is known too well by each of you for me to stress it here, and I would have you bear in mind also, that when the time for peace came, the peace terms were dictated by a dry nation's president, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America. It seems to me that this alone should be argument enough for prohibition and for its strict enforcement.

No nation is so prominent to-day in world affairs as is the United States. It leads in invention, education, diplomacy, jurisprudence, and finance, and this great lead and prosperity among the nations of the world is strengthened by its being the only dry nation.

Those who are trying so hard to modify the Volstead Act would have us to believe that more alcohol is consumed now than was consumed before the adoption of the eighteenth amendment, but for your information, I desire to read here a short statement by Hon. Wayne B. Wheeler, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of America:

The consumption of intoxicants has dropped to a small fraction of its former total. The records show that prior to prohibition we consumed 84,825,000 gallons of pure alcohol annually in 1,880,000,000 gallons of beer; 83,000,000 gallons of pure alcohol in 167,000,000 gallons of whiskey and distilled spirits; over 6,000,000 gallons of pure alcohol in 42,000,000 gallons of wine, a total of over 174,000,000 gallons of pure alcohol. This is more than twice the total production of denatured alcohol to-day.

Under prohibition 6,000,000 gallons of specially denatured alcohol was diverted to beverage use, and the best estimate is that less than 10,000,000 gallons of alcohol is made or consumed in smuggled liquor, moonshine, and home brew, exclusive of permitted beverages. This is less than 10 per cent of the former beverage consumption.

The newly issued census figures show a 55 per cent decrease in drunkenness commitments in 1923 compared with 1910. Later figures show this decrease continued through 1925.

America's sobriety is far ahead of European nations cited by the wets as evidence of the superiority of license. The ratio of drunkenness convictions in England and Wales was 200 per 100,000 population in 1923. The ratio of such convictions in the United States was 83.1 in the same year, 1923, according to the Census Bureau. London arrests three and a half times as many for intoxication per year as New York, and Paris twice as many, in spite of the greater severity of our police. One hundred and ninety-three thousand registered home distilleries in France contribute to the intoxication of that nation. With bread lines, unemployment doles, debt dodging, and hands outstretched for American loans, the wet nations of Europe may profit by America's example of new freedom from alcohol's rule.

Pauperism and the slums that clustered around their creator, the saloon, have gone with it. Our pauperism ratio to-day, according to the latest census estimate, is the lowest in our history.

A great deal has been said relative to the cost of enforcing prohibition, but, Mr. Speaker, I am always willing to vote to expend money when the investment is so good. Money spent to enforce prohibition is a wise investment. I voted for the appropriation to enforce prohibition, and would have voted for it had it carried twice the amount. The cost of prohibition enforcement through the Prohibition Bureau amounts to about $9,000,000 annually. The total appropriation of $9,250,000 covers the enforcement of the law against narcotics as well as intoxicating liquor. The returns to the Government through penalties, seized property, and so forth, is shown by the following report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922:

Court fines, exclusive of Alaska-----	$2,824,685.01
Taxes and penalties for illegal manufacture and sale of-----	239,964.14
Amounts paid in compromise-----	1,739,662.80
Total-----	4,804,271.95

Action has been taken on the forfeiture of bonds of $3,000,000. Over $130,000,000 of special assessed taxes have been placed on the tax list, a considerable portion of which will be collected.

As a matter of fact, it is costing the Government practically nothing to enforce prohibition. Bootleggers, rum runners, and illicit dealers are paying for their lawlessness through these fines and penalties. Even if $5,000,000 more were added, if the internal-revenue collectors and other Federal officers would use the power they have to impose penalties upon these illicit dealers, it would bring back in dollars to the Government twice as much as it costs. If the income-tax division and the revenue collectors would do their whole duty, the Government would collect $5 for every $1 it costs to enforce the law, even though the alleged added amount spent by the Justice Department were all counted in.

In Ohio the State prohibition commissioner, under the State law, made his report for 22 months, showing that with 1 commissioner and 22 assistants it cost the State $216,000 to enforce prohibition. There was returned to the State, county, and local treasuries $2,000,000 which bootleggers and rum runners paid for their experiment in lawlessness.

But even if there were no compensation and the Government did not get $1 back, it would furnish no good reason why the law should not be enforced. To spend $9,000,000 to enforce prohibition for 110,000,000 people means about 8 cents per head.

For an average family of five this is 40 cents.

Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand remarks by the Attorney General of the United States, recently made before the Women's National Committee for Law Enforcement, Hotel Washington, Washington, D. C. I shall not read it, as I have been given unanimous consent to include it in the RECORD in my remarks. It will follow my remarks in the RECORD.

Those who are asking for a modification of the Volstead Act, cry liberty and freedom, but when personal liberty and personal freedom is corruption, vice, financial greed, immorality at the distress, injustice, and expense to others, then it ceases to be liberty and freedom; particularly is this true when it would be so called liberty and freedom for the meager minority at the peril of the great majority. Why, they have brought witnesses from foreign countries to testify that we should modify our prohibition laws, and I for one do not need foreigners from Canada or from any other country to come to Washington to tell me what laws are needed for the American people.

My experience, Mr. Speaker, is that we have too many foreigners interfering with the administration of American laws, and all foreigners, whether they be rich or poor, humble or high, pluper, foreign minister, or diplomat, should be compelled to abide by our laws when they are within our bounds, and surely no foreign nation should expect their subjects, even though they be foreign ministers or diplomats, to openly and notoriously violate our laws when they are within our bounds.

Mr. Speaker, we need dry men to enforce dry laws; so long as the powers that be, which are given authority to enforce our prohibition laws are not in full sympathy with their enforcement, you may expect graft, greed, corruption, and unlawful acts in prohibition enforcement to continue. Only recently, I read in a paper where at Tampa, Fla., on April 17, $15,000 worth of imported liquor and alcohol had been stolen from the Government warehouse. Now, were the officers in charge performing their full duty? I say they were not. So long as wet men are placed in charge of enforcing a dry law, you may expect warehouses to leak. And I hope the time will soon come when prohibition officers will be instantly fired when they go before committees and say that the sale of beer or wine would strengthen prohibition. Men who believe the sale of light wine or beer would strengthen prohibition are wet to the core, and should never be permitted to occupy a dry berth.

I am proud to say, Mr. Speaker, that I came from a dry State. Florida is a dry State and is enforcing her prohibition laws. While I was on the bench before I came to Congress, I sentenced law violators to months in the jail for having in their possession less than one pint of intoxicating liquor. But, Mr. Speaker, we need the cooperation and full service of dry Federal prohibition enforcement agents.

I hold in my hand a clipping from a newspaper of my State; it is an article written by a small school boy, Elmer McMillan, a boy in his early teens, who resides in my home city. I shall not take the time to read it, but it concludes as follows:

Why should we degrade our country to satisfy the thirst of some degraded men who do not think of the American homes but of the money they will make in the liquor traffic. If this is all the respect we have for our country, I do not think we should have the right to be protected by the American flag and to call ourselves American citizens. For the main thought of every American citizen under Old Glory should be to raise the flag to higher places and not lower it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is a typical American boy, raised by a mother who is a total invalid, but a sweet Christian character, and in spite of her affliction has regularly gone with her family to church, and raised by an honest, plain father, who works daily for the support of his several children, and so long as steady American fathers raise patriotic sons like Elmer McMillan, America shall be a dry Nation.

REMARKS BY THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES AT LUNCHEON OF WOMEN'S NATIONAL COMMITTEE FOR LAW ENFORCEMENT, HOTEL WASHINGTON, WASHINGTON, D. C., APRIL 13, 1926

Madame the President and members of the Women's Committee on Law Enforcement, in approaching the subject before you at this social gathering of the representatives of your great body, I am somewhat at a loss how to begin.

To me, the matter of having the law observed, in a country under a Government like ours, seems a very simple thing. All that is necessary is that each member of each family in each community in each State shall go about his and her business each day with the purpose in mind to obey the rules made by society for its own guidance. But it happens that there are here and there among us persons who do not have such purpose; persons who, instead of trying to earn an honest living, by honest toil, undertake to get the means of living in what they think and hope will be an easier way.

We must remember that a living for all must be earned by all, and each member of society who does not by some useful action earn his keep, increases the burden of the rest who have to earn it for them.

With those who are a burden from being mere drones, shirks, we need not further concern ourselves here; with those who by active preying on their fellow members of the social body undertake to get a living, or more than a living—the means of luxury—we are here very much concerned.

With those who undertake to set aside the rules of life which we ourselves have made, and satisfy their cravings of lust, of appetite, of revenge, of malice by reprisals on individuals, on the community, we are very much concerned.

We make law governing the relations of individuals to each other and their property, and we provide courts in which individuals may seek redress for violations of their legal rights by other individuals.

We make law governing the relations of individuals to the community, and provide by law penalties for infraction of such law. The community as a body can not well impose such penalties, and so we provide courts to pass on the question of whether there has been an infraction of the law, and provide representatives of the community to prevent in such courts charges against persons accused of infractions of the law—prosecuting officers.

What is the duty of such a representative of the community toward its laws?

It seems to me that a prosecuting officer, while and so long as he holds his place as the representative of the law, ought not to take the position that the law as it is ought not to be the law.

The law is the will of the body politic, and we are in our places by the will of the body politic, put there to execute that will; and if we go about declaring in speech and in print that the law ought to be changed, so that acts which are offenses against the law will not be offenses, we thereby weaken our causes in the minds of the tribunals before whom we must try them.

I notice on the letterheads of this committee that the purpose of the organizations it represents is to encourage the enforcement of all the law, with especial emphasis on the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act, and I have been informed by some of your officers that you are particularly anxious for an expression of my views on that subject.

Let me say that what my views are is not, as I see it, of much greater importance than what your views are. I can keep the machinery of prosecution of violators of the law in motion, but you can make the results of such work effective, or to a considerable extent impair its effectiveness.

At the risk of being accused of having a single-track mind, I wish to repeat here in substance a few observations I have before publicly made on this subject.

In this country, under our system of government, the will of the people expressed by their vote becomes and is the rule of conduct which all citizens are bound to observe and which all citizens or aliens must be compelled to observe. That rule of conduct creates the duty of every inhabitant of the jurisdiction doing the voting.

The eighteenth amendment is the law of the land.

The Volstead Act is the law of the land.

Both by constitutional command of the whole people and by legislative enactment of their representatives in Congress it has been decreed that traffic in intoxicating liquor shall cease.

There is no room for discussion as to what the voters of the country have said.

There is no halfway place in the command they have laid upon their servants chosen and appointed to administer the law.

But notwithstanding that the law is as it is, notwithstanding the will of the people is that this traffic, and, of course, the drinking of alcohol, shall cease, a considerable number of persons insist they will not obey the law and persist in the traffic to supply drink for themselves and others who are willing to reward them for the chances they take.

Those who engage in the business, those who furnish the business by buying its wares, and some who do not wish to either sell or buy liquor, undertake to excuse the violators by saying over and over that this law is an infringement of personal liberty.

They declare that since the prohibition law went into effect it has never been practically in effect.

That it has been a disastrous, tragic failure.

That the Federal Government is powerless to enforce it, because, they say, "The instinct of personal liberty is very strong." "Man can not be made over by law," and "thousands of the best citizens of the country have been brought into contact with the bootlegger, and have no compunction whatever about violating the law."

Let us examine these propositions briefly.

Though some of those who make these claims and arguments may not, do not, have in mind a purpose to make the thing prohibited easier to procure and less dangerous to make and sell by those who would provide it, nevertheless such is the effect upon the execution of the law.

Personal liberty to do what? Anything except to facilitate the making, sale, and use of intoxicants? Why? Any reason, except that the use of them may not be interfered with?

What other result can follow the constant declaration that the law is not binding on the consciences of those who do not favor its provisions, because they say it interferes with personal liberty and the instinct of personal liberty is very strong. What other result can follow than that juries will hesitate to convict on charges of violation of the law?

What other result can follow than that those contemplating engaging in the traffic will be encouraged by the thought that probably, even if detected and arrested, conviction will not follow?

No compunction about violating the law? Violating it how? What for? Anything except to provide intoxicants for somebody to drink?

No.

Such contentions, when made by those who do not want liquor for themselves, who would not intentionally put obstacles in the way of enforcement of the law, must be made without realization of the effect of their position.

That effect can be and is only to weaken public sentiment in favor of any law enforcement and to encourage violation of all law.

It is only a step—and an easy one—for the man of loose moral fiber who hears and reads that men of education, of standing and influence, aver and urge that he is not in conscience bound to give allegiance to one provision of the Constitution, is not in conscience bound to observe one statute because it interferes with his liberty to do as he pleases in that matter, to come to the conclusion that he is not in conscience bound to observe another law, and then another, which interferes with the liberty he would have to do some other act but for the law; and when he is told that many of the best citizens violate a part of the law without compunction, what conclusion can he reach but that he may violate any part of it without compunction?

The difference between civilization and barbarism is in the presence or absence of law.

The very idea of law in a community carries with it the surrender of individual freedom of action for the good of the whole body.

In a state of barbarism one may walk or drive where he please, unless the "personal liberty" of another stronger than he interferes.

In Washington one must drive on the right-hand side of the street. Why? Because the community has decided that the welfare of the whole, of which he is a part, demands that he be deprived of liberty to drive where he please and compelled to go on the right-hand side.

Does anyone contend that "man can not be made over by law" in this matter?

Does anyone contend that because "the instinct of personal liberty is very strong" he has a right to endanger the safety of everyone in the street, including himself, by asserting his personal liberty and driving on the left-hand side?

What is the difference between insuring the safety of travel by depriving men of their personal liberty through compelling them to drive on the right side and compelling them to be sober when driving through depriving them of the means of getting drunk?

The real source of the embarrassment to the enforcement of the law is, not that the law interferes with personal liberty—any law which has any effect upon the conduct of the individuals composing society does that—must do that—but that so many well-intentioned persons, thoughtlessly, or following some process of unsound reasoning, join hands with those who intentionally violate the law and give them aid and comfort in attempting to justify their unlawful conduct.

There is no right of personal liberty to perpetuate an institution which the law condemns.

In this country that the liquor traffic shall be exterminated is established by solemn resolution of the electorate.

That it ought not to exist is admitted by those making the arguments and claims I have been discussing when they say either by way of preface or conclusion to every discussion, "We do not desire to bring back intoxicating liquor"; "There is no intention ever to bring back the saloon." Those who say this honestly surely can not have thought out the result to which their arguments lead.

The rest "do protest too much."

Again, if it be true that "the prohibitory law has never been practically in effect," that "it has been a disastrous, tragic failure," that "the Government is powerless to enforce it," in what way does it interfere with the personal liberty of those who would drink intoxicants?

The answer is, as everybody knows, that by reason of the existence of national prohibition, by reason of its practical effect, by reason of the exertion of the power of the Federal Government, the traffic in liquor is becoming day by day more and more difficult and dangerous to carry on.

As the application of the Federal power grows more strict, and the manufacture within the country and importation from without become more restricted, as the business becomes more difficult and dangerous, the price of the goods dealt in rises, and right there is where the shoe pinches; right there is the evidence which can not be controverted, that the Federal Government is not "powerless to enforce" the law.

I maintain that to show the law, any law, is violated is not to show that it is not being enforced, or that it can not be enforced.

If that argument were sound, then, because crimes of murder, rape, robbery, smuggling, stealing, embezzlement, continue to be committed, we must say the penalties against them can not be imposed.

No one likes that.

As the amount of liquor available for consumption decreases and the price of liquor rises and the profit per quart or per gallon increases, new and keener wits and ingenuity are attracted to the business; new and complicated and skillful schemes are devised for evading the law and constantly increasing watchfulness, activity, and study required for their detection; many of them go on for a time without detection. But ways of meeting and overcoming them are found and can be found for all of them.

Recently some one made an argument that the great increase of cases in court for violation of the prohibitory law is an indication that the law is not being and can not be enforced.
